El Salvador: Living fear

By TOM FENTON
Associated Press

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — The latest attack on the U.S. Embassy, a rocket grenade and bullet salvo, has reminded the 65 uneasy Americans who work in the fortress-like compound of their vulnerability in this war-torn nation.

"They were really trying to kill us," embassy spokeswoman Carol Doerflein said of the dozen men who poured rifle fire at the building and blasted a hole in the third floor with an antitank rocket on Wednesday. There were no injuries.

"It was one of the few places they could hit the building and not hurt anyone," Miss Doerflein, of Toms River, N.J., said in an interview in her basement office.

"The mood is tense...We are afraid. There's no way we cannot be afraid," she added.

The four-story embassy has been sprayed by gunfire four times in the last three weeks but Wednesday's assault, staged with clockwork precision, was potentially more deadly than any previous attempt.

The attacks on the embassy are believed to have been carried out by extremists on the political left and the right.

El Salvador's leftists are trying to replace the U.S.-backed civilian-military junta with a Marxist government, while rightists oppose the junta, claiming it has shifted too far to the left.

Four men in a pick-up truck sprayed the embassy with gunfire earlier this month in an operation that one embassy offi cial said had the trademarks of a right-wing attack. He de clined to elaborate or to be identified.

Leftists are believed responsible for Wednesday's raid. New security measures are in the works because of the attack.

Salvadoran police now question anyone loitering near the embassy, while upstairs offices are being reshuffled.

The location of the working quarters of Charge d'Affaires Frederic Chapin, the acting chief of mission, will be known only to a few trusted outsiders.

Visitors to the padlocked front gate on Avenue 25 North are confronted by a pistol-packing Salvadoran security guard, who admits them only after questioning.

Police kill terrorist

VITORIA, Spain — Police killed a suspected Basque terrorist yesterday and seriously wounded another in a shootout near Vitoria Cathedral, authorities said.

They identified him as Jose Manuel Aristimuno Mendizabal, an alleged member of the Basque separatist organization ETA, and said he was armed with two pistols and several hand grenades. The authorities did not disclose the name of the wounded suspect, but said four people were detained for questioning.

ETA stands for "Basque Land and Liberty." A splinter group of the Basque Nationalist Party that fought against dictator Francisco Franco in the 1936-39 Civil War, it wants independence for the three Basque provinces in northern Spain.

Authorities have blamed ETA for 95 political killings in Spain last year and eight this year.

PARSONS SCHOOL OF DESIGN

In collaboration with the American College in Paris, Parsons School of Design offers art students from colleges and art schools throughout the United States an opportunity to live and study in Paris during their sophomore year. Programs are offered in:

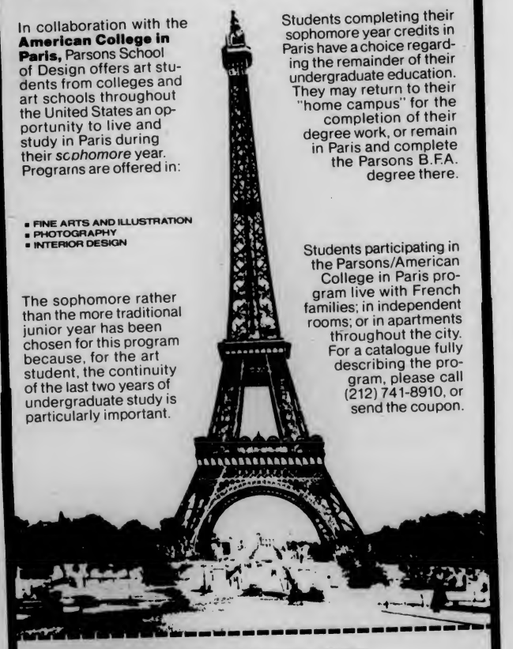
- FINE ARTS AND ILLUSTRATION
- PHOTOGRAPHY
- INTERIOR DESIGN

The sophomore rather than the more traditional junior year has been chosen for this program because, for the art student, the continuity of the last two years of undergraduate study is particularly important.



Students completing their sophomore year credits in Paris have a choice regarding the remainder of their undergraduate education. They may return to their "home campus" for the completion of their degree work, or remain in Paris and complete the Parsons B.F.A. degree there.

Students participating in the Parsons/American College in Paris program live with French families; in independent rooms; or in apartments throughout the city. For a catalogue fully describing the program, please call (212) 741-8910, or send the coupon.

Space shuttle clears final tests

Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — The space shuttle came through two final fueling tests in excellent shape, clearing the way for an April 10 liftoff for the Columbia's much-delayed maiden voyage, Shuttle Launch Director George Page said yesterday.

A 73-hour launch countdown could begin next Sunday at 11:30 p.m. EST, Page said. An official launch date for the reusable spacecraft's first mission must await tomorrows flight readiness review at the Kennedy Space Center by program directors of the $8 billion program.

"We feel the 10th is a viable launch date," Page told a press briefing after a "hands-on" inspection of the two critical fuelings of the 15-story external tank, which feeds the orbiter's three main engines.

The Columbia is to return to Earth on airplane-type wings for a landing at Edwards Air Force Base in California after its first 54-hour orbital flight. The flight is more than two years behind schedule.

"Basically, both tests were successful," Page said. "We have absolutely no debonding problem."

Fuel loading tests last week, which involved the loading of 526,000 gallons of super-cold liquid oxygen and hydrogen, were designed to test cork insulation on the surface of the aluminum tank.

About 32 insulation tiles came unglued in a similar test in January. The tiles are intended to protect the shuttle from the searing heat of re-entry into the atmosphere. The delicate job of installing the tiles was a major reason for the delayed liftoff.

Page said technicians and engineers who checked the silo like tank found "a few foam cracks" that can readily be fixed. A sprayed-on foam covers the cork tiles.

He said the launch preparation schedule now being followed actually leads to a launch date of April 9. But he said later he felt that date would be "too optimistic." And he said he wants to give the launch team a day off before liftoff.

Page said cracks in the foam and other minor problems would be corrected this week, as pre-launch servicing of power units continues.

the dorms" and contact alumni in an attempt to enlist support. He also said he plans to put in a cement floor at Curry Hicks Cage, install new bleachers and a court, and re-paint the facility.

"I'm convinced I can turn things around. This is why I came back, because of the challenge. UMass can be a winner again. I know we can win," McLaughlin said. "Ray Wilson is a fine person and he was a tremendous assistant coach. He had his shot to turn the program around and failed. Now it's my turn."

McLaughlin also said he welcomed the opportunity to return to UMass with his wife, Debbie, a 1974 UMass graduate from Lowell, and his two year old son, Corry.

"UMass is my school and I love it. Amherst is a fine place to raise a family. The job offered a challenge. Debbie and I could be nearer our families. I'm tired of airports and travelling all over the country," he said.

US acid rain upsets Canada

MEDFORD, Mass. — Citing the pollution of rivers and lakes and the killing of wildlife, Canada's minister for the environment said yesterday the United States must stop pouring acid rain on his country.

"We Canadians are now impatient about the acid rain issue," John Roberts told an enviromental conference. "The United States should move...quickly to prevent emissions of sulfur dioxide and oxides of nitrogen which produce acid rain in my country."

Roberts said acid rain is polluting Canadian lakes and rivers, affecting trees and killing or harming fish, waterfowl and other wildlife.

"About eight million tons of sulfur dioxide and close to four million tons of oxides of nitrogen are falling on Canada every year," he said. "At least half of that load is sent to us by the United States.

"We cannot address this problem without massive cooperation by the United States."

Fifth place finish

UMass batters 5-6 at Sun-Lite Classic

By JANE WOLFSON AND KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

SAN DIEGO—It was the epitome of a happy ending.

A soft breeze was coming in off the Pacific Ocean at Point Loma Saturday afternoon when manager Larry Jacobs summed up the University of Massachusetts baseball team's spring trip.

"This, " Jacobs said, referring to a UMass ninth inning comeback, "beats going to San Diego Zoo anytime."

That 5-4 comeback victory over Point Loma College gave the Minutemen a playofff shot which they capitalized on, taking another game from Point Loma, 7-6 to place fifth in the Sun-Lite Classic tournament at San Diego State University last week.

With those two wins, UMass ended one of their better spring trips in recent memory, leaving the sun of California for the chill of New England baseball with a 5-6 record after a 4-5 showing in the tourney.

UMass played 11 games in nine days getting some pleasant surprises from a previously inexperienced pitching staff to go along with a team batting average of .283, .324 over the last three games. UMass also showed some power, hitting 11 home runs during the trip.

Catcher-leftfielder Jim Aulenback led the offense with a .424 batting average, .390 in the Sun-Lite Classic and was the lone UMass player named to the all-tournament team.

Host team San Diego State ran away with the tournament with a perfect 9-0 record, beating Lewis-Clark State College 11-3 in the championship game.

Among the many highlights of the trip, nothing stood out more than the two-game sweep of Point Loma on Saturday. In the first game, John Kraham's two-run homer in the bottom of the second stood up until the sixth when Point Loma tied the score. UMass ace Chuck Thompson, whose slider had gotten him out of jams throughout the game, stranding eight runners, gave up a ninth inning two-run homer to Point Loma's Ed Patterson, giving the Crusaders a 4-2 lead going into the bottom of the ninth.

IN THE PACIFIC

But with Point Loma's Fenway Park-like field situated on a cliff over the Pacific, with a power alley in right-center of just 317 feet, the game was not over. Kraham led off the ninth with his second home run of the games, third of the year, a line drive over that short porch in right-center. First baseman Warren McReddie stepped up and calmly completed the back-to-back later show with a blast that would have gone out of any ballpark. McReddie's shot into the Pacific tied the game, and shook Point Loma pitcher Tim Meinert noticeably.

After Meinert gave up a sharp single to the designated hitter Tim Foster, a perfect sacrifice bunt by Barry Bennett moved pinch runner Joe Larekin into scoring position. Larkin moved to third on an infield out then came in with the winning run on shortstop Vin Bonanno's two-out single to right.

For Thompson, who had been hit hard in his first start against sixth ranked SDSU, it was his second complete game win during the trip, as the right hander improved his record to 2-1. Thompson was 2-0 in the tournament.

In the playoff game, UMass jumped on Point Loma's starter and loser Gary Page for five runs in the first four innings, as McReddie doubled in two and Kraham, Bonanno and Dean Bennet, who went 4-5, drove in single runs.

A TIE GAME

UMass starter Eric Beck had control problems, walking seven batters over the 7.2 innings he pitched, but for the first 5.1 of those innings Beck threw no-hit ball. Old friend Ed Patterson broke up the no hitter with a single in the sixth, and by the following inning a seemingly safe 6-1 UMass lead was squandered, as the Crusaders came up with five runs to tie the game. Sophomore right-hander Dan Cook relieved Beck midway through that seventh inning and set Point Loma down in order in the eighth.

Freshman outfielder Keith Lovellette, who hit .351 on the trip, led off the UMass eighth with his third hit of the game, a double down the left field lane. After Lovellette had moved over to third on Foster's second sacrifice of the game, Barry Bennett delivered his second game-winning hit of the trip, a single that gave UMass a 7-6 lead that Cook turned into a 7-6 win when he stranded the tying run at first.

The two game sweep of Point Loma ended what head coach Dick Bergquist calls the best spring trip for UMass in the 20 years the team has had one.

"The team did just what I expected of them," Bergquist said "and the tournament was very well run. With a couple of breaks, we could have easily won two or three more."

AS FOR A RECAP OF THE TRIP

Playing outdoors for the first time this season, the team received a less than friendly welcome from SDSU when the two teams met for an unscheduled game two days prior to the tourney.

Pitchers Thompson and Tony Presnal were racked for 21 hits and teammates were tagged for seven errors as the Aztecs ran all over the Minutemen's debut 18-1.

UMass had originally been scheduled to play two games at the University of California at San Diego but rain from the night before had rendered their field nonplayable and SDSU head coach Jim Dietz volunteered the game.

The UCal second game was played the following day and behind the eight-hit performance of starter Steve Cramer, UMass downed UCal 8-4. Lovellette went two for three with two stolen bases and catcher Aulenback hit the first home run of the 1981 season for the Minutemen.

UMass met up with SDSU again in their first game of the Classic. The Aztecs jumped out to a 4-0 lead in the first inning as starter Steve Drelick surrendered two hits and five walks. Drelick had his control problems all afternoon while setting a tournament record of 12 walks.

Facing a team that had previously managed only one win in 22 contests during their last three tourneys, UMass managed seven hits but stranded eight base runners and 16 errors led to a 5-1 loss to the Oregon College of Education.

Starter Presnal was tagged for three unearned runs and reliever Vin Todd was hit for two more unearned. UMass' only offensive spark came in the top of the ninth when Barry Bennett drove in pinch-runner Larkin.

WIN NUMBER ONE

With speed up rules that require pinch runners for catchers that reach base, Larkin ran for the UMass receivers throughout the tournament, scoring 10 runs in the Classic (11 overall).

Eight strikeouts for Thompson and a career first grand slam for Bonanno highlighted UMass as they downed United States International University 10-3.

Thompson went all the way, evening his record 1-1. Doubles by Aulenback, Foster and outfielder Mark Litano, who tied the tournament doubles record with six, helped the Minutemen win their first game of the Classic.

Nine runs off starter Cook in the third inning were just too much for UMass as California State University at Dominguez Hills topped the Minutemen 10-9. Dominguez Hills was offensively helped by two balls that UMass lost in the sun.

Beck pitched well for the Minutemen going 4.2 innings in relief, striking out five and giving up one run.

University of Washington's Chuck Westgard overpowered UMass, striking out seven, en route to a 10-0 victory. Losing pitcher Cramer and Lovellette, making his first pitching appearance gave up 14 hits while UMass could only sprinkle five hits over six innings of play.

The game was called with two outs in the bottom of the sixth when Washington scored its tenth run giving the automatic win, according to tournament speed-up rules.

THREE OUT OF THE PARK

Three solo home runs by DH Kelly McDonald, McReddie and Foster and three hits with three RBI's for Aulenback helped put UMass past Portland State 11-3. Todd pitched the complete game while giving up eight hits. Right fielder Lovellette added two RBI's with two basehits.

In a game that saw six balls sail out of Charlie Smith Field, UMass stayed close to Lewis-Clark State College for

Minutewomen win first indoor tourney

By Jim Floyd
Collegian Correspondent

The UMass indoor hockey team, powered by tournament high-scorer Judy Strong's 24 goals, captured first place in the first annual Indoor Field Hockey National Tournament held at Boyden Gymnasium on Saturday, March 21.

UMass A team faced a disciplined Ontario Under 23 team, a national team, in the championship game and won in overtime in a stroke off with goals from Strong and Sue Caples and fine goaltending by freshman Patty Shea.

"I'm glad we could win our own tournament and show everyone what UMass hockey is all about," Caples said.

"The team showed a lot of poise and a lot of class," coach Pam Hixon said.

The tournament consisted of 11 teams broken up into 2 pools for round-robin play. This was followed by playoffs which were based on the results of this play.

Both Hixon and Diane Moyer, the junior varsity coach who served as tournament director, were pleased with the play of the UMass teams.

"It was between Springfield, Ontario, UConn and UMass. I thought in the back of my mind that UMass was the best team," Moyer said.

"The field was really top notch," Hixon said, "we just played for enjoyment first, and then to win."

"Judy Strong is one of the best college players in the country," Moyer said.

The overall play of the A team included a stint where Ontario was stopped on four consecutive corner shots.

"It's a good feeling when that last shot hits your hand," Shea said, shortly after making the final save of the game to insure UMass the victory over Ontario.

The UMass B team failed to make the playoffs but Hixon said she was pleased with their play.

"I thought they played very well. They didn't have the experience on this surface but they got better as the day went on," Hixon said.

Besides Strong, Caples, and Shea, the UMass A team consisted of Patti Bossio, Tish Stevens, Ro Tudryn and Terry DiGiacomo.

The members of the UMass B team were Sue Packard, Susie McCrea, Caroline Kavanaugh, M.T. Thomas, Theresa Collins, Nancy Goode and Carol Proguiske.

Gymwomen fifth at Easterns

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's gymnastics team closed out the season this past weekend with a fifth place finish in the Eastern championships at the University of Pittsburgh. Penn State won the first place title with a score of 145.75.

The Minutewomen came close to snatching the fourth spot, but according to coach Virginia Evans, 2 poor performances on the beam was just enough to keep them behind fourth place finisher West Virginia (135.10 points to UMass' 134.95).

"I was happy with the fifth place finish," Evans said, "But I thought we were going to bump West Virginia. The beam was where they beat us out, we had alot of problems, 7.95 was our highest score on the beam," she said.

"It was the best meet of the year on the vault and the floor exercise," she said. Freshman Robin Low won spots in the finals in both events. Low scored a 9.15 on the preliminary vault, one of the top ten scores. A back spasm prevented her from competing in the vault finals.

Senior Karen Clemente scored a 9.05, a career best for the co-captain who saw the last college competition in the tourney. An 8.80 was this year's best score on the vault for sophomore Chris Wilson. The trio helped UMass as a team score a 35.60 on the vault.

The Minutewomen also tallied their highest mark of the year in the floor exercise with a 34.35. A 9.1 put Low into the finals tied for third with Penn State's Heidi Anderson (eventual winner in the floor exercise). According to Evans, Low hurt both knees when she opened too early on a double back and had to be taken off the floor in the finals.

Junior Chris Paul was the third and final UMass competitor in the finals. An 8.75 uneven bar routine was good enough for an eighth place finish.

"We also got good, solid bar performances from Kathy Mathews (8.5), Robin Low and Heidi Milender (each scored 8.35)," Evans said. The Eastern competition was only Mathews' second time out after a badly sprained ankle that had kept her out for all of February.

"It wasn't our best season as far as finishing in the Easterns," Evans said, "Last year we finished third."

The Minutewomen finished the regular season with a 9-2 record.

MARTIN LUTHER KING WEEK

On April 4, 1968, on a motel balcony in Mephis Tennessee, the Reverend Martin Luther King Jr. was shot dead by an assasssin's bullet at age 39.

In the 13 years that had transpired between the Montogomery Alabama bus boycott of 1955, which catapulted Dr. King into national prominence, and his death in 1968, M.L. King had come to personify the hopes and dreams of Black people throughout America. His struggle against the Jim Crow system in the South, and segregation in the North-even when his tactics failed, as they often did, to win local concessions--brought international recognition to M.L. King and other Black civil rights leaders, in their effort to "assert humanity within the context of racial hatred and violence" in the United States.

In 1957, King helped to organize the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, a religious base from which he was to lead his many assaults against the segregationist policies so rampant in both the North and the South. King believed, as did many Black leaders, in the use of non-violent direct action as a means against those state, local, and civil institutions that refused to confront or even acknowledge the existence of segregationist and discriminatory practices.

King knew, as did so many other civil rights activists, "through painful experience that freedom is never voluntarily given by the oppressor. It must be demanded by the oppressed."

A further milestone in King's career was his break with the Johnson Administration over the issue of the war in Vietnam. In a blistering condemnation of Johnson's war policy, delivered at Riverside church in New York, King moved from the realm of civil rights in America to human rights the world over. His involvement in the anti-war movement--which came after years of personal and organizational debate--marked the culmination of King's political development. For with it came a change in his views on the reshaping of society. "For years I labored with the idea of reforming the existing institutions of the society, a little change here, a little change there. Now I feel quite differently. I think you've got to have a reconstruction of the entire society, a revolution of values."

A year to the day after his address at Riverside Church, Martin Luther King was dead. His death sparked rebellions of outrate in Black communities all over the U.S. while the world mourned this man who was a symbol of so much to so many. Each year since his assassination a Bill has been introduced to Congress that would make M.L. King's birthday a national holiday, and each year that Bill has been defeated. To date only 15 states have officially recognized King's birthday as a holiday, and yet there are few in the 20th century who have made as much of an impact on so many people as did King.

The government's failure to recongize the contributions of M.L. King to our society, by helping to preserve hismemory, is testimony to how far Black people have still to go before they can achieve full social, political, and economic freedom.

In lieu of an official holiday to commerate Dr. King, March 31 to April 4 has been designated Martin Luther King Week. During this week student and community groups --including this campus -- organize a variety of films, speakers, and cultural programs that serve to both honor the memory of M.L. King, as well as to raise the issues of those obstacles that Black people still face today in America.

Martin Luther King was not a slave owner, but a decendant of slaves;--not a soldier, but a prophet of peace. He dedicated and gave his life in the struggle for human rights and dignity. Not solely for Black people but against the laws and customs that preserve a system of oppression which threatens us all when it denies the rights of some.

Despite his "conservative militancy" King believed in standing up to injustice and discrimination, in fighting oppression, and in insuring the rights of all. King was made of the stuff from which heroes and legends are born. In keeping with his contributions it is only fitting, even crucial, that we insure there is a day in his celebration: January 15, make Martin Luther King's birthday a national holiday.

BLACK TEENAGER LYNCHED

§Last weekend, a black teenager was found hanging from a tree on a residential street in Mobile, Alabama. Police said that 19 year old Michael Donald had been severly beaten, cut, strangled to death, then was hung from a tree. Michael Donald had disappeared friday night after leaving his aunt's home in a black housing project to buy a pack of cigarettes. His body was found the following morning hanging in a tree on a racially-mixed residential street.

§Civil rights leaders have charged that Donald was "lynched" by racial bigots. While in custody and facing murder charges in connection with the incident are three young white men, none of whom have been able to post the 250 thousand dollar bond. They will be arraigned on Tuesday. One NAACP official has said that blacks are watching the case with 'cautious optimism' now that suspects are in jail. Police say they don't have evidence that the slaying was racially motivated but they haven't offered another theory about the motive.

WHITE TEENAGER LYNCHED

Last weekend, a white teenager was found hanging from a tree on a residential street in Mobile Alabama. Police said that 19 year old Mike MacDonald had been severly beaten, cut, strangled to death, then was hung from a tree. Mike MacDonald had disappeared friday night after leaving his aunt's home in a white housing project to buy a pack of cigarettes. his body was found the following morning hanging in a tree on a racially mixed residential street.

§Governmental leaders have charged that MacDonald was 'lynched' by racial bigots. While in custody and facing murder charges in connection with the incident are three young black men, none of whom have been able to post the 250 thousand dollar bond. They will be arraigned on Tuesday. One State official has said that whites are watching the case with 'cautious optimism' now that suspects are in jail. Police say they don't have evidence that the slaying was racially motivated but they haven't offered another theory about the motive.

Tragic Duality

The first of these two tragic stories is true, while the second is purely ficticious. In the second the word white was substituted for the word black, Governmental Officials was substituted for Civil Rights Leaders and State Officials was substituted for NAACP Officials.

First, considering the racial history of America it is doubtful that a white man would be lynched in Mobile Alabama.

Second, considering the racist character of the U.S. legal system, if three black men were arrested for the murder/lynching of a white man such as that described in the second story the release bond would probably be ten times higher than that of the first, true, article.

Third, considering the racial nature of America, State officials, would not be using the words 'cautious optimism' in regards to the ficticious black defendents. Chances are that they would be on their way to the nearest tree or to the electric chair.

Fourthly, police would have no questions as to whether the slaying of a white man by black men was racially motivated.

Lastly, the readers of both stories should ask themselves if a white man was truly slain under these circumstances would whites be 'cautiously optimistic' or would Ronald Wilson Reagan personally bring the rope•

Ku Klux Klan Confrontation

by Ed Cohen NUMMO STAFF

The Klu Klux Klan demonstrated in Meriden, Connecticut on Saturday, March 21 to support two white police officers who shot two black shoplifting suspects, killing one. The mood was tense as Meriden police tried to protect the robed Klansmen from possible violence from demostrators and other citizens who were oppessed to the Klan, their race hate provocations and racist vigilence. While the Klan members were sheltered inside the Meriden City Hall for over an hour, a county demonstration was held in front of the City Hall by protesters seeking justice and an end to racist violence which the Klan represent.

After attempting to leave City Hall through the rear with the protection of Meriden city police, outraged citizens protesting the Klan presense began throwing rocks , sticks and bottles at them. Their hasty exit became a route as Klan and police began running to avoid the barriage. Klan members were escorted away in police cars and ambulances by the police. According to press reports, eight Klansmen and 19 police officers were bloodied. After the Klan left, police beat and arrested several protesters.

As a result of the violence, the leading racist terrorist Ku Klux Klan "Imperial Wizard", Bill Wilkinson is calling for help from the federal Justice Department, claiming his "civil rights have been violated". The State Police Troopers Union voted 224 to 1 to call for Connecticut Public Safety Commissioner's Donald Long's resignation. Long refused the Meriden police department's requests for state police aid.

Vote

Although the voting rights act, which gave blacks protection from intimidation and fear at the voting booth will not expire until August 1982, the fight over its renewal has already begun. Throughout the spring and summer debate is expected to rage throughout the nation and on capitol hill, surrounding the issue; and a vote by the house could occur as early as September, predicts Rep. Don Edwards, chairperson of the House subcommittee. It is important that floor action begins that early in order to ensure that some final decision on the bill occurs before the present act expires. The new conservative majority is already gearing up for the fight in the senate. The judiciary committee with oversight of the bill is now headed by Sen. Strom Thurmond, a veteran opponet of civil rights legislation.

Springfield

The President of the Springfield Urban League says housing discrimination and economic problems have kept Hampden County blacks from moving out of cities and into the suburbs.

Citing 1980 Census figures, Henry Thomas said 97 percent of the county's blacks live in Hampden County's four cities--Springfield, Holyoke, Chicopee and Westfield. Most of the County's nearly 28,000 blacks live in Springfield.

Thomas says suburban housing is not readily available to blacks in many Hampden County Towns and that communities like South Hadley have shown a reluctance to provide low-income housing.

Miami:
Murder charges dropped
By Ray Greenwood
Special to the Guardian

Second-degree murder charges have been dropped against two Blacks on trail for killing a white motorist during the rebellion in the Black community here last May.

The case against Sam Williams, age 32, fell apart rapidly when the state's chief witness against him stared at a line-up of six B lacks for three to five minutes as she was asked four times if she recognized anyone who was in the 40- 50'- member crowd last May 17. Four times, Mary kinsey, who is legally blind, answered "no."

The charge against Lonnie Bradely, age 22, was dismissed after Dade County Circuit Court Judge Mario Goderich ruled that Bradley was improperly and illegally questioned after his arrest last June, and that statements he had made to police could not be used as evidence against him.

The early dismissal of the charges has been seen as a confirmation of the criticisms that the state attorney's office had built the cases on flimsy evidence in an attempt to foster a white racist backlash to the rebellion.

Bradley and Williams were charged with killing Jeffrey Kulp, age 20, who was dragged from his car and beated to death in the early hours of the rebellion following the acquittal of the white cops involved in the murder of B lack businessman Arthur McDuffie.

The trial is the third of four stemming from the deaths of whites during the May uprising. Nathaniel Lane will go to trial April 13, charged with first-degree murder in the killing of the three white males.

To date no whites have been charged in the deaths of any of at least eight Blacks killed by police, National Guard or white vigilantes during the May 17-19 rebellion.

ANGOLA WAR

[AN]"The 'Angola war' is far from over," wrote former Rand Daily Mail military correspondent Bob Hitchcock in a letter to The Guardina of London in January. "Some [South African soldiers] are spending more of their national service time in Angola than in South Africa."

Hitchcock, whose Defense Force press credentials were revoked during the Angola war of 1975-1976 for his reporting on an involvement the South African government preferred to conceal, was commenting on the current fighting in the border area between Angola and South African-controlled Namibia, a war barely visible to the rest of the world. Much like the "secret war" in Laos and Cambodia during the 1960s, only the occasional news of a 'hot pursuit' raid attracts notice beyond the front-lines, as in last week's announcement of a "cross-border" raid on Namibian guerrilla bases in southern Angola.

The communique was not unlike many before it. South African officials claimed to have killed "a large number" of the guerrillas, members of the Namibian independence movement SWAPO, at a base near Lubango, Angola, following a swift airborne assault. News of the attack came on the same day as two South African soldiers were shot after a group of 50 men crossed the white-ruled state's border with Mozambique, another nation suspected by South Africa of aiding its political foes.

Tensions run deep throughout southern Africa, but they are nowhere more intense than on the Namibia/Angola frontier. Major revelations in a recent series of articles in London's The Guardian newspaper underscore the brutality of the conflict for the population there. Jonathan Steele visited southern Angola and described the devastation resulting from South African attacks, and Nick Davies interviewed deserter Trevor Edwards, from a South African mercenary batallion he said regularly carried out search and destroy missions against Angolan civilians. Later, another deserter from the same batallion testified before an international commission of enquiry into the crimes of apartheid headed by Amnesty International founder Sean MacBride. AFRICA NEWS correspondent Malik Stan Reaves covered that session, held in the Angolan capital, Luanda.

Within days of the original Guardian article, the South African Defense Force organized a tour for journalists to vist 'ethnic bvatallions' in the operational zone, in an effort to refute the negative publicity. Ironically, though the original Guardian articles got scant attention in the United States press, several stories on the 'Bushman Batallion' the reporters visited did run in this country. Contributing editor Julie Frederikse went along on the tour and heard about South Africa's counter-insurgency strategy.

Our *AFRICA NEWS*Special this week puts together some excerpts from the Guardian material with reports from Reaves and Frederikse.

GREEN BERETS SENT TO EL SALVADOR

By Robert Dobrow

March 18--The Pentagon and the president are rushing ahead with interventionist plans for El Salvador.

Last week, Reagan and Haig tried to muzzle the media for "over-playing El Salvador." But the truth is that behind the scenes they are sending more weapons and U.S. military personnel, mobilizing their closest allies, and craking up the war machine for what many tens of millions of people fear will be a rerun of the Viet Nam debacle.

The most odious symbols of that war-- Green Berets, "body counts," military advisers-- are being resurrected in a small Central American country about the size of Massachusetts whose impoverished people are trying to rid themselves of a brutal, U.S.-backed military dictatorship.

Costa Rica attack

Yesterday, three U.S. Marines were injuried by a guerrilla attack in Costa Rica. What the Marines were doing in that country in the first place remains unexplained by the State Department. Are they there in preparation for events in El Salvador? Will they be the ones called in to "protect" U.S. personnel there?

Yesterday, Reagan met with Argentina's new president Gen. Roberto Viola. The visit was admitted by administration officials to be part of "a general effort to improve relations with right-wing military governments in South America" according to the New York Times (March 18).

Again, the possible connection with El Salvador was not explained. But the visit comes after a recent trip by Vernon Walters, retired general and former deputy director of the CIA, to Argentina, Chile, and Brazil, to supposedly seek "support for U.S. military aid to El Salvador." Walters no doubt found little opposition to that since these countries are saddled with three of the most right-wing, pro-U.S., and anti-communist regimes in Latin America. More likely, the trip was meant to coordinate plans for intervention and aggression in Central America.

At the same time, growing reports out of Miami confirm that the CIA is arming and training counter-revolutionary Cubans and Nicaraguans for use in Central America. A previous government report admitted the creation of a para-military strike force of U.S. military forces and mercenaries in Guatemala as part of U.S. preparations for an invastion of El Salvador from neighborhing Guatemala.

All these moves add up to the danger of massive U.S. military intervention in Central America. The comparison with Viet Nam is inescapable.

But there is also a big difference.

In that struggle it took many years of genocidea! U.S. bombing, dead GIs, and other untold suffering before an anti-war movement grew up in this country to challenge the war-makers. Today in the U.S. there is already every sign of growing awareness and a resurgence of anti-war feeling that has the potential to mushroom into a massive, militant movement to stay the hand of the Pentagon before the war-happy generals can unleash their plans for death and destruction on El Salvador and on the workers and poor here at home.

NIKKEI WOMAN ACCUSES BOSS OF DISCRIMINATION

Richmond, Va.- A Japanese American woman in charge of Virginia's equal employment opportunity office here has accused her boss of discriminating against her on racial grounds.

Maya Hasegawa, who has worked for the EEO office for more than five years and as the office manager for two, contends in her suit that she was denied a 27,380 dollars-a-year post in the state agency because her boss, Kenneth B. Yancey, the state's top personnel officer, wanted to hire a less qualified black.

"Ironic would be one way to characterize it", her atorney D. Patrick Lacy Jr. said.

Yancey has been under fire for allegedly lax enforcement of state and federal anti-bias laws. Critics are saying Yancey passed over Hasegawa for a black applicant to combat image problems of the Dalton administration has had with blacks. Gov. John Dalton and Yancey have denied the allegations.

It was also recalled a survey and critical report by the Governors EEO Committee, then classified as confidential until excerpts were printed by the Washington Post in news article past summer, indicated there was cronyism in state hiring practices. After the article appeared, Yancey issued a memo threatening "immediate termination" of any emplyee caught leaking such reports.

Yancey's own EEO Committee had questioned the state's commitment to minority hiring, asserting it had been given "low priority" by Gov. Dalton's top administrators. Records show whites predominate in most state agencies while a high number of blacks hold janitorial and other menial low-paying duties.

Hasegawa has also filed a discrimination complaint against Yancey with the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

Employees called it favortism and racial discrimination in Yancey's hiring last April of Elsie G. Holland to be director of the Equal Opportunity officeand Hasegawa's immediate supervisor. A prominent Virginia Republican she previously taught education courses at Virginia Union University but had no training or previous experience in personnel management or equal opportunity programs.

Hasegawa stated in her complaint that Yancey told her she was qualified and capable of doing the director's job but that he wanted to hire "someone black." That Hasegawa contends, was "maliciously and intentionally" discriminatory because of her race and is seeking 275,000 dollars in damages.

Yancey concedes "race and sex were factors in the selection of Dr. Holland, but her credentials speak for themselves." Of her work as an educator, in civil rights and politics, Yancey concluded, she was "uniquely qualified to manage our equal employment opportunity and employment practice programs."

AFRICA NEWS BRIEFS

Nigeria buys British: Britain's defense industry has recently negotiated a $1.3 billion contract to supply Nigeria with a variety of armaments, including Jaguar fighter jets and anti-aircraft missiles. Sources in London told the French News Agency (AFP) last week that the deal was preceded by detailed negotiations, some of which took place during the February visit to Nigeria of the British foreign secretary, Lord Carrington.

Opting for the atom: France and Egypt last week signed two agreements for nuclear cooperation values at some $2 billion. They include the construction of two nuclear plants with a tota capacity of 2,000 megawatts. The agreements follow President Anwar Sadat's visit to France last month and will go into effect after Egypty's endorsement of the nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, expected soon. Egyptian plans call for a total of eight nulcear plants by the year 2000, and talks are beginning with the U.S. (for three plants) and with Britain (for two). [AN].

BEACH STROLL? The Mozambique Information Agency last week reported that 50 South African troops had been repulsed on Tuesday, March 17, with two killed, after the group crossed into Mozambique near the beach resort of Ponta Do Ouro, some sixty miles south of the Mozambican capital Maputo. Although South African first refused to confirm the story, South Africa's Commander-in-Chief Constand Viljoen later said that the group had wandered across the border by accident and had been ambushed by Mozambican troops. With a perhaps unconscious irony, given the South African commando attack near Maputo in late January, the general siad the incident "would lead to tensions," and he warned South Africa's neighbors that they could expect a serious crisis if their policy was to attack South African military personnel who crossed their borders without realizing it. [AN]

EGYPT HELPS HABRE: Egypt confirmed last week what had been speculated in many quarters for almost a year: It is supplying arms to Chadian rebel leader Hissein Habre. While verifying the Egyptian role as Habre's backer at a Cairo press conference, Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan Ali refrained from revealing the types of armaments being supplied, and he insisted that no Egyptian military advisers are involved.

Habre's forces were defeated last December when Libyan troops intervened in the Chadian civil war on the side of President Goukouni Oueddei. The rebels are now regrouping in remote areas along the Sudan/Chad border, and some skirmishes with the Libyans have been reported.

Ali indicated last week that his government fears the fighting will spill over into Sudan, and he said that Cairo stands ready to honor its mutual defense pact with Sudan. [AN]

Detroit Police Make African Honorary Commander: According to the South African Digest, Ulysses Brown, a radio communications expert with Detroit Police, visited South Africa while on vacation last year. While there, Brown accompanied South African Colonel Robbie Brown on a dagga (marijuana) spraying operation using a new herbicide, gramaxon. With the authority of his commanding officer in Detroit, Brown reportedly made Robinson an honorary commander in the Detroit Police and presented him with a capt and badge of the department.

POLICE BRUTALITY AND CRIMINAL JUSTICE

An Interview with Charles DiMare, Managing Attorney for the Students Legal Services Office. DiMare's practice emphaises Civil Rights and Criminal Defense Work
Topic: POLICE BRUTALITY AND CRIMINAL JUSTICE

The following interview has been edited for the sake of clarity

"One of the major reasons for the revolutionary war, (American Revolution)or at least that is what they tell us, was for the first ten ammendments(of the constitution) on which civil rights laws are based. These include the rights to free speech, the right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment, the right to be tried by a jury of your peers, the right to have an attorney, the right to be free from illegal search and seizure, and the right not to be arrest unless there is probable cause."
Charles DiMare

NUMMO: Would you say there is a difference between these American Ideas and the American Reality?

DIMARE: That's correct, the laws in the books may be fine but they have to be enforced, and the citizen has to know about them.

Elaborating-Most police misconduct is the result of 'a few bad apples' or more importantly because officers are inadequatly trained, supervised and disciplined. For example, over 90 percent of citizen complaints against the police, when the police conduct their own internal investigations as to whether or not there has been any civil rights violations, have been dismissed by police as not being valid. We do have civil rights violations and when the police chiefs are called on to investigate the conduct of their men they(the police chiefs) just are not doing an adequate job. A police chief's failure to discipline an officer is almost an aquiescent, or could tend to, encourage the officer to again take that kind of step.

Also, untrained police officers sometime think they are acting within the law and they are not. For instance, when a student calls a police officer a 'pig', that student, whether we like it or not is exercising his free speech. Of course, the officer does not like that and over reacts and beats the crap out of him. With these facts, the only law breakers are the police, not the student-citizen.

Another problem is the hesitancy of most District Attorneys to prosecute police misconduct cases.

NUMMO: Would you say this would lead to an abuse by the police?

DIMARE: Yes, I think it would especially when police realize they can get away with a lot and not have criminal offenses, or charges placed against them.

NUMMO: What direction would you say we are going? Are the Police getting more strength?

DIMARE: I think they are. When the Department of Justice attempted to prosecute Mayor Rizzo, of the City of Philadelphia, for wide spread practices of police brutality, the U.S. Supreme Court said that the U.S. Department of Justice did not have jurisdiction to sue the city of Philadelphia. So here we have local District Attorney offices not bringing criminal complaints against the police and we have the U.S. Government not investigating and prosecuting police misconduct cases.

Elaborating- Very few people sue the police, while lots of people have their rights violated. Why? Because it is timely and costly. Many lawyers do not want to handle civil rights cases because of the effect it could have on their practices. If a lawyer has a local private practice in a particular area and starts sueing the local police this lawyer is not going to get a good deal in his next criminal cases, especially when 90 percent of the cases are settled by plea bargaining.

Another major problem that civil rights lawyers have seen is what they call 'cover charges'. Often you have a situation where someone is being abused by the police, falsely arrested, beaten up, or whatever, and the police charge that individual with violating some crime.

Understand constitutionally what's happening when a police officer executes, kills, or beats up a citizen on the street. He is prosecuting that citizen, saying that I have judged you guilty. The citizen has been denied his right to a trial and an attorney who is supposed to punish? The punishing and judging of and individual should be by a jury or a judge.

NUMMO: What strengths does a citizen have in his relationship with the police?

DIMARE: We have our rights, to the extent that civil rights lawyers are willing to enforce them. Now we see President Reagan cutting back on Legal Services and he wants to abolish Legal Service Corporations. A lot of civil rights litigation is brought by Legal Services because they have the resources.

NUMMO: What is the solution?

DIMARE: I think the solution is community legal education, higher funded legal services offices or maybe specialized legal services offices that specialize in prosecuting police misconduct. I think that the District Attorneys office should have a lot of public pressure on them to start prosecuting police criminally. I think that the Department of Justice and the U.S. Attorneys office should be free to prosecute these cases. I think we need citizen review boards(citizens who review a citizens complaint of police brutality or misconduct, and investigate and make a determination as to whether or not there was a civil rights violation). There should be more training for police officers, and more discipline.

NUMMO: Who would initiate these changes?

DIMARE: The citizens would have to do it themselves. Like all social change in this country. The people have to indicate that change. They have to demand that change.

El Salvador Rally

On Wednesday, March 18, in a bright, somewhat chilly afternoon more than 1,500 people got together in a march-rally protesting the U.S. involvement in El Salvador.

It was the efficient end result of the work of a total of 43 different student and community organizations of the area.

The rally started at 2 o'clock in front of the U-Mass Student Union Building with messages of solidarity with the struggle of the people of El Salvador. One of the most moving and impressive messages came from a Che Lumumba student, Lisa Coons, age 10 who denounced the U.S. presences in this Central American country. She stated:

"We send our love to the children of El Salvador. We are the future together. Power to the people of El Salvador".

Another important message came from the representative of the Venceremos Brigade, Marea Wexler, who explained how the biased media of this country and the Reagan's Administration have tried to present the Revolutionary proccess occuring in El Salvador as part of a Communist threat to the Western Hemisphere. The U.S. has created a way of justifying their actual position in El Salvador, using Cuba as a target for the excuse of intervening in the internal struggle of El Salvador.

Many other messages were given, all of which denounced U.S. presence in El Salvador and all asking for an immediate stop of the military and economic aid that the U.S. is giving to the Salvadorean juntas.

After the solidarity speeches were delivered the march was on its way. Going across campus, through University Drive and into Sunset Ave, in front of Southwest Residential area and ending in the Amherst Commons. En route to the commons the unified marchers chanted slogans like," No draft, no war, U.S. out of El Salvador". There were signs and banners declaring the motives for the rally.

At the commons the crowd gathered to listen to the band Bright Morning Star perform. Followed by a statement read by the companera Roxana Bell. The statement was directed to the American people from a Salvadorean citizen. Part of the statement read," It is time to make an extraordinary effort on the part of the American people to stop the U.S. governments' contribution of the military aid for the juntas. Not only to stop the genocide of my people, by also to stop the attacks towards the working class and minorities here in the U.S.. These attacks come from the high rate of taxes imposed by the Reagan Administration."

Eqbal Ahmad, director of the Institute of Policies Studies in Washington,D.C., spoke about U.S. imperialism around the world, specifically in the Middle East. He also spoke about the direct relation that exists between the Middle East and the Salvadorean Struggle.

Esteban Monserrate, a representative of the Puerto Rican pro-independence committee, Patria Libre, spoke on the U.S. foreign policy, pass interventions in Latin America and established the parallels in the actual U.S. presence in El Salvador.

A poem was read by Debbie Sicilia, a member of Patria Libre. The poem was from the Salvadorean writer Cintio Vitier. A representative of the Western Mass. Latin American Solidarity Committee spoke on what people here can do, such as writing to your congressmen about your feelings towards the U.S. involvement in El Salvador. The rally ended with a statement given by Rev. Charles Kimball on the true struggles of the Salvadorean people, mentioning the struggle is one against poverty and hunger and not an ideological struggle.

This rally was part of a nationwide campaing against U.S. involvement in El Salvador. Rallies like this one will continue until the U.S. government stops its aid to the muderous junta of El Salvador. On May 3erd there will be a march in Washington,D.C. in support of the Salvadorean struggle. It is important to attend the May 3rd rally, because a march to the Pentagon means it will save us, the young people of this nation from having to go into another nation to kill innocent people. Let's help to stop the continuation of the U.S. aid the the junta. Let's march together on May 3rd and shout,

"No draft, no war, U.S. out of El Salvador".

We must understand there's a brand new plan
No-we are not on the slave ship anymore
No-we are not on the plantation anymore
And if we are not careful, we may not be anymore!

That sister is blue and you can see it, within her mind and body too
There always seems to be pain with nothing else to gain but more shame

Yes that sister is blue, remember when she would come to you
It doesn't seem ..... so long ago
Who snatched that star from the beautiful sky?

Even Mothernature is puzzled as to the reason why
I guess you're right that sister is blue

Yea! And you know they murdered one of her babies too
She doesn't have her man to defeat this deadly plan
Not even me, not even you
Yes, that sister is blue

Reagan survives shooting

Three others wounded

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan was wounded in the chest yesteday by a gunman who tried to assassinate him with a burst of .22 caliber bullets that critically injured his press secretary, James S. Brady. Reagan "sailed through surgery" according to doctors who said he'd be ready to make .White House decisions by Tuesday.

But Brady was said to be fighting for his life, a bullet through his brain.

Dr. Dennis O'Leary said "a really mangled bullet" was removed from Reagan's left lung. He said the president's condition was stable, the prognosis excellent.

"Hopey, I forgot to duck," Reagan told his wife as he was wheeled into surgery. Then he told the doctors he hoped they were Republicans.

Two lawmen also were wounded in the mid afternoon blaze of gunfire outside a Washington hotel where Reagan had just addressed a union convention. They were reported in serious condition but apparently not in danger.

A youthful, sandy-haired gunman from suburban Denver was wrestled into handcuffs and arrested moments after he leveled his pistol at the president and fired from near pointblank range.

There was no known motive, for the savage burst of gunfire that exploded as the president stood beside his limousine, ready to step inside for a rainy, one-mile ride back to the White House.

One eyewitness said the assailant, standing ten feet from the president, "just opened up and continued squeezing the trigger."

Anxious hours later, Reagan was pronounced in good and stable condition after surgery.

"I can reassure this nation and a watching world that the American government is functioning fully and effectively," Vice President George Bush said at the White House Monday night. "We've had full and complete communication throughout the day."

O'Leary described Reagan as "clear of head" and said he "should be able to make decisions by tomorrow, certainly.

"We do not believe there is any permanent injury," he added.

O'Leary served as spokesman for two surgeons who operated on Reagan at George Washington University Hospital. They made a 6-inch incision to remove the bullet that had penetrated about three inches into his left lung, missing

Reagan sixth target of assassin this century

(AP) President Reagan is the sixth U.S. president in this century who was the target of an assassination attempt. Two of the six, William McKinley and John F. Kennedy, were killed.

The shots fired at Reagan yesterday marked the first assassination attacks since two women tried to shoot President Ford in separate incidents in northern California in September 1975.

Earlier in the century, on Sept. 6, 1901, McKinley was shot during an appearance in Buffalo, N.Y. He died eight days later. The man convicted of the crime was executed a little more than a month later. On Oct. 12, 1911, a man in Milwaukee shot and seriously wounded former President Theodore Roosevelt and on Nov. 1, 1950, two men identified as members of a Puerto Rican nationalist movement tried to shoot their way into Blair House in Washington, D.C., in an attempt to kill President Truman.

Kennedy was killed in November 1963 in Dallas. Lee Harvey Oswald was arrested for the crime but was shot and killed by Jack Ruby before he could be tried. Ruby died while legal proceedings were still pending in the Oswald shooting.

Tuition increase announcement expected

By DEBORAH ASBRAND
Collegian Staff

A tuiton increase for students attending the state's 28 public colleges and universities is expected to be announced by the Board of Regents at their next meeting on April 14.

No specific increase figures have been confirmed yet, according to Jan Robinson, vice chancelor for student affairs for the Regents.

Robinson said the regents has been meeting with representatives fo the state's higher educations system for the past two weeks to gather input and recommendations on tuition increase figures.

She said more information on the proposed hikes will be made public after the April 9 meeting of the six member Student Advisory Task Force.

The board's tuition sub-committee met last Friday with newly appointed Chancellor John B. Duff to consider staff proposals for tuition increases.

Sources said the proposal discussed at the meeting went beyond the $12 million increase for state colleges and universities that was reported to be under consideration earlier this month, and instead called for increases totaling $26 million over the next two years.

Robinson said the $12 million figure has "only been thrown around."

"What we need is enough money to run our system," she said.

"It is my hope that any tuition increase is fair and equitable, and comes with a more flexible tuition waiver program," Robinson said.

She said the present tuition waiver program, which exempts needy students from tuition costs, will have to become more flexible in the face of financial aid cutbacks and tuition increases.

"As a governing board we have an obligation to see that we don't become an elitist institution," she said.

Ronald Keefe, a University of Massachusetts senior and a member of the Student Advisory Task Force, said the proposed increases do not take into account recent financial aid cutbacks and tuition hikes.

"This is not the product of a thoughtful policy, it merely reflects the governor demanding revenue and the regents saying how much," Keefe said.

Gunman son of Colorado oil executive

By SALLY CARPENTER
Associated Press

DALLAS — John Warnock Hinckley Jr., the man arrested yesterday in an attempt to assassinate President Reagan, was "not a flamboyant type" and "certainly not the type" to shoot a president, says a high school classmate.

"He just sort of blended into the crowd," said Tom Blackwell, who graduated, along with Hinckley, from Highland Park High School in suburban Dallas in 1973.

"He wasn't a flamboyant type or anything like that."

Hinckley, 25, is a son of an Evergreen, Colo., businessman who heads Vanderbilt Energy Corp., an oil and gas exploration company. The family moved to Colorado in 1974.

FBI agents interviewed Hinckley's parents in Evergreen, a bedroom community about 20 miles due west of Denver. The family had no immediate comment on the arrest.

The FBI and police in Evergreen said Hinckley had no known criminal record.

Blackwell said the last time he saw Hinckley was at graduation time, when Hinckley and his family were moving to Colorado. Little was known about his activities in the years since high school.

Hinckley entered Texas Tech University at Lubbock in the fall of 1973 as a business administration student. School officials said he last attended the school in the spring and first summer semester of 1980. Steve Lindell, assistant manager of university news and publications, said Hinckley had not earned a degree.

NBC News reported that Hinckley once worked as a disc jockey at a country music station in Denver under the name John Warlek.

The Texas Department of Public Safety listed Hinckley's birthday as May 29, 1955, although initial Secret Service reports listed it as May 29, 1958.

His driver's license described him as 5 feet 9 inches tall, weighing 180 pounds, with blue eyes and blond hair.

Polish labor leaders call off general strike

By THOMAS W. NETTER
Associated Press

WARSAW, Poland — Independent labor leaders yesterday called off a nationwide general strike that had threatened this Soviet bloc nation with its worst crisis in months of political and economic strife.

The decision to suspend a walkout today came after nearly seven hours of talks between Lech Walesa, leader of the independent union Solidarity, and Deputy Premier Mieczyslaw Rakowski. At issue were several union demands, especially punishment of those responsible for injuring three union members in a beating March 19 at Bydgoszcz, 170 miles northwest of Warsaw.

The government agreed to suspend people responsible for the beating, Polish television said.

"Common sense and moderation have won," said Walesa after the talks.

Rakowski had warned that a strike could be "catastrophic" and bring the nation to "the threshold of a precipice." Warsaw Pact military maneuvers have been in progress in and around Poland and reportedly had been extended because of the situation.

Polish, Soviet and East German troops simulated opposing an enemy landing yesterday along the Polish Baltic coast, the East German news agency ADN said.

In Washington, President Reagan's press secretary James F. Brady said that "suppression" in Poland would force a cut off of U.S. economic aid. (Brady was wounded along with Reagan in a shooting in Washington later in the day.)

Brady said Reagan and West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt had discussed the situation in a 15-minute transatlantic call.

Cardinal Medeiros calls for special prayers for victims

BOSTON — The assassination attempt on President Reagan yesterday produced prayers in Boston churches, renewed calls for gun control and Secret Service protection for Sen. Edward M. Kennedy.

"An appropriate solution must be sought now to guard against more of these tragedies," said Cardinal Humberto Medeiros, archbishop of Boston.

"This great tragedy reminds us that violence and the easy availability of firearms make every citizen of high or low station vulnerable to a murderous gun," he said.

Medeiros asked all 411 Roman Catholic parishes in the archdiocese to hold special services "to join in prayer for President Reagan and the other victims." No time was specified for the special services.

Academy Awards delayed due to assassination attempt

HOLLYWOOD — Organizers of the Academy Awards ceremony decided yesterday to postpone the nationally televised program 24 hours because of the assassination attempt on President Reagan.

Charlie Frank, a spokesman for ABC television in New York, said the decision had been made to delay the program until tonight at 10 p.m. EST.

Earlier, Norman Jewison, producer of the show, Fay Kanin, president of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, and Johnny Carson, the show's host, had met with ABC television officials at the Los Angeles Music Center to discuss their options.

Former Governor said to suffer from coronary artery disease

BOSTON — Former Massachusetts Gov. Francis W. Sargent, who underwent a probe of his heart muscle yesterday, will have open heart surgery soon, according to his doctor.

Dr. Howard S. Honig, a cardiologist, said Sargent had a coronary angiography at New England Baptist Hospital.

Honig said the procedure "was brief and well tolerated...This study established the presence of significant coronary artery disease, and is the cause of (Sargent's) chest pains.

"He will require open heart surgery in the immediate future. It is anticipated that he will have an excellent surgical result and will be able to return to his former vigorous lifestyle."

Another black child found dead in a river near Atlanta

ATLANTA — The body of a black boy was found Monday afternoon in the Chattahoochee River in southwest Fulton County, the 21st black child to be found dead in the Atlanta area in the past 20 months, authorities said.

"The only thing we know is we have located a young black male that meets criteria of those found recently," Fulton County Police Sgt. Denny Hendrix said.

Residents of south Fulton County found the body about 3:30 p.m. while boating on the river, Hendrix said. The body was clad only in underwear and was not decomposed, he said.

Supreme Court clears way for imprisonment of Huey Newton

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court cleared the way yesterday for California authorities to imprison Black Panther Party founder Huey Newton on his 1978 conviction for gun possession, even though the charge hinged on an earlier case which was overturned.

The justices refused to disturb the Oakland decision, in which Newton was sentenced to serve two years for violating a state law barring the possession of guns by convicted felons.

They turned away without comment Newton's argument that since his former conviction, on a 1964 assault charge, had been reversed, he had no reason to believe he was violating the gun law.

State Deputy Attorney General Clifford Thompson Jr. in San Francisco said there is a possibility that Newton will be put on two years probation instead of being sent to prison. That will be up to the state trial judge, Joseph Karesh.

Koffler letter is released

In a tersely worded statement to the campus community, University of Massachusetts Chancellor Henry Koffler has re-stated his intention to fully oppose anti-social behavior on campus.

In the letter, which was dated March 19 but not made available until yesterday, Koffler reiterated his earlier support of the report of the Chancellor's Commission on Civility.

"We will not allow the majority to tyrannize a minority, and we will not allow minorities to tyrannize each other," Koffler wrote. "I will not tolerate intolerant behavior."

Koffler listed "burning crosses," "symbols of Nazism," and "coerced sex" as examples of anti-social behavior and pledged his support to the Student Code of Conduct clause which calls for expulsion from the University for any harassment or endangerment of other individuals.

Koffler said the code of conduct will be "strictly" enforced. He asked all members of the University community to assist him in the goal.

"I ask every one of you to join me in the defense of the University ofMassachusetts at Amherst," Koffler concluded.

Two weeks ago, Koffler released a statement accompanying the commission's report, in which he announced his intentions to combat anti-social behavior and said he was instructing his associates to develop deterrents and penalties.

Koffler also appointed Assistant Chancellor Marie McDemmond to coordinate human relations matters on campus.

The report of the commission, which was established last year following reports of anti-Semetic, sexist and racist behavior on campus, recommended "greater campus involvement" on the issue, more communication between the administration, faculty and the students, improving University morale, and a more active involvement by the administration and faculty.

Specific proposals, including possible penalties, sanctions and academic matters, are expected to be formulated and announced in the next few weeks.

Final results of BOG given announced

By GREG VOLPE
Collegian Staff

The final results of the Campus Center Board of Governors elections were announced yesterday, with only two days remaining before new BOG members are to be officially seated.

The results of the election had been delayed because of staffing problems that have plagued the tabulation process since the elections were completed March 5.

The 10 victorious University of Massachusetts students in the "At Large" category are: Judy Stearns with 2209 votes; Scott Cashman, 2112; Timothy Burke, 2053; Susan McLaughlin, 2043; Mike Ferrigno, 2015; Scott Freedman, 1972; Jay Englander, 1965; Kathleen McGettigan, 1867; Greg Dennis, 1844; and James Buckley, 1839.

The results of the other nine availble positions for the Board were made available last week. They were: commuter representatives, Jim Mathison with 193 total votes; Nancy Jane Bailey, 179; and Jeff Figgie, 134. The tabulated results for the remaining winners, already announced, were not made available.

For the Southwest Residential Area representative seats, Barbara Hammond and Seth Singer were named victorious. Both ran uncontested.

The student winners named for the other residential representative seats were : Debra Abramoff of Central Residential Area; Peter Franklin, Orchard Hill Residential Area; and Paolo Bruno, Sylvan Residential Area. All the students ran uncontested.

No on ran for the one available Northeast Residential Area representative seat.

Finally, Lori Dratch beat Christina Kelley for the one available Greek Area representative seat.

Brian DeLancey, BOG chairman, said the board's major concern will be its role in the upcomming renovations of the Campus Center and Student Union buildings.

One direct action the board plans to take concerns the proposed renovations to the Hatch and the University store, Delancey said. The board plans to conduct a telephone survey among university students to obtain "Reactions" about the rennovations.

Delancey said the board will work through the Student Affairs Research & Evaluation Office (SAREO) to conduct the survey.

The survey should be completed by April 15, Delancey said.

Martin Luther King remembered

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

A week of remembrance of a crusader for peace begins today with the start of Martin Luther King week.

"It is a time to remember a very important individual," said Delphine Quarles of the Student Activities Office.

"We need to remember this man and all he has done," Quarles said, for the "world to live in peace and harmony."

Events for the week begin tonight in the Student Union Ballroom with the showing of "Martin Luther King: The Man and the March." Quarles said the movie concerns King's "Poor People March" and his efforts to win equality and civil justice for all people.

Dr. Ernest Allen, Chairman of the Black Studies Department will also present a lecture.

Jill Nelson, a free-lance writer and a graduate of the Columbia School of Journalism, will present a lecture and slide presentation on Zimbabwe from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m., tomorrow in Thompson Hall 106.

Camille Bell, President of STOP, a committee to stop children's murders in Atlanta, will also lecture tomorrow. She is the mother of one of the slain children, and has recently appeared on The Phil Donahue Show.

The New Africa House Choir will present a Gospel Concert at 7:30 p.m. on Thursday in the Campus Center Auditorium. The Rev. Alfred Skip Robinson will lecture following the concert.

A "Spring Affair Dance" is scheduled for 8p.m. to 1 a.m. in the Student Union Ballroom with music by Origin. Admission is $2.50 for students and $3.00 for others.

All other events are free.

Quarles said a planning committee for the week consisted of members of the African American Society, the Radical Student Union, the Distinguished Visitors Program, the Commuter Collective, Ahora, the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students, the Office of Third World Affairs, the Anti-RAcism Team of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy and the Universtiy of Massachusetts Arts Council.

Amherst Town Meeting opens last night

By MARK L. CURELOP
Collegian Staff

It was recommended at last night's Amherst Special Town Meeting that the session be postponed in reverence to the assasination attempt on President Reagan, but the motion was defeated by a voice vote.

Meeting participants agreed that it would be best for a WMUA correspondent at the meeting to provide updates on the president's condition every half hour. The meeting began at 8 p.m. but no reports had been given as of 9:30 p.m.

The approximately 150 residents and town officials who attended the meeting agreed by a voice vote to allocate $105,000 from federal revenue sharing funds for repair of town trucks.

Also by a voice vote, the participants decided to borrow money from a financial institution for the construction of a water treatment facility for a part of the Amherst resevoir system located in Pelham.

Concern was voiced that the town might have trouble borrowing funds because of certain effects of Proposition 2½ on loans.

The meeting was the first of four scheduled special town meetings for this week and next. All are being held at Amherst Junior High School.

"An annual town meeting must be held every year in the spring to adopt financial plans for each year," said Town Manager A. Louis Hayward.

Last night's meeting was called to take care of "unfinished business," said Town Clerk Estelle Matusko.

Town Moderator William F. Field opened the meeting stressing that the town meeting members do not have an endless amount of time to vote on the 16 articles of the proposed town warrant.

"We are limited by the upcoming town election next Tuesday," Field said.

No gun change for UM police

Although the Massachusetts State Police will be carrying .357 Magnum pistols rather than the standard .38 caliber police specials, University of Massachusetts police will continue to use their standard service revolvers.

"We have no intention of changing from the guns used now," said Gerald O'Neill, UMass director of public safety.

Last week, state police officials announced that the troopers will be carrying the .357 magnums instead of the standard issue .38 specials.

Although UMass police officers are trained at the State Police Academy in Framingham, they are a separate force and are not required to follow State Police policy, O'Neill said.

Indonesian troops attack hijacked plane, free captives

BANGKOK, Thailand — Indonesian troops swarmed onto a parked Indonesian jetliner in early morning darkness today, killed four of the five hijackers who had held 55 people hostage, and after a three-minute gunbattle set the captives free, a Thai spokesman said.

Indonesian officials said none of the hostages was killed, denying the Thai government's earlier report that a 4-year-old boy had died in the attack.

At 2:40 a.m. local time, about 20 soldiers crossed the airfield, thrust ladders against the plane's fuselage and several of the men clambered onto the wings, witnesses said.

COMING ATTRACTIONS

By STEVE MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Please, not tonight Cheetah, I have a headache: Bo Derek will be starring in the 1981 remake of Tarzan. Despite her healthy physical attributes Derek will not be playing the lead but will instead play the role of Jane. No one has yet been cast as Tarzan...While on the subject of sob stories—William Holden and Ricky Schroder are starring in The Earthling. This is another tearjerker for Schroder—who played the soppy little brat in The Champ—and should be out shortly...But Why?: The Blue Lagoon may go into sequel reteaming co-stars Brooke Shields and Christopher Atkins. It would deal with the couple's return to civilization and their spiritual encounter with Calvin Klein jeans.

Space Junk: The current trend in science fiction films continues. This summer offers us the release of Superman II with Chris Reeve continuing his role as the Man of Steel. Part two is more action oriented but don't worry, the Lois Lane infatuation continues. Up, up, and away...The same day will also see the premiere of Raiders of the Lost Ark, a fantasy produced by George (Star Wars) Lucas and directed by Steven (Jaws) Spielberg. It does sound promising but then again so did Flash Gordon. Sean Connery and Peter Boyle co-star in Outland, from the creators of Alien. It's a tale of intrigue, madness, murder, and lust, all the elements which make everyday living such a constant rush.

Career Opportunities: Rude Boy, the British film which revolves around The Clash, will be released to a wider distribution soon. Locally its scheduled to run at the Amherst Cinema on April 1-4...Speaking of punk, the people of Paramount pictures are working on All Washed Up, the story of the rise and fall of a punk band. The perils of instant stardom will be examined in the film, directed by music entrepeneur Lou (Up In Smoke) Adler. Seems as though it sounds awfully familiar to the story of the Sex Pistols...Let's hope Neil Diamond doesn't make another movie.

'Godzooks! Leave your mind behind: The next full moon will see the release of The Howling, a monster flick about a woman who changes into a werewolf-like creature. The transformation scenes do look pretty wild...John Carpenter, whom I personally blame for starting this whole shlock for shock exploitation genre with his "classic" Halloween, is purported to be hard at work on Halloween II. Come to think of it the first film did leave off in a loose fashion...but doesn't everything nowadays? For instance...

Student returns to ransacked room

A resident of Patterson dormitory in the Southwest Residential Area returned from the vacation week on Saturday to find that items valued at $762 had been taken from her room, and that the room had been ransacked, according to University of Massachusetts police.

Police said the resident's stereo and some clothing were reported taken at 5:48 p.m. on Saturday.

According to police, the resident also returned to find her room scattered with food, articles of her clothing stuffed into a waste basket that had been used as a toilet.

The resident also found a half-burned candle and a vase that was partially filled with urine in her room, police said.

In another incident, a radio receiver in the lobby of John Quincy Adams tower in the Southwest Residential Area vandalized and some soda was stolen, police said. The vandalism was reported to police at 5:38 p.m. yesterday, they said.

A writing machine, valued at $1,300 and located in a room in the School of Business Administration, was reported stolen at noon on Sunday, police said. There were no signs of forced entry into the room, they said.

Coal miners snub union president

(AP)—Striking coal miners snubbed United Mine Workers President Sam Church in the union's largest district yesterday as he made a last bid to sell a proposed contract one day before it goes to the 160,000-member rank and file for a vote.

Meanwhile, trouble flared in southern West Virginia, where UMW pickets tried to keep non-union miners from reporting to work. A sheriff's deputy was struck in the face by a rock and a picket was charged with malicious wounding, authorities said.

Mingo County Circuit Judge John Bronson later issued a temporary restraining order against the striking miners, limiting to three the number of pickets who may gather at each mine entrance.

The first attempt against Ford came in Sacramento, Calif., on Sept. 5 as Ford was walking to the state Capitol for an address to the legislature. As Ford shook hands with a crowd that lined his route, Lynette Alice "Squeaky" Fromme, 26, a follower of convicted mass murderer Charles Manson, pulled out a Colt .45 caliber semi-automatic pistol and pointed it at the president. A Secret Service agent grabbed Ms. Fromme's hand. The gun did not go off and the president was not hurt.

Barely two weeks later, on Monday Sept. 22, as Ford walked to his limousine as he left the St. Francis Hotel in San Francisco, a single shot rang out. The gun was deflected and the bullet missed the president's head by five feet.

TOM DICKIE AND THE DESIRES
"Competition"

From the opening guitar chords of their debut LP and its first track, "Downtown Talk," Tom Dickie and the Desires show you what their music is all about. Leader Tom Dickie has been playing rock 'n' roll practically from the time he was able to stand, performing Elvis presley and Dion tunes with such intensity, he was known to pass out while banging out "Hound Dog." Bassist, vocalist and co-songwriter Jon Macey and guitarist/vocalist Michael Roy cut their musical teeth in Boston, while keyboardist Gary Corbett plied his trade for many a Brooklyn bar band before finding a home with the Desires. Drummer Mickey Curry rounds out the multi-talented line-up.

Produced by the young English veteran Martin Rushent, Competition offers worthy testament to the songwriting skills of the Dickie/Macey team, with raw, vibrant street-rockers like "Count On You," "You've Lost," "Waiting, Waiting," "House of Mirrors" and the title track. Their repertoire stresses the different views of reality people can have by observing rather than offering easy moral solutions. Tom Dickie and the Desires are musicians first of all, rather than a style or a look. One listen to Competition and you immediately realize that they are in it for keeps—and destined to climb to the top of the rock pack in the '80s.

his heart by several inches.

Reagan's lung collapsed, and the surgeons inserted two chest tubes to restore it.

They gave him blood transfusions, about 2½ quarts in all, to replace the blood he lost.

The wounded president walked into the hospital, "alert and awake" if a bit lightheaded, O'Leary said. At 70, the doctor said, Reagan "is physiologically very young."

"He was never in any serious danger," O'Leary said.

But Brady was.

"His condition is critical," the doctor said. He was shot in the side of the forehead, the bullet passing through his brain. "He obviously has significant brain injury and he is in critical condition," O'Leary reported.

He would not speculate on Brady's chances of recovery, but said it is likely Brady, 40, will suffer permanent brain damage if he survives.

It began suddenly.

At 2:25 p.m., EST, six shots rang out, one hitting Reagan in the left chest, others felling Brady, a Secret Service agent and a policeman. Secret Service agents and police seized John Warnock Hinckley, 25, of Evergreen, Colo.

He was wrestled to the ground outside the Washington Hilton, pinned against a wall and taken away. Hinckley was booked on charges of attempted assassination of a president, and of assault with intent to kill a police officer. He was in FBI custody Monday night.

The accused assailant was arrested last Oct. 9 at the Nashville airport for carrying handguns. The FBI said he was carrying three weapons that day — while then President Carter was making a campaign appearance in the city.

O'Leary and Reagan aide Lyn Nofziger both said President Reagan would be able to handle the decisionmaking duties of his job Tuesday.

Nofziger said there was no consideration of turning the duties of the office over to Bush under the constitutional provision for presidential disability.

Presidential Press Secretary James Brady was reported "fighting for life" after being shot yesterday. (AP Laserphoto)

O'Leary said Reagan might be hospitalized for as long as two weeks, but called that only a guess.

The gunman leveled his pistol at Reagan from amid a crowd of newsmen and bystanders as the president left the hotel after addressing the AFL-CIO Building Trades Council.

The shots also felled Secret Service agent Timothy J. McCarthy, 31, and policeman Thomas Delahanty, 45. A Secret Service spokesman said McCarthy was in "stable condition on the plus side." He was shot in the chest. Delahanty was wounded at the base of his neck. He was reported in serious condition.

At the time, Bush was flying to Austin, Texas. His plane turned back, landing outside Washington at dusk. Bush was flown to the city aboard a helicopter under extraordinary security precautions.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Reviewing the undergraduate beastiary

After only a few days on the UMass campus, you will notice the hordes of namesless creatures who swarm around you everywhere—in the Campus Center, in the dining commons, and in all academic buildings. Most of these teeming throngs are composed of Undergraduates, a common local species whose characteristics you are well advised to learn. In order to help you recognize the four subspecies of this animal, I have compiled an informal field guide, with the aid of a zoology professor who wishes to remain anonymous for reasons of personal safety.

Karen E. Hesmann

THE FRESHMAN

You are likely to find this critter meditating on the lawn by the campus pond, with his legs twisted in an excruciating yoga position and a beatific smile exposing the braces on his teeth. Being extremely young and naive, he loves to chatter, so you may easily engage him in conversation.

"So this is your first semester, huh? What do you plan to major in?"

"Humanity."

"Oh, humanities. As in Arts and Sciences?"

"No, I said humanity. Like, people. You know, like you and me."

"Could you be a little more specific?"

The Freshie takes a deep breath, licks his lips, clicks his braces pensively, "Um, I'd like to do something new for the world, something that's never been done before. Like mellow out the vibes of all humanity."

"You have a big job ahead of you. Earning a bachelor's degree is hard enough for most people. Do you have a lot of heavy assignments every night?"

"Oh, you don't have to do homework if you're cool. They'll hand you a B just like in high school. Like, parties are where my head's at now. Like, I'm still young, you know what I mean?"

THE SOPHOMORE

You are innocently lunching on a peanut butter sandwich in the Hatch when one of these beasties decides to share your table. Like practically all sophomores, she is a philosophy major, and you can tell by the way her paperback copy of Plato's Republic is trembling in her bony hand that she is about to say Something Profound.

For example: "Now that you're at UMass, do you know why you were born?" she asks.

You glance at your plate in discomfort. Unfortunately, you still have a whole portion of French fries to finish. No escape. You make a lame attempt to parry: "Is that an ontological or a teleological question?"

The Soph fixes a rapt stare on you through her tinted granny glasses. "What do those words mean?"

"How should I know? I'm not a philosophy major."

"Well, you still haven't answered my question. Have you discovered the meaning of your birth? In the time which elapsed between your carnal beginning and your emergence into light, did your youness truly begin, or did your state of non-consciousness merely disappear?"

Your best bet now is to be honest: "I don't remember."

"But what is remembering? Is it a state of being or a process of the soul?"

By this time you are ready to stuff your ears with peanut butter in order to shut out her stream of, well, sophomoric discourse. You decide not to take such a drastic measure. "Here, have the rest of my French fries. I've got to catch a bus."

THE JUNIOR

This creature bears no trace of the Freshman's youthful idealism or the Sophomore's intellectual yearning. Those traits have been supplanted by a mature craftiness which enables him to indulge (as cheaply and frequently as possible) his natural appetites for sex, drugs, beer, and pretzels. You need exert no effort to seek this specimen; rather, a long as you possess a warm, breathing body, he will seek you.

"Hi Didn't John's friend's roommate introduce you to me two weeks ago."

"Could be. You're a Junior, aren't you?"

"Yes! How did you know?"

"Oh, us veteran UMies are smart. How are you doing these days?"

"Wonderfully well. Let me tell you what I did last night with three friends and my roommate's dog..."

"It sounds fascinating, but I have to run off about thirty more Xerox copies, and then I have a class, and..."

"No kidding? You must never have any fun. Well, anyway, we were all smoking grass together in the dark, and suddenly Bill's chihuahua started nuzzling against my leg, and my maleness couldn't resist her femaleness, and nature's nature, so anyway Bill said..."

You quickly gather your Xerox copies and head for class. After all, you wouldn't want to shock all those Freshmen who are on Zen retreat by the campus pond.

THE SENIOR

This subspecies is a product of natural selection, otherwise known as survival of the fittest. You will have to hunt carefully amid heaps of books in the upper-level stacks of the library tower in order to detect individual specimens. Even then, you will need great perseverance to find one who is willing to share her exalted thoughts with you.

"By any chance are you a Senior?"

"Yes, but make further inquiries as brief as possible. I'm in the middle of writing a monograph on the cardiac rhythms of Lombrix, lombrix, the common earthworm."

"Oh, so you're into biology." You grope for something intelligent to say. "Do you believe that any empirical studies to date have demonstrated the validity of the Klunk Hypothesis?"

The Senior arches her brows, curls her lip superciliously before replying. "Yes, I do. Floogle's classic research of 1953—with which you are probably unfamiliar—provided conclusive evidence that the two variables crucial to the initial formulation of the Klunk Hypothesis could not be altered without necessitating further details which would obviously violate the principle of Occam's Razor. However, considering the issue from a purely theoretical standpoint, I would follow Krummsnitch in arguing that..."

"Wait! You lost me about forty words ago. You know, you're too smart for your own good."

The Senior blushes with false modesty and then, adjusting her spectacles, resumes her air of scholarly aloofness. "May I ask what academic activities you will be engaged in during the coming semester?"

"I'm taking just one really heavy seminar, Boucoprology 790. Nobody except graduate students and post-docs there."

She corrects you in a lofty tone. "Not so. I also will be there."

"Well, maybe you'll find some intellectual peers there. Maybe the instructor will even know a little more than you do."

The Senior laughs smugly. "Baby, I am the instructor."

Marxism is not a disease

There comes a time when a country honestly needs revolution—in the form of total political turnover—in order to achieve overall social and economic unity. It can be a dangerous thing, this revolution. Blood would, almost as a necessity, be spilled; it becomes an unfortunate means to an end - look at Northern Ireland.

Look at El Salvador, a land of chaos. I believe it is about time Alexander Haig and other nameless Washington bureaucrats realized that we, through our so-called "aid," are only prolonging the agony within El Salvador. We are helping an oppressive government to continue and increase its oppression.

Stephen Murphy

We are forgetting one of America's basic idealogies, founded upon what is good for the people. American involvement is helping the few (El Salvador's elitist government) and ignoring the many (the downtrodden populace). We are becoming enmeshed on the wrong side of a class struggle.

It is this basic class struggle which has triggered off Washington's concern. In their striving to propogate the democratic way (another example of American imperialism?) our leaders have become worried that the El Salvadorian rebels are claiming to be Marxist-Leninist Communists. Reagan and Haig have acted as though such a thing is a terminally dangerous disease.

But is it? Ignore the layman's stereotypical impression of Communism and review exactly what a government based upon Marxist-Leninist theory could do to ease the crippling El Salvadorian situation. It would, most importantly, do away with the current stifling government and make everything run for the benefit of the masses, the people. Factories and agriculture would become centralized under the state for the benefit of the common man, no individuals or corporations would profit from the exploitation of workers. Free education for all children would be made possible through a national public school system; El Salvador's high rate of illiteracy and ignorance would drop off, creating a new sense of awareness for all. The extremes of high and low class would be abolished through the removal of all private property; everyone would be made equal, class oppression would become non-existant.

Some may say this is too extreme. Again I ask: Is it really? Such a governmental set-up would build a solid foundation where one is sorely needed. El Salvador would have a much better chance to get back on its feet than if the current government were allowed to remain in power.

Let's stop our "aid"—it is in no way helping the people of El Salvador. We, the United States, should come down from our "Democracy as Salvation" cloud and face a clear truth: We are wrong. Again.

'Young men' that are self-degrading

On Wednesday, March 18, I attended the rally protesting U.S. intervention in El Salvador. While listening to the solidarity statements prior to the march, several "young men" decided to add their own slogans. Not only were these "young men" against the rally and all its participants, but the statements they made were offensive to me.

Please understand that I am not against the "young men's" opinion of the rally. What I am against is someone putting myself and others down for our opinions, especially when the individual expresses himself in a manner which degrades himself, and more importantly, the women around him.

Cheryl Canner

Protest is praiseworthy-column isn't

Concerning Jackson Katz' column (Collegian, 3/18), I think that protest of U.S. involvement in El Salvador, based on deeply felt conviction, is most praiseworthy. But the best endorsement for his own resistance, that Mr. Katz can come up with, is that someone resisted fifteen years ago, or that since Johnson lied then Reagan must be lying too. With enemies like Mr. Katz, Reagan won't need any friends.

Leaders differ from the public

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK — American leaders are out of step with the public, which is more religious and more concerned about moral values than top people in most fields such as science, politics, the news media and education, a study said yesterday.

"It is clear there is a dramatic gap," John C. Pollock, the project's research director, said recently. Overall, leaders are different from the public. They don't represent the public."

The study of 3,780 respondents, made by Research and Forecasts, Inc., was commissioned by the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Co. to explore American values of the 1980s and how much they are shared by leaders.

Although there was no intent to focus on religion, it emerged as "the one factor that consistently and dramatically affects the values and behavior of Americans," the report said.

The report said the influence of religion "has penetrated virtually every dimension of American experience" and "is a stronger determinant of our values" than any other factor such as age, sex, economic status, race or political bent.

"Our findings suggest that the increasing impact of religion on our social and political institutions may be only the beginning of a trend that could change the face of America," it said.

Moral issues have, "via religion, vaulted to the forefront of the political dialogue," the report said. "American leaders are out of tune with the public" because they are more flexible on moral issues and less religiously committed.

The study involved 2,018 hour-long interviews with a random, nationally distributed sample of the public, and responses to eight-page questionnaires from 1,762 leaders in business, law, education, government, military, the news media, religion, science and voluntary associations.

The clergy was found to be closest to the public in beliefs and attitudes. Businessmen were second in similarity, while lawyers and scientists were the most different.

Among the public, "religious involvement is by far the most powerful predictor of community and political involvement," the report says. "It is religious leaders who parallel this concern and activity.

next day, but it's a fact of life that some people do get off on this sort of behavior.

The post-hoop final incident was arguably not as serious, but it was just as disturbing.

Basketball players in all ranks of the game seem to be the most successful referee-baiters. Perhaps it is due to the close proximity of the refs to the players. Everyone gets a little chuckle when a four-letter epithet is mistakenly heard on the airwaves when a player is angered over a ref's call.

Apparently, some players in the intramural basketball league think that they are free to berate officials in this manner also. The wide majority of intramural officials are not professionals. Many are far from it. Like most humans, they screw up sometimes. They certainly did not deserve the treatment they recieved from several players of the team that successfully defended its intramural title, GQ II.

The championship game was well-played and close. GQ won, 49-44. There were many close calls by the officials. To the objective observer, these calls went both ways. Apparently some members of GQ did not agree with this observation.

As soon as the last second ticked off the clock and the final score tallied, several GQ players sprinted over to the scorer's table where the officials had gathered and began to scream,"All you refs suck!" and other assorted vulgarities. One player was especially vehement in his post-game anger and was physically restrained by teammates. This didn't stop his four-letter verbal assault.

This classless display was not limited to the ears of the referees. Anyone who was within 50 feet could hear quite clearly. Again, these people probably had their clique of admirers who laughed over how 'those refs got theirs, didn't they' and, again, this is a fact of life.

All you can really do is to shake you head and say, "It's too bad."

Sports does have a negative flip-side and now we've seen it here.

These were not empty words. When Finnegan and pitcher Vin Todd hitched a ride back to Mission Bay, where the team stayed, after some sightseeing Sunday afternoon, the driver, a total stranger, gave them two tickets and a parking pass for the San Diego Clippers final regular season basketball game against Portland.

Only in California.

California aside, Bennett voiced a concensus of his teammates when he said none of the pitching UMass faced was overly impressive.

"That's the one thing that surprised me," Bennett said. "I thought we'd face some really overpowering pitchers, but no one threw really hard. We could hit everyone we saw."

And while the fifth place showing among teams like SDSU and the National Association for Intercollegiate Athletics first ranked team Lewis-Clark State College is a boost for UMass baseball, first baseman Warren McReddie sees a larger implication.

"Alot of people out here (West Coast) don't take Eastern teams that seriously because we don't play nearly as many games," McReddie said. "Well, they saw how we played and maybe now people will respect Eastern baseball a little more,"

But sunshine and tocquitos and Coors and low strike zones aside, Bennett saw a development that grew subtly among the fat palm trees and narrow alleys of San Diego's Mission Bay.

"We definitely turned into a team out here," Bennett said. "I mean, we did everything together and we had a good time on the field and off. We're gonna win together, and we're gonna lose together."

Catching duties will be shared by freshman Denise Fleming and junior Mangini.

Pitchers this season are starters Kathy O'Connell and Karen Poirier, both right-handed. Shortstop Roiux, freshman Pamela Purdy, and sophomore Lombardi will handle the relief assignments.

The starting pitcher in today's opener against Lowell will be senior O'Connell. "O'Connel's not overwhelming, but the way she sets batters up, I couldn't ask for any better," Marasco said. The veteran was 3-0 in exhibition play and had a 14-2 overall record last season. In last year's action, UMass handily defeated Lowell 8-0.

"I'm impressed with the way the team has pulled together in these past weeks." Marasco said. "We're really looking forward to starting the 1981 season."

It never rains in California?

By KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

SAN DIEGO—Steve "Murray" Cramer, southpaw that he is, was the first one who plodded out of the United Airlines terminal—the first one from the University of Massachusetts baseball team who stepped on California soil.

"It's raining," Murray Cramer said.

It was raining. It was everything that California wasn't supposed to be. It was slightly cool. It was quiet and inoffensive. They were in LA, and it was raining.

"This is California?" catcher Brian Finnegan asked in disbelief.

This was California. LA. City of Angels. And it was raining. It was a 45 minute wait outside under the terminal overhand, waiting for the rented cars that would bring them down to San Diego to the Sun-Lite Classic, the biggest in-season tournament in the nation, and it was pouring.

The rains ended soon enough and nine days later, UMass had completed a 5-6 spring trip, their best in 20 years, to go along with a fifth place finish in the Sun-Lite tournamen, which was won by sixth-ranked San Diego State University.

Aside from getting a taste of Californian culture, with its taco stands and roller skates, UMass returned to Amherst late last night with a serious chance to clean up in New England this year.

"We definitely showed we can play with anybody in the country out here," said outfielder-catcher John Kraham, who hit three home runs during the trip. "That was really important to us—to be able to come out here and stay with teams who play over 100 games a year.'"

UMass came west without having played outside since last fall while most of their competitors in the nine-team tournament, such as SDSU, play year-round. By the end of the trip, tournament officials were wondering aloud just how good this UMass team would be if they played on the West Coast.

"They (UMass) impress me, said SDSU catcher-designated hitter Al Romero, who was named the tourney's most valuable player and should go high in this year's amateur draft. "They came out with not having seen a live ball and we just killed them (18-1) the first day. Then in the tourney, with just a couple of games under their belts, they gave us the best game we had in the tourney. Their pitching is young and will probably get better, but they really showed us some sticks. They can hit."

Hit they did, for a strong .283 team average (a blistering .324 over the last three games) while hitting 11 home runs.

While the weather wasn't as hot as the UMass bats, it was warm enough to win California some devoted fans.

"I love it out here," third baseman Barry Bennett said before leaving San Diego. "People are really friendly out here—very genuine. There's not a lot of hostility, nothing like back home. And all the people out here are so much more friendly to outsiders."

Season opener

Gorillas play host to Cornell

Head coach Dick Garber's Gorillas open the season this afternoon against Cornell in a game Garber said would be "one of about five of the most exciting games we'll play all year." Cornell is currently ranked sixth in the country and is the only team on the UMass schedule that the Gorillas have never beaten.

"We've had really good games with Cornell," Garber said. "This year they have their best team and we have our best team. They're certainly an exciting opener."

Cornell has won the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) championship three times in the last seven years, and is 2-0 so far this spring. They are coming off a 12-11 Adelphi win and a 13-2 Harvard trouncing.

"We're alot stronger and we have a little more depth at every position," Garber said.

Part of the makeup of that depth is attackman Jim Weller who finished last season with 47 goals scored (fifth in the nation) and 72 total points (sixth in the US). The junior from Ontario is consistent and showy, occasionally popping in a behind-the-back-and-in-the-net shot. Weller is part of a Gorilla squad that, unlike most teams, emphasizes speed over size.

"The team is very exciting to watch. We play a fast-break offense, and hopefully good defense," Garber said.

Tri-captain Chris Corin, who scored 21 goals and had 21 assists last year, and Skip Vosburgh, second leading scorer last year with 30 goals, round out the attack squad.

Mittwomen host Lowell

By SHARON PANNOZZO AND ELIZABETH McGOWAN
Collegian Staff

With eight weeks of practice behind them, the University of Massachusetts softball team will open the 1981 season at home against the University of Lowell today at 3 p.m. on the NOPE softball field.

Second year coach, Elaine Marasco, describes her team as having "quality and versatility, but not quantity."

"We just don't have that much depth," Marasco said. "I'm carrying a roster of 16 players and a majority of them are freshmen and sophomores."

The Minutewomen are coming off a 5-2 preseason. During their nine day exhibition trip to South Carolina, they defeated East Stroudsburg, Seton Hall, Trenton State, and powerhouse Adelphi University.

According to the Associated Press for Division I of the Eastern Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women, pre-season ranking, UMass is first in New England and in the East.

Last year, the Minutewomen posted a 26-3 overall record. After winning the New England and Eastern tournaments, the squad competed in the National College World Series.

The team lost six players from last year's squad, including the versatile Sue Peters. UMass will be relying on a small nucleus of upperclassmen and an abundance of talented youth to repeat last year's performance.

"Our key to success this year will be to keep the team free of injuries," Marasco said.

Outfielders for this year's team include Mary Forbes, Mary Ann Lombardi, Madeline Mangini, Kathleen O'Connell, Frances Troy, and newcomer Christa Jenson. Troy, however, will be out for an indefinite period of time due to a broken nose.

Gazelles lose opener, 12-11

By RANDI J. MARCUS
Collegian Staff

Ordinarily, a 12-11 loss is disappointing for the losers. But the UMass women's varsity lacrosse team considers yesterday's loss to Ursinus College a "moral victory" according to coach Pam Hixon.

"They (Ursinus) are a Pennsylvanian school with a strong tradition of lacrosse," Hixon said, "We played under pressure and took the loss proudly."

The Minutewomen entered their first game of the season with a young team containing some women who have never played lacrosse, according to Hixon.

Sophomores Whitney Thayer and Rita Hubner were cited by the third year coach as keys to keeping in the game.

"Whitney was brilliant on attack scoring seven needed goals," Hixon said, "Along with Rita's outstanding goaltending it was a good blend of offense and defense."

Last season the Gazelles compiled a 13-2 record with an average of 10 goals scored and three allowed per game.

Hixon said her team captained by Lynn Herbert and Patti Bossio is strong and she forces a good season.

The Minutewomen will travel to Boston University Friday night to play the Terriers.

. . . And on the flipside

Stephen Freker

It is now over a week after the fact. The bad taste in the back of the mouth still remains.

The championship games of the intramural hockey and basketball programs were played recently and it's tough to shake the lousy images out of your mind.

Overall, the respective playoff series were extremely competitive and exciting. There were emotion filled upsets and laughable blowouts, just like playoffs are supposed to be.

Both the hockey and basketball semifinal rounds included well-played, crowdpleasing competition. The championship games were supposed to be fairly predictable as each included a decided favorite. Breen's Bruins, the defending ice crown-holder and GQ II, the reigning hoop king both made it to the finals.

The similarities between the two final games do not end there.

The events which transpired at the end of each game similarly left you with a feeling of dismay mixed with a sense of disgust and finally, fear.

The theme of the younster or the average player emulating the superstar sports performer is ever prevalent. An example is the cute Seven-up commericals.

"Choke up on the bat Mr. Brett. It might help, it helped me !" says the tyke to George Brett. The Superstar laughs heartily.

Sugar RayLeonard's kid works out on the speed bag alongside his famous father and passes him off as "just my Dad."

This is nice. This is good. This is what sports is all about, to use an overworked phrase.

What is frightening is that the bad parts of sports are too often preferred to the good. As could be seen in recent championships, the University of Massachusetts' intramural programs are not free of the curse of negative emulation.

A recent poll of National Hockey League coaches showed that almost unanimously, they are against a rule prohibiting fighting in NHL games. Intramural hockey is not now and never will be anything close to the NHL and should not be construed as such.

The hockey final featured a team that had just come off of a semifinal round upset, the Puckoffs, and the defending champs, the Bruins. The first period as well as most of the second was reasonably well-played. At :26 of the second period, all hell broke loose.

There was a pileup at the Bruins' goal. About eight bodies ended up on top of one another. Two players got up and started swinging haymakers at each other. Then the rest of the on-ice players started skirmishing. Then both benches bolted onto the ice to enter the fray. It wasn't a pretty sight. One player was bleeding from a head cut. Another was stepped on by someone's skate and he was bleeding right onto the ice.

The fighting continued for about six minutes until the refs finally managed to get the fracas somewhat under control. One ref was not spared from the beefing. He got whacked in the back of the head and poked in the face. He sported a major-league lump and a colorful shiner for about a week.

It's a damn shame that this upsetting finale occurred. The UMass intramural hockey program is recognized as one of the best around. It certainly didn't deserve this type of garbage to tarnish its reputation. There are probably a few players who joked or even bragged about their escapades the

UM to evacuate again

Water supply to run out tomorrow

By G.B. YANG
Collegian Staff

For the second time this academic year, University of Massachusetts officials are closing school and ordering students to evacuate their dormitory rooms because water supples are critically low.

UMass-Amherst Chancellor Henry Koffler announced late last night at a hastily-called press conference that students must be off campus by 6 p.m. tomorrow. He said water in the three holding tanks on campus is at a "critical" level and is expected to run out completely by tomorrow morning.

"It is a tough decision," said Koffler, "But, I will not endanger the health and well being of students. My primary concern, next to our image among corporate executives in the state, is the safety of our students."

Classes for tomorrow have been cancelled but attendance at today's classes is mandatory. Koffler said last night it could be a "week or more" before the town of Amherst is able to pump enough water to the campus and that the academic semester "will most certainly" be extended to make up for lost classes.

At the beginning of last semester, students were given six hours to evacuate campus when the campus water supply ran dry.

B. Louie Zack, head of public works for Amherst, said the town plans to install pumps in the Campus Center Pond and use it as a water source for the remainder of the semester.

"I wouldn't recommend that anyone drink the water that comes out of there," he said. "But, we want to keep the good water (from the towns three depleted reservoirs) for town residents and the students at Amherst College." Amherst College students will not be required to evacuate because they didn't want to.

Zack said rainfall over the past few months has not replenished the towns depleted reservoirs because "you guys have been using it up as fast as it comes down."

"You probably think its beer or something," he said.

Although the town has a legal contract to supply water to UMass, which the schools pay for, Zack said it was the university's fault the water ran dry because students "still insisted on taking showers and washing their clothes."

"They were very uncooperative," Zack said.

This scene from September's evacuation may be repeated today as many, many students leave because of the lack of a commonly-used clear liquid substance. Students are shown here lining up for their bus tickets home during the last evacuation and a squirt of gatorade to tide them over.

One of the oldest buildings on the UMass campus recently underwent a facelift. The old chapel, which is no longer used for religious services, has had a digital clock installed in its bell tower. Student reaction has been minimal, but may be provoked next week, when the traditional bells are replaced by a "speaking clock."

Legal Services Office sues itself

By C.D. ROSENCLARK
Collegian Staff

Student Legal Services attorney Mack DeMadre announced today the Legal Services Office has filed suit against itself in Hampshire County Superior Court for violating an obscure state statute.

DeMadre said the statute is generally ignored but clearly prohibits University legal services from serving students.

"Nobody would ever think to exercise the statue but we discovered we've been violating it since we were formed and we've got a clear-cut case against ourselves," he said.

Bicycle Mill, legal services staff attorney, said the statute was probably written in the late 1960's as part of the Nixon administration's attempt to quell student unrest.

"And the University administration, the CIA, and who knows who else were probably the ones that left the torn out piece of paper with the statute written on it in my mailbox," Mill explained.

The suit was filed yesterday as a class action suit of 40 students who claim they have been unlawfully and successfully defended by the legal service.

Mole Mouseman, a paralegal in the office and one of the 40 students involved said, "We've got us this time. We're not going to just go for the moral victory this time either. No, not this time. We're going to pin us to the wall and not

5,000 tested but only 2 exempted

By FRAN TASTIC
Collegian Staff

Only two of the 5,00 students who took the Rhetoric Exemption Exam last month were excused from the requirement, a spokesperson for the Rhetoric department announced yesterday.

Hundreds of students crowded around the list of posted student numbers in Bartlett Hall, gaping at the two numbers on the sheet of paper. Only 20 students have been exempt since the program began 10 years ago.

"Well if we exempted more people there wouldn't be as many lines to get classes and then we'd have to cut back on instructors. As it is now classes are completely overcrowded," said the department spokesperson who asked not be named.

Anna Gutenberg, one of the only students to be exempted, told the Collegian she believes the test was fair and accurate. "I mean, like, uh, if I could pass it, then lots of people could. Besides, I write really good. Of course, I feel badly for the others."

Graduation to include Haig and Schafley

Anti-ERA Activist Phyllis Schafley and Secretary of State Alexander Haig will receive honorary degrees from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst at graduation ceremonies this spring, it was announced yesterday.

Also slated to receive honorary degrees are a lot of business executives who nobody ever heard of but who are rumored to have lots of money.

Schafley will speak on the "Fullfillment of Being Unenlightened." Haig is expected to speak on "Standard Military Tactics You Fine Young Americans Will Soon Need to Know." Schafley said she will also stress the "importance of keeping up the home front' to the "ladies of the audience."

Schafley and Haig denied rumors of an intimate relationship stating they were "just good friends."

In a related move, university officials announced all graduating seniors will be frisked for alcoholic beverages and mind altering drugs before entering alumni stadium on graduation day.

Said Chancellor Henry Koffler, "We must keep up our image you know. We don't want to offend anyone who is in the position to give us money."

Polish army storms Russia, surprise sends Reds running

SOMEWHERE ON THE POLO-RUSSO BORDER—Nine armored Polish divisions crept across the Russian border early yesterday morning and moved 350 miles into the Soviet steppes in a surprise attack that left Red Army troops fleeting in retreat.

Led by General Kielbas Wielzyeiski, Polish troops reportedly ran into Soviet Border patrols yelling "supriseki, bang bang," Soviet troops apparantly did not take the attack seriously and suffered heavy initial casualties.

A spokesman for the Red Army High Command denied the attack was underway although he said an additional 350,000 troops were being moved from Afghanistan to Eastern Russia as a "precautionary measure."

"Bah, Poles not got the strength the Russian people's army have in their glorious testicular fortitude in their intestinal guts. Bah," said Soviet Army Public Truth Officer Pasha Bono.

Polish Deputy Premier Mieczyslaw Rakowski lauded the efforts of his nation's army and said the attack was launched because "we knew no one believe it anyway."

He said the incredulity of the offensive would add an element of surprise, leaving Russina officials "ripping dair sides" with laughter and incapacitating their ability to conduct an all-out war.

"We get tired of dem big shot Russians breathing down our necks cause we get the labor problem. Besides, smelly Russians get bad air in dair bodies eating caviar and drinking the bodka. Dey get our necks wet," said Rakowski.

President Reagan issued a statement from his hospital bed in Washington, calling the attack, "A legitimate uprising of an oppressed peoples living in a Soviet satellite country who are fighting to determine their own destiny despite the fact that they are Communists too."

"When it's hard," said Chairman of the Senate Agricultural Committee Jesse Helms (R-N.C.) to that group Monday on Capital Hill which is attempting to deal with sexual disfunction among its members.

Solar salesman arrested in CC

Amherst—A passive solar salesman from the Chicopee Trailor Parks was arrested last night in the University of Massachusetts Campus Center for trespassing after 2 a.m. Stanley Lona, 47, wandered down from his sixth floor Campus Center Hotel Room in search of a soft drink and was apprehended by Security Officer Arnold Derkin after refusing to leave the building. Lona said, "I am staying in the hotel, I want my rights."

Derkin claims the passive solar dealer earlier enticed two young children ages eight and ten from an Amherst elementary school to the torture of looking at his passive solar display near the escalator for over one hour. Derkin said, "It was the guy's second offense in one day, we had no choice but to throw the book at him." The security guard added that under no circumstances are students or others to loiter in the building after the 2 a.m. closing time.

"We will enforce this law, we don't care if it's raining, snowing or you're expecting a ride," he said.

Wheat products cause cancer

By JOE QUINLAN
Associated Press

AMHERST—A professor at the University of Massachusetts yesterday announced the existence of a direct link between the consumption of whole wheat products and stomach cancer in humans.

Dr. U. L. Gibbons, chief medical professor at the university, said valetudinarians carry a "three to five" times as high risk of developing the cancer as persons consuming a normal diet.

Dr. Gibbon's findings are the result of four years of research conducted at the university with field mice and city mice.

Gibbons said his research was an effort to find out why there is a higher incidence of gastric cancer in field mice as opposed to the city variety. City mice, although exposed to heavy concentrations of carcinogens in urban atmospheres, were found to have a mysteriously low cancer rate.

In his effort to discover the cause, Gibbons fed a group of city mice whole wheat products and other natural foods. After two years of solely consuming this "earth food" diet, Gibbons reported that 35 percent of the city mice developed stomach cancer, as opposed to a 2.7 percent incidence in a control group of city mice.

Gibbons also noted some "peculiar" side effects the mice displayed included the "desire to wear sandals and round eyeglasses," and for the females to "not shave their armpits."

Homemakers set back women's rights 20 years

By I.M. CHAINED
Collegian Staff

A new women's organization formed to promote what its members call important interests is taking action this week, it has been announced.

Three Homemakers Excited About Nothing (T.H.E.N.) is a group that seeks to reverse the gains made by women in the past 20 years, according to Charlie Angel, the group's founder.

"We have to be on our toes," Angel said in an interview yesterday. "Now that my television show has been taken off the air, people may begin to believe that women have brains more than bodies."

Angel said she also worries that some inherent rights of women have been trampled by recent moves to liberate the fairer sex. "It used to be we could stay at home and have our husbands support us (and of course we all had husbands) but now more and more women are getting into responsible jobs and dispelling the images portrayed by quality programming like Charlie's Angels," Angel said.

Angel contends that the reason women are able to get into these positions is birth control. "And that's what T.H.E.N. is about," she said. "We want to make sure women stay where they should be...in the home, especially the kitchen and bedroom."

T.H.E.N. members each have had a Intranoodling Device (IND) inserted so they can cook spaghetti dinners while they await in their bedrooms their husband's homecoming each day.

This, they assert, is better than any birth control.

The organization's charter states that the group also opposes day care centers, equal opportunity employment, abortion and anything else that so blatantly threatens the American family. In other countries, they say, these practices are fine.

When asked about the E.R.A., Angel said she thought it was great. "I tried many real estate agencies, but only ERA was able to get me the house I really loved."

Student blasts dorm with tank

By WALTER SMEARS
Associated Press

AMHERST (AP)—In the latest incident related to the game "Killer," which has been sweeping college campuses since February, 10 students were killed and six injured when a student fired a tank shell into another student's dormitory room at the University of Massachusetts.

The deaths raised the total to 143 who have died at UMass as a result of injuries from the game "Killer."

The game started at the University of Texas at Austin in early February as the brainchild of undergraduate Marketing major Jon Schlep.

"Originally the game involved students chasing after other students with orange dart guns," he said, "I guess the game out of hand."

University officials are worried about the escalation of firepower used by the game's players.

University administration spokesperson Bart Clipboard said, "The real danger here is that people could get hurt. In fact, we heard a couple of students may have been hurt today, but it's not confirmed."

"Also there is the problem of building damage," he said, "Some of the really heavy artillary is setting us way back on dormitory renovations."

Many at the University were angered last week when a stray service missile hit the Murray A. Lincoln Campus Center building. The building is only ten years old, although it has for several years had severe roof leakage problems. The explosion reduced the water-logged structure to rubble, except for the 11th floor, housing the newly renovated Top of the Campus restaurant and bar, which remains supported only by a large trust fund.

Tank aims for a UMass dormitory yesterday afternoon. UMass student who operated the tank was seen earlier shooting pigeons from the library roof.

Several days after the destruction of the Campus Center, the attached parking garage also collapsed. The garage was not hit by artillary, however, and is presumed to have collapsed on its own.

Newly elected Student Government co-President Mutt Mange said building damages are not a big issue. "A target building looks about the same as any dorm after a weekend," he said, "And since everyone is afraid to go out to party, there's not vandalism. Things sort of cancel out."

The major problem many non-participants have with "Killer," expressed by sophomore Pierre Blase, a dormitory resident, is the constant fear of injury and death.

The anxieties of students like Blase, who do not want to be involved in the game, were heightened yesterday when the rules were changed to permit the killing of up to six innocent bystanders by players attempting to assassinate their victims. In a gesture of good will, the game's organizers added the stipulation that "assassins must make every effort to inform winesses (non-players) of coming attacks on a victim, except where such notice is impossible, as in

Regents to rename Koffler to improve UM image

By RICK DANCIN
Collegian Staff

As part of an effort by the University of Massachusetts to improve its image, which has included the renovation and re-naming of the campus bar, UMass officials have decided to re-name Chancellor Henry A. Koffler.

The idea to change Koffler's name came from Board of Regents member An Wang who said, "We are concerned about where the Chancellor stands with the kids. We get the impression, from things like the co-ed bathroom issue, that students do not pay too much attention to him."

Wang, president of Wang Laboratories, headed the Committee to Investigate Why Students Do Not Take the Chancellor Seriously, which concluded that many factors contribute to the problem. The committee report lists three of the Chancellor's attributes which are most detrimental to his image with students:

1. He is short
2. He is bald

Since few students know what Koffler looks like, the report states, his image must be conveyed primarily by his name. For that reason, the committee voted in favor of the name change, rejecting proposals for corrective surgery.

"His last name, Koffler, isn't too bad," Regent Chairman James Martin said, "Sounds like that other Austrian, Carl Koller, the eye surgeon who used to snort a lot of cocaine with Freud back in the 1920s. No problem there. They were famous. But Henry, that name sounds like the kind of guy we used to hassle back at Harvard—you know, stick his head in the toilet, shove him into the showers with his clothes on, blow up his locker, that kind of thing."

The committee report offers several suggestions for what it calls "names that are more regular-guy."

"We want the Chancellor to have a name like someone you have a beer and watch the Patriots with," Martin said. "but, that still sounds authoritatative."

The committee encourages students to choose from the following on a campus-wide referendum, to be voted on in early May: Peter Egan, Michael Egan, David Egan, Samuel Egan.

Students have been allowed to give suggestions of their own to be put on the referendum. So far, the following have been given most frequently: Benji, Bambi, Booboo, Bozo.

Asked how he feels about the proposed name change, Koffler said he thinks that idea is "uncivil." He has since formed a special Committee to Investigate the Regents out of the year-old Chancellor's Commission on Well-Manneredness.

Removal of the brick facade has already begun on the University Library condominium conversion.

University sells library to Boston real estate firm

By EDWARD D. STOWN
Collegian Staff

In a surprise announcement, officials at the University of Massachusetts yesterday revealed that they had sold the University Library for a reported $17.4 million. More shocking than the announcement itself was the disclosure that the problem-laden building had been sold to a prominent Boston real estate firm which plans to convert the 26-story structure into luxury condominiums.

At a news conference last night, Chancellor Henry Koffler said that "this library has been a real white elephant for the University since the bricks started falling. Besides, it has become very clear to me in my two years here that students at this school don't study; therefore, why have a library?" And, although it was not officially stated, Whitmore insiders revealed that the $17.4 million would help immensely in supplementing next year's tight budget.

In an elaborate audio-visual presentation, representatives of the G.H. Richards Company, the purchasing party, revealed intended renovations.

Aside from complete gutting of the interior space, the most noticeable alteration will be the removal of the Tower's controversial brick facade, already begun.

Expressing his desire for a "cleaner, more streamlined look," Jack Richards, president of the firm, said that the tower would be sheathed with panels of white marble.

Amenities will include valet parking, 24-hour security, climate control and in-house dry-cleaning. According to Richards, 32 percent of the Tower's space has already been sold or leased. The most noteworthy tenant so far is the Texas-based retail chain, Neiman-Marcus.

Locals Henry Koffler, Chancellor of the University and Julian Gibbs, President of Amherst College have reportedly bought condominium units, and unconfirmed rumors are circulating that the Kennedy family has reserved floors 16 through 20, certainly making the tower the most desirable piece of real estate in the area since the construction of Puffton Village several years ago.

With prices ranging from $90,000 for a studio to $475,000 for a 3-bedroom penthouse, the tower, to be named "University Plaza," is hardly in the budget range of the average UMass student and therefore not expected to help alleviate the present housing shortage in Amherst, although Amherst politicians are elated over the prospect of new tax revenue for the town.

Workers have already started the slow process of removing the brick facade, and Richards said that he expects work to be completed and the first tenants to move in sometime in the spring of 1982.

Knapp nix self; -- 'I'm useless'

By RICH LAVORAN
Collegian Correspondent

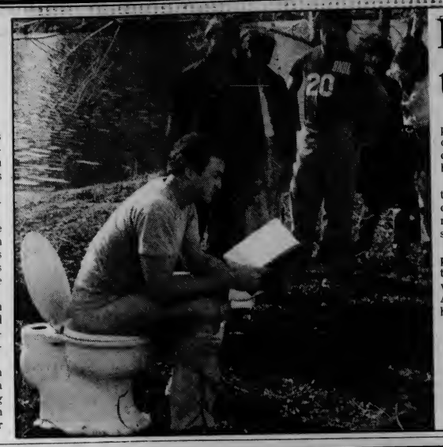
BOSTON—University of Massachusetts President David C. Knapp yesterday announced plans to abolish himself in response to similar requests from students and faculty on the Amherst campus.

"I'm absolutely useless," he said in an interview with select members of the press.

Knapp said because the Undergraduate and faculty senates had passed resolution calling for the abolition of the President's office, he would just leave Massachusetts and curl up in some corner of the world like a little fluffy piece of lint.

"I think I'll go raise mangoes in Florida," Knapp said. His remarks ended speculation about his departure to an insignificant community college in the sunshine state.

Mark "Cupcake" Horan, a spokesman for Knapp who is also very good with a Xerox machine, said a string of many big words that made no sense at all. Horan then smiled and drooled on his polyester sports coat.



Buckets arrive toilets gone

University of Massachusetts officials may furnish plastic buckets and bottles of disinfectant to all dormitory residents in an effort to eliminate student dissatisfaction over the recent ban of coed dormitory bathrooms.

"It's not true, but off the record, if we take all the toilies away from all those little adolesents in th dorms, then they'll regret they ever brought the matter up," said Dennis Madson, vice chancellor for student affairs yesterday.

The administrators had first decided to supply only plastic buckets to each dormitory resident to replace the ever-popular toilets. The bottles of disinfectant were added only after Health Services Director Barry Averill said unclean buckets would pose a health hazard by being "stinky"

Due to the overwhelming popularity of coed toilets expressed by the students and since they are now banned in the dorms, the physical plant has installed a coed toilet by the Campus Pond. At left, I.P. Publicly does his daily constitution while others wait their turn.

The Blue Wall re-named for former SGA president

By AL COHOLIC
Collegian Nonrespondant

The Undergraduate Student Senate voted last night to name what was formerly The Blue Wall, "LaVoice's Lounge" in honor of former SGA co-president Richard LaVoice.

Due to the controversy over the "Name The Blue Wall Contest," the senate decided to take the matter into their own hands and name the bar after the former co-president.

Paul A. Ticks, Student Senator, said, "Why not name it after Rich? I mean he's in there all the time and everyone knows him. Like they were going to name it George's Place. Who the Hell is George?"

LaVoice was unavailable for comment but was reportedly last seen talking to his attorney to see if he could get any money out of the situation.

The only other suggestion for a name came from Senator Ann T. Nuke who wanted to name the bar "Hiroshima Hall."

"I really think that the bar could have represented the waste that the world has created," said Nuke, "but just because I don't like the new name doesn't mean I won't get bombed in there."

Most students interviewed agreed with the senates decision although one student, Rich Moran, thought the bar should be named after himself saying, "What am I, chopped liver?"

Jack Daniels, a UMass senior, said, "I don't care what dey name it as long as I can get drunk and pick up da broads."

James Beam, a UMass freshman, said he didn't care about the name because "that sonofabitch Ed King won't let me drink in there anyway."

Suzy Sorority, a waitress at the lounge approved of the change saying, "It's a great idea. I like Rich. He gives great tips."

Johnny Walker and Tom Collins, two bartenders at LaVoice's Lounge said they didn't like the name because it was too hard to say over the phone.

Larry Coldcut, LaVoice's successor said, "I won't tolerate this baloney unless they name the Top of the Campus Lounge after me."

Kevin Mangler, Coldcut's running mate, declined to comment because "his mother told him not to."

Ex-lovers to sue for retribution

By JEWELIE BIRDPERSON
Collegian Staff

Wronged boyfriends and girlfriends at the University of Massachusetts can start suing for damages next semester through UMass Legal Services, which last night was allocated $10,000 from the Undergraduate Student Senate for a new palimony fund.

Following a three-hour, emotionally-charged debate, the senate voted 99-6, to give legal services the $10,000, which was $4,000 more than the group had requested.

"I'm overwhelmed," said Retty Bueshom, a student lawyer who had submitted the request for senate consideration. "this is clearly a landmark day for all those among us who have been "taken for a ride."

Bueshon said that legal services orginally planned to ask students to pay all damages if they were successfully sued by their lovers. But the group decided to ask the senate for aid after agreeing that most students could not realistically afford the full cost involved in most law suits.

The fund, which will be effective in September, will be used to match at least half of the damages incurred by students who have been told to "get lost" by people with whom they've had a steady relationship for a minimum of one year.

Bueshon's 10-minute explanation of the fund before the senate was interrupted 11 times by heavy clapping, whistling and shouts of "Amen."

Senate response to Bueshon's presentation was overwhelmingly positive, with more than 50 senators giving the group details of relationships gone sour.

said he is able to argue convincingly. "Watch," he told a reporter. Snot then punched a passerby in the nose.

One rhetoric TA said she was quitting her job because she said the number of students in her classes make it impossible to teach. "The kids I pass really enjoy the class, but most of them still can't write."

Rhetoric department officials defended their strict stance by saying SAT scores indicate students need more work in writing.

Harvey Werthull, a junior English major, who has taken seven English classes, four requiring extensive writing, said he was insulted by the results of the exam. Some of the students standing in the hallway said they will occupy the Provost's office in protest.

Ducks to fly if demands denied

By GREG WAD
Collegian Stiff

University of Massachusetts campus pond ducks warned yesterday they would call for a "general strike" to begin on Friday if the University of Massachusetts Administration does not renew their present contract and meet new demands.

The ducks, warning they will "waddle right out of here" if the administration does not act favorable by this Friday, have worked, or rather swam, without a contract since their previous one expired last February 1.

Raymond Chick, spokesduck, for the campus pond union, Ducks Against Mounting Neglect (DAMN), outlined the union's demands to be met by the administration.

First, and foremost, Chick said DAMN is demanding extra security by UMass police around the pond because of, what he termed, "increasing violence by UMass fraternities against the ducks."

In an emotionally tense press conference with the Collegian, Chick recounted what happened last year to his girlfriend, Marcy "Big Beak" Hopkins.

"Some members of Alpha Studly Si (ASS) fraternity invited Marcy to dinner, and before you knew it, she was dinner," Chick said.

Among other demands announced by DAMN, are: taking Duck sauce off the DC menu; serving whole wheat instead of "fattening, non-alternative Wonder Bread" to the ducks by the Physical Plant; placing extra lights around the pond to discourage sexual attacks by lecherous campus pond frogs; having the rock group Wings perform at the upcoming Community Day; and setting up a federal investigation into the alleged communist ideologies of the famous campus pond swans.

University spokesman, Aurthor Clipboard, responding to the demands made by DAMN, said "The administration will not negotiate with the ducks. They're just a bunch of quacks."

Campus administrators expressed mixed feelings about the suit early this morning after being woken by an unexpected phone call.

"Who the hell is this and what have your done with my sock straps," William Feeled, an administrator, commented.

Dryers—boo!

The words on everyone's lips lately has been 'bathroom.' Perhaps it's our ignorance of the subject, but it seems to us that one horrifying aspect of bathrooms is being seriously neglected by activists.

We are referring, of course, to those infernal hot air blowers that are supposed to dry our hands.

"Bring back paper towels!" should be the battle cry of every concerned student on campus.

Who can forget their first encounter with these semi-automatic annoyances? For some, like ourselves, it was a moment of drippy embarrassment after splashing our faces at the faucet.

Others may recall wiping their hands on their pants to dry them, or trying to share one of these diabolical vapor jets with a hand-wringing confederate.

While rubbing one's hands beneath this bathroom fixture, one is free to read the manufacturer's propaganda on the device. "This saves energy," it says. HA! Give us organic brown paper towels anyday.

Rumor has it, incidently, that Boyden Gym will (on an experimental basis), install giant versions of these machines to replace the traditional white towels. After showering, one will be forced to rub his/her entire body furiously for thirty seconds beneath a well-controlled blast of hot air.

While there is unquestionably no shortage of hot air at this university, it is time for the use of these hazardous, idiotic contraptions to be curtailed.

We are willing to leave our hands wet after washing. We would be happy to shake hands with the mysterious bathroom administrators who support the use of these machines, but we will not dry our hands with such an unnatural, uncomfortable system.

Fellow students, with our hands we can change the world. Let us no longer dry our hands beneath these mass-produced promoters of chapped skin; let's keep our hands wet, and show our feelings that way.

Reagan is cruel to animals

Moo-moo, oink-oink, woof-woof, cluck-cluck-cluck, meeeeeow! I'm a barnyard full of animals. But I'm protected. They can't get me.

If you (mew-mew) haven't heard, Ronald Raygun wants to put us all on tap. He wants to be able to draw us off at a moment's notice. He wants to reinstate the draught.

Rick Dancin

Light, dark, imported, domestic—he wants us all.

But not me. I'm a barnyard full of animals. Baaaaah-baaaaah.

It's a good thing, too. At first, when I heard it on the radio, I didn't know what it meant, "All men between the ages of 18 and 21 are to register for the draught." Oh, God! I thought. They're going to make me tend American bar. Probably at The Drake.

So I went to The Drake to sign up. (My dad told me the doctors at the field hospitals will treat me better if I'm an enlistee. Guys who wait to get draughted wind up with the big stitches.)

"Heineken draught, please," I said to the short woman behind the bar.

"We got no Heineken on tap, pal," she said, her long silken brown hair drooping over her round shoulders as if resting after a difficult journey.

"Are they draughting women too?" I asked.

"Huh?" she said.

"Did you enlist or did they draught you?" I asked.

"Whaaat? Hey look. We got Busch, Molson, Bud and Old Milwaukee on tap. What'll ya have. I ain't got all friggin day," she said, her eyes looking up at me, dark, tired, tragic. I sensed the anguish of her predicament—her fate governed by the will of a President gone mad. I recognized her need to divert attention from her deeply troubled mind to the trivial matters at hand.

"I'll have a...Bud," I said. Then, "Why are you here? Does your presence mean the Pentagon has the approval of Congress to put women in arms?"

She, banging the dripping mug down on the bar, said "Whose arms you talking about?"

"U.S. arms—tanks, bombs, missiles..."

"Look, I just work here. Okay? I gotta make money, pay the rent, eat—you know? Then she walked away with my dollar.

So that's it, I thought. Capitalism. Those vicious swine. Their military-industrial complex, her alientation of labor. It wasn't fair, but what was I to do? (Moo-moo?)

Then it occurred to me that if everyone is tending American bar, who will run America?

The answer lay before me. In fact, the answer was me. I was the answer, am the answer. I am the voice of all Americans who do not want draught, as the President has sought to impose it on the majority who oppose it.

But wait! This country is a democracy. So why isn't the majority hear?

Why? Because the majority is a heard. A heard of sheep. And cows. And pigs. (Oink-oink). And I am their representative. I'm a barnyard of animals.

Ronald Reagan's evil plan to put us all on tap should be fought vehemently by the ASPCA.

Fretters

Column is standard leftist drivel

Regarding Rick Dancin's vacuous column (Collegian, 4/1): I won't bother going into the inaccuracy of his evidence, the spuriousness of his analysis and the ludicrousness of his conclusions, as they are due to reappear in other forms, from various authors, again and again on these pages, at the discretion (if that is the word) of the editor. Mr. Mouth's mindless objection to our President's long overdue request for a full-scale draft does not compromise the standards of hysterical, rhetorical leftist drivel maintained on the editorial pages of the Collegian.

But I ask this: If the Collegian is the student newspaper of UMass, then why does it not express the opinions of the majority of UMass students? The Collegian should stop printing trash like Mr. Dancin's.

Autobon Waugh
Amherst

Letter is usual conservative rubbish

Regarding Autobon Waugh's pedantic response (Collegian, 4/1) to Rick Dancin's column (Collegian, 4/1), I can't believe the Collegian would deign to print such vicious rubbish. (Then again, maybe I can.)

Mr. Waugh's suggestion that the Collegian censure the opinions of what he views to be a minority, the left, is contemptable on two counts: First, who is he to say what is "leftist"? By reference of his political leanings we can assume that anything to the left of Genghis Khan is "leftist"—not a very reliable standard at a University in the Northeast. Second, how does he know that "leftists" are a minority at UMass? What evidence does he have that indicates most students share his (and Genghis Khan's) political beliefs.

I think perhaps people like Mr. Waugh are probably a minority, one which has recently, after twenty years' silence, become vocal upon viewing the success of conservatives in the political, financial and religious sectors (all overlapping) of the political economy.

They are all bastards, of course. The Collegian should not publish the views of bastards, or their proteges, for in doing so the paper popularizes and legitimizes bastardom.

Alexander Sunburn
Southwest

Censorship should be censored

Regarding Alexander Sunburn's simple-minded response (Collegian, 4/1) to Autobon Waugh's scurrilous suggestions (Collegian, 4/1) on Rick Dancin's column (Collegian, 4/1), I think a crucial point is overlooked.

Each of the two propose that the Collegian censure the views of the other. They are both advocating censorship, are casting the First Amendment to the winds of fascism! Clearly, letters like Sunburn's and Waugh's have no place in a free student press.

Pierre Blasé Sr.

Student fatally shot in meal tax crack down

By JEWELIE BIRDPERSON
Collegian Staff

A UMass student was shot and killed yesterday in the Campus Center Coffee Shop after he alledgedly refused to show his student identification card to a cashier who had rung up his purchase.

Police arrested cashier Martha M. Grimface, 46, of Sticks Road, Hadley, who is being held without bond at the Amherst Police Station, where she is undergoing investigation for the death of March N. Protest, a 21-year-old UMass junior of 10 Wheatberry St., Northampton.

According to police, UMass Security Officer Joe A. Lert heard the gun shot at 11 a.m. while he was on the Campus Center Concourse quelling a violent argument between members of the Unification Church and the Hari Krishna Foundation.

Lert sent a radio message for help, police said, and ran to the scene of the shooting, where he was quickly joined by Officers Miles Flackey and Harry Assment.

The officers spotted Protest, who Lert said was "still clutching his goddamn whole wheat bagel, lying in a pool of blood and surrounded by a group of stunned onlookers."

While Flackey called an ambulance, the other officers released Grimface from the grip of Neil Nukeson, a UMass senior and friend of Protest's. Nukeson was crying as he physically held down Grimface near the condiments table, according to Lert.

Protest was taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton where he was pronounced dead on arrival by Dr. Ida Seen Inuf.

Lert arrested Grimface, who was still holding a .45 handgun, at 11:08, while Flackey and Assment questioned about a dozen people who said they had witnessed the shooting.

State law requires that coffee shop customers show a student ID when they purchase items in order to be exempted from a tax on food.

Stunned silence permeated the popular campus eaterie, but one student interviewed, Lem E. Tellyue, an acquaintance of Protests's and a resident of the Social Awareness Corridor of Brett Dormitory in the Central Residential Area, relayed this account:

"That cashier was one of those real mean people, ya know? She's probably the kind of person who would eat her children's food when they weren't looking. Ya know what I mean?

"Anyway, she started hasslin' March. I saw her, mahn. She said, 'No ID, you gotta pay the tax.' March didn't have his ID, but he goes in there every day for a bagel, mahn. He knew the lady knew who he was, and that he shouldn't have to pay the tax. It was a principle thing, ya know?

"He didn't get violent or anything. He just put his 35 cents on the register and said something like, 'Think about it, lady.' Then she shot him."

The coffee shop was closed shortly after the incident, but it is scheduled to open tomorrow at 7 a.m. as usual, according to Ham Berger, director of Food Services.

It was learned early last night that various student groups were organizing a campus-wide boycott of the coffee shop.

the case of aerial bombardment."

The rule change came in response to many players' complaints about their vicitms' "wimp tactics." "They do things like run into a crowd," said ROTC cadet Milo Bomnlast, a "Killer" enthusiast, "Ever try to pick just one guy out of a packed bus stop with an M-16?"

Richard Neegle, whose tank fire killed ten today, was disqualified for having killed four more than the allowed number of "witnesses."

Mary Mayflower, spokesperson for the Raving Student Union, a radical middle-class student organization, is concerned about further escalation.

University Chancellor Henry A. Koffler said he thinks the game is "uncivil." He today formed a special Committee to Investigate "Killer" out of the year-old Chancellor's Commission on Well-Manneredness.

Reagan resumes work, Brady expected to live

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON—President Reagan rebounded yesterday from gunshot surgery in "exceptionally good condition" and with a strong dose of humor as he signed a major economic bill and resumed command of the country.

Vice President George Bush said the chief executive was rosy-cheeked and looked robust as he took up presidential business from his hospital bed early in the morning. Bush, meanwhile, assumed the president's day-to-day White House schedule.

Meanwhile, White House press secretary James Brady was described by Dr. Dennis O'Leary as having suffered "fairly extensive damage" to the right side of the brain.

"We believe he is going to live but we have no idea where he is going to end up," said O'Leary, a George Washington University hospital official serving as spokesman. White House deputy press secretary Larry Speakes said, he was "very optimistic" about Brady.

Brady, a Secret Service agent and a District of Columbia police officer were all hit by gunfire during the assassination attempt on Monday.

John Warnock Hinckley Jr. was given tranquilizers and held without bond at a Marine base in Virginia, awaiting trial on charges of attempting to assassinate the president and assault upon a federal officer.

Justice Department sources said yesterday they have found written evidence that Hinckley may have wanted to "go out and do something to get himself killed."

The letter, the sources said, was addressed to 18-year-old movie actress Jodie Foster and reflected that Hinckley, the 25-year-old son of a wealthy Denver oilman, was in an "I don't care what happens to me" frame of mind.

Secret Service studies protection

By ANN BLACKMAN
Associated Press

WASHINGTON—The Secret Service is off on the inevitable soul search, trying to answer how President Reagan could have been shot on home turf, barely a mile from the White House.

"These guys were competing with a bullet," said Jack Warner of the Secret Service, the agency charged with protecting presidents.

Warner said yesterday the service is conducting an in-house investigation, likely to take several weeks, to see whether the agents surrounding Reagan made any wrong moves or could have prevented the gunman from firing six shots at the president Monday afternoon as he was leaving the Washington Hilton Hotel.

"After reviewing the video tapes a dozen times, we believe the presidential protection was as effective as it could possibly be," Warner said. "These guys were competing with a bullet. They moved as quickly as they could."

Warner said the investigation, by the agency's office of inspection, is similar to those conducted after John F. Kennedy was assassinated in Dallas and Gerald R. Ford escaped injury in two separate California assaults. It will include extensive interviews with agents and other law officers at the scene, as well as eyewitnesses.

"The reason is to see whether we did everything that we should have," he said. "We have no answers yet."

On most occasions when Reagan leaves the White House, he is accompanied by at least a dozen Secret Service agents, all armed with handguns. Some carry small, light, Uzi submachine guns. In situations like the one he was in Monday, Reagan is proceeded out of the hotel by one agent. Several others walk on either side of him. As the president leaves a building, the agents form a human shield between him and everyone else. While he walks to his car, a time agents consider particularly vulnerable, the armored door is opened to provide another shield.

Agents follow Reagan's car in their own vehicle known as the "war wagon," a Cadillac with running boards for agents to stand on and a trunk filled with Uzi submarines, M-16 rifles and hand grenades.

The assault on Reagan was the first in the nation's capital since Puerto Rican Nationalists tried to storm the Blair House across the street from the White House to kill Harry S. Truman in 1952.

Despite extensive efforts by the Secret Service to protect the president, this photo of President Reagan shaking hands after a March 26 speach, shows how easy it is to get close to the president. The Secret Service is studying its own performance during the Monday assassination attempt to determine if anything should have been done differently.

Financial aid eligibility stalls student awards

By PAUL BELVAL
Collegian Correspondent

More than 1,000 University of Massachusetts students will not know the amount of aid they will receive until late April because of proposed changes on awards and eligibility for financial aid.

"The office is waiting for legislative changes to be approved on April 15," Ed Apodaca said. "A little over 10,000 students have applied within the deadline, and we are waiting for clarification of the federal guidelines on federal funds to send out the award letters."

Apodaca said that if the changes are approved the students would be notified of their actual awards. However, if the changes are rejected, tentative award letters will be sent out, and the amounts will be adjusted when the changes are finally passed.

"If the changes are not approved, it will be at least 45 days until we can send out the actual awards. There are still certain funds we would be able to award," Apodaca said.

Apodaca said that the average award each student receives this year will be less than last year because, although the amount of funds the University receives will "hopefully" be the same, only 4,000 students applied for aid last year.

Apodaca said that students interested in getting more information on financial aid should contact Students Advocating for Financial Aid (SAFA), a student organization.

PVTA financing studied by committee

By MALCOLM CAMPBELL
Collegian Correspondent

The Undergraduate Student Senate Coordinating Committee last night considered senate financial support for the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority, which has asked for a 100 percent funding increase to maintain the current level of service.

The committee evaluated possible means of meeting the proposed increase of $176,000 making a total student contribution of $350,000.

One option which students face is the installation of a 10 to 25 cent fee to be paid by student each time they ride a bus. The committee questioned whether this strategy would be as effective as a one-time increase of $10 per student in the Student Activities Trust Fund out of which the student contribution to the bus service is paid. Committee members suggested holding a referendum to determine student preferences.

The committee also considered setting up a new trust fund specifically designed to meet the costs of the transit service. Such a fund would appear on the semester bill as a transit fee. Several members of the committee were wary of this proposal feeling that it might put on-campus and off-campus students at odds. They argued that on campus students might see themselves as subsidizing transportation for off campus students. Coordinating committee members are scheduled to meet this morning with Transit Authority officials to further discuss student funding.

The committee also heard a plea from Joanne Levenson, coordinator of the off-campus housing office, to increase funding for the Commuter Collective by $4,500. The off-campus housing office receives its funding though the collective. Levenson said that her office is understaffed, underfinanced, and is not functioning as well as it could be.

Student activities director Randy Donant said the current reorganization of the University's student affairs division could result in the office being funded by that state, even though Dean of Students William Field believes that the state will not provide the necessary $25,000. Donant suggested that the state could be encouraged to assume the cost of child care programs presently funded by the commuter collective. These freed funds could then be transferred to the off campus housing office.

Grads vote partial budget

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Correspondent

The Graduate Student Senate last night voted unanimously to accept segments of their fiscal year 1982 budget and also voted in favor of endorsing the committee to fight cuts in the University of Massachusetts budget.

The Senate allocated $33,295 for salaries and fringe benefits in the Graduate Senate budget. This is a $1,040 increase from the present budget.

Michael Pazyra, Graduate student senate treasurer said that the increases were due to increase in the cost of living, and would increase salaries for the administrative assistant, and committee coordinator as well as increasing work study funds.

The operations section of the Senate budget was cut to $4,250, a $3,340 decrease, by eliminating duplicating and stationary costs, as well as by decreasing costs in the senate's University Store account.

The Graduate Student Senate also voted to support the platform of the Committee To Fight Budget Cuts. The committee's platform includes opposition to tuition increases and cuts in Financial Aid.

Graduate Senate Executive Officer Carole Counihan called on the Senate to support rallys sponsored by the committee at the April 14 Board of Trustees meeting in Boston, and at their April 19 meeting in Amherst.

In other business, the fellowship committee decided that $72,000 in fellowships would be divided equally between incoming graduate students and currently enrolled graduate students.

Shalamar
Three For Love [SOLAR]

By KEITH JOHNSON
Collegian Correspondent

There's a new sound coming out of L.A. these days and it glistens like tinsel town itself. It's the sound of one of the newest black-owned record companies called Sound of Los Angeles Records (SOLAR). President Dick Griffey leads a band of exciting groups that are constantly hitting the charts across the nation. Dynasty, Lakeside, and the Whispers are just a few of the top name groups on the SOLAR label.

Shalamar is one of those bright new groups on the SOLAR label. This young group consists of 25 year-old Howard Hewett, 21 year-old Jody Watley and 25 year-old Jeffrey Daniel. These three all have strong voices and a long prosperous future ahead of them.

The album Three For Love is one of the hottest albums out today. The number one hit song on this album is "Make That Move." It's an up-beat dance tune that has met much appreciation at clubs and parties across the country. It has that Shalamar, light-hearted sound. This song compares with their last big hit "Second Time Around."

When I think of Shalamar I think of upbeat dance music, but they proved me wrong with the song "For The Lover In You." The title describes it best in that this song is definitely for lovers. Here they show their versatility and it gives them a chance to prove that they can really blow.

Other songs on this album include "Attention to my Baby" is for all those ladies who feel there are no more trustworthy men around. "Somewhere There's A Love" is another nice easy love song that says there's somebody out there for everbody. You just have to go and find him or her. "Some Things Never Change" is another catchy upbeat tune. Like "Make That Move" it has that distinctive Shalamar sound that has kept them at the top of both the pop and Soul charts. Keep your eyes open for the SOLAR tour featuring not only Shalamar but also Lakeside & the Whispers.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

It's hard to be upbeat today

Jackson Katz

I wanted to say something real upbeat, like about how spring is here and how lucky we are to be alive and how we should try to enjoy ourselves and live for today and all that kind of stuff, but I can't.

I mean, I'm psyched that the weather is finally warming up, but I just can't stop thinking about what's going on the world these days.

Springtime, at least for me, has always been a time when I sit back and look at my life and my future. Usually, I end up feeling real good about things. But this spring, at least so far, I haven't really had all that much to be happy about.

For months, I've been worrying about registration, and whether or not they're gong to bring back the draft. Now, with what's going on in El Salvador and the possibility of Russia invading Poland, the prospects for a draft seem better than ever. And with all those right-wing hawks in the White House and Congress, who knows what's going to happen next?

Then, as if worrying about the stuff wasn't enough, I have to start worrying about budget cuts and tuition increases and cuts in financial aid and Social Security payments. Like so many other people, I have to really prepare myself for potentially drastic changes in my plans for the future. Just when I thought my life was beginning to pick up and I was really starting to enjoy it, I have to deal with all this.

Then there's the thing with the black children in Atlanta. Every time I'm feeling a little sorry for myself and I see someone with a green ribbon on, I feel even worse. I think about how trivial my problems are compared to some other people's, and I feel guilty.

And then there's the thing with the assassination attempt on Reagan. Regardless of how I feel about him or his administration, and how he's just about the worst thing to happen to this country since Nixon, I can't help but keep seeing the video tape of the attempted assassination in my mind over and over again and thinking how really violent a world we live in. I know this kind of thing happens all the time all over the world, and I know that in this country alone the murder and other violent crime rate is always increasing, but actually seeing it happen to someone you recognize is a lot different.

I know this is all pretty downbeat stuff, but like I said, I started out wanting to say something positive and uplifting. It's just that I think we have to keep things in perspective.

I want to be happy and optimistic, especially now that it's spring, but maybe I'm just finding out that the only way you can be that way is to ignore most of what's going on in this screwed up world. We're not innocent little kids anymore.

A heated debate

Once again the spring weather unfolds before my eyes, bringing forth this heart's desire to be outdoors. But, alas, I am obliged to do some homework first. I fight with myself and enter Morrill Library to find a new battle—the battle against excessive heating. All windows are open and the fans are on, but victory seems hopeless. It's about 70 degrees outside, but try to explain this to an impersonal heater who has been ordered by the physical plant to battle the alleged cold weather. The head librarian tells of the complete lack of control over the conditions, and estimates they will continue through next month no matter what the weather. It really doesn't take a Ph.D. in Common Sense to figure out this type of system is inefficient. Sheer logic tells me that each building, floor and room should have control over the heating. Those token thermostats just do not meet the necessary requirements. I really don't think we can afford to throw away the energy, nor the little money we have on such a clearly inefficient system. Some serious re-evaluation is in order. But, then again, that could be like the blind leading the blind—or, in this case, the investigated leading the investigation.

Dead Wire

UPC officials were giggling as they announced last week that Santana isn't really coming to Community Day. "We were just kidding," said a hysterical spokesperson.

UPC talent coordinator Frank Gironda was unavailable for comment, but he did say he may have something to say next week.

They did, however, announce the revamped concert package. The groups appearing will be Rust—A tribute to Neil Young, Crystal Ship—A tribute to The Doors, and The Blushing Brides—A tribute to The Rolling Stones.

One spokesperson close to the UPC was heard to say, "What the hell, we couldn't get the real bands so we got the next best thing."

Bryan Harvey, spokesman for Vice-Chancellor Dennis L. Madson, summed it up best when he exclaimed with glee, "This is just the kind of garbage the administration was hoping for. I bet no one goes now."

If you're looking for something to do tonight you might try Venitian Road Map—A tribute to Martian Highway in the basement of Goodell Library. Also appearing will be Amusing Triangles—A tribute to The Pleasure Dots.

Tickets are only $12.00 each so hurry or you might miss out.

The Rusty Nail was proud to announce last week that they have cleaned their bathrooms. A spokesperson for the club said, "We just wanted to see how disgusting they could get."

Patrons at Hangar One were surprised last weekend when a small twin engine plane landed on the dance floor. "We just don't understand what happened," said a spokesperson for the Hangar. Luckily, no one was hurt in the incident, but extensive damage was caused to the roof. The pilot said he only wanted to get a beer.

Lastly, if you're looking for that special gift for the Beatle fan in your life George Harrison's book, I Me Mine, is now available for the unbelievable bargain of $428.00. Don't forget it is leather bound and autographed by George himself.

A dream came true for UMass student Justin Griswold recently when Masschusetts Governor Ed King presented him with a coloring book and a chance to attend UMass for an additional four years. "I didn't mind the long hair," King said later, "but he could have at least have taken a bath!"

Gorillas chew Big Red, 16-8

By STEPHEN FREKER
Collegian Staff

It was not too difficult a task to determine that yesterday afternoon's clash between the Big Red laxmen of Cornell and University of Massachusetts head coach Dick Garber's Gorillas was a game of importance, for both teams.

Massachusetts wanted to prove that it was capable of defeating Cornell, a team which has been a formidable opponent for the Gorillas, and the Big Red wished to demonstrate that it was worthy of its pre-season ranking of sixth nationally.

Buoyed by a supportive crowd of about 2000, which lined up in and around Boyden field, and a stalwart Gorilla defense, Garber's crew showed their stuff early and sent Cornell back to Ithaca empty-handed, defeating the Red 16-8.

Massachusetts was seeking a measure of revenge yesterday. Last year they were stung, 13-9, in Ithaca and two years ago they were on the wrong end of an overtime thriller here at Boyden.

"It feels great to beat them. Two years ago we lost in overtime here and it was a real bender," Garber said. "We outhustled them today. They're a quick team but they couldn't run us off the field."

Hustle was indeed the catchword for Massachusetts against Cornell, on both ends of the field. An early goal by the Red's Tarik Ergin broke the scoring ice in the first quarter, but the rest of the half belonged to the Gorillas. Senior attacker Skip Vosburgh and tri-captains Peter Schmitz and Chris Corin ran the Massachusetts passing offense exceptionally well, keeping the ball in the Cornell end for long stretches in the first half.

When the Big Red did make it into the Gorilla zone, defensemen Doug Brown and senior tri-captain Paul Kinnane, who was outstanding throughout the game, were there to turn back the intruders. Brown made it known early that Cornell was not welcome in the UMass end when he hammered Big Red middie Paul Roland right in front of the Cornell bench to knock the ball loose.

"I was pleased with our defensive play today and Paul Kinnane played overwhelmingly," Garber said.

Kinnane was instrumental in maintaining the Gorilla lead with his seeing-eye passes out of the zone when Cornell did manage to work it in. At the opening of the second half, Kinnane made a pretty play when he scooped up the ball and passed it to Schmitz. Schmitz found Corin and Corin fed junior Jim Weller for one of Weller's career game-high seven goals.

UMass' Jim Weller (number 2), scores one of his seven goals in yesterday's lacrosse win over Cornell. The Gorillas host UConn at 3 today at Boyden Field.

Weller, who tallied two assists along with his scoring blasts, was fifth nationally in scoring at season's end last year and could be starting another prodigal point-getting journey.

"They (UMass middies) just gave me the ball a lot and I put it away," Weller said. "But that's my job. This game was a team effort."

Weller did more than score yesterday. He, Kinnane and Vosburgh introduced themselves to many Cornellians by sticking them hard all over the field. On one play, near the end of the first half, Weller sent the Red's Roland sprawling with a face-hit to the numbers. Kinnane picked up the loose ball and made a field-long rush only to be upended two feet short of Cornell's cage.

Another key to the game was the success of senior middie Tom Walters on the faceoffs. After losing the first one to Cornell at the start of the game, the Albertson, N.Y. native took the rest in the half. The Gorillas were able to get initial possession every time Walters came up with the ball and they didn't let it go.

The Big Red tried a comeback with three quick goals in the third quarter, cutting the Massachusetts lead to five, 11-6. Cornell also established a tough, reborn defense which held the Gorillas scoreless for most of the quarter until back-to-back scores by Weller, at 12:13 and 12:20, rebuilt the margin to 13-6.

Gorilla goalie Chris Benedetto had a lot of company in the fourth quarter and it wasn't all friendly. Kinnane had his hands full as did freshman John Mincone and Mark Fierro when Cornell decided to make a rush at the Massachusetts lead. The Red's Paul Mercer and Earle Weaver (no relation to the Orioles' Earl) scored back-to-back goals with five minutes left, getting within five again 13-8, but this was as close as Cornell was going to get.

The Gorilla attackets settled down and killed some time and Karl Hatton, a freshman, scored his second of the day at 13:26 to put it away.

"We have nine seniors on the team, and this is the first time in four years that we beat them," Corin said. "It's gonna make a difference over the rest of the season. We're riding high."

Lowell spoils softball opener with 6-0 shutout

By SHARON PANNOZZO
Collegian Staff

Shocked and disappointed were the only words UMass varsity softball coach Elain Marasco could muster after her team was surprisingly defeated by the University of Lowell in yesterday's game.

UMass was shut-out in their home opener 6-0.

"You can't expect to win when you have to play catch-up ball throughout the entire game," Marasco said.

Lowell took an early 2-0 lead in the first inning. With one out and bases loaded, mittwoman pitcher Kathy O'Connell walked Linda Rudenecki to give Lowell its first score of the season. The second run came when Marlene Monto hit a deep drive to left field allowing the runner on third base to come home.

UMass' only scoring threat came in the second inning. When designated hitter Mary Jo Forbes walked and was replaced by Mary Ann Lombardi who stole second base. First baseman Madeline Mangini took the plate and belted a double through the hold between third base and shortstop. With players on second and third base, second baseman Debbie Pickett struck-out and leftfielder Pam Purdy hit a slow grounder back to the pitcher for the last out, ending the threat.

After four scoreless innings, Lowell added another run to their total, increasing their lead to 3-0. After a passed ball by catcher Jacqueline Gaw allowed Lisa Marson to advance to second base, Maureen Conroy hit a ground ball into right [illegible] to [illegible] at home.

Offensively the mittwomen were dormant. With only three hits scattered throughout the game, they were unable to sustain a threat. Catcher Gaw had one of the three UMass hits in the first inning but was forced out by Allyson Roiux. In the fourth inning Brenda Simmons hit a single, but was left on base. An error by the Lowell thirdbaseman in the sixth inning allowed Simmons to get on base again, but she was also left.

Lowell pitcher Patty McQuinn effectively controlled the tempo of the game, with three strike-outs to her credit. "She pitched a very good game," Marasco said. "Although, I think our lack of hitting power made her look better than she actually was."

Starter Kathy O'Connell finished the game for UMass, giving up eight hits. She walked one and had no strike-outs.

The Lowell offense erupted in the top of the seventh beginning with freshman Andrea Azzarito's homerun to deep left field. With a woman on base, leftfielder Deborah Toppi hammered a triple down the leftfield line. A passed ball by UMass' Mangini allowed Toppi to score giving Lowell a 6-0 victory.

The entire UMass bench appeared stunned and speechless after their opening loss to Lowell, a team they anticipated defeating. A sluggish offense and lackadaisical defense, which committed three costly errors, allowed an inferior Lowell team to shut-out the number one team in the East. The squad will have to regroup before their next game against [illegible] at home.

Grad Senate votes to end the world

The Graduate Student Senate last night voted to end the world because they said they are "sick of people ignoring our other resolutions."

The group has voted on resolutions in the past such as the end to nuclear arms, but the arms race continued in spite of their vote.

"We figured if we end the world, it will really show people we mean business." said an unidentified spokesman. He said the group will sit on the lawn in front of the Student Union Building waiting for the end of the world, "We've scheduled it for 12 noon, but you know the red tape around this place. It might not happen till 1" he said.

Lou Grant to join Collegian as mentor

Lou Grant, a veteran television and newspaper editor immortalized in two television series, was appointed last night to the posistion of news advisor to the Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

Grant, who many people know as actor Ed Asner, is a real editor who previously worked as producer and news director at WJM-TV in Minneanapolis, Minnesota, and as city editor of the now defunct Los Angeles Tribune. Grant, who has been unemployed for the past six months, was the model for the character int the "Mary Tyler Moore Show" and the current TV drama, "Lou Grant."

Grant replaces former news advisor Wendy Lavallee who, mysteriously, never returned from a recent vacation in Europe. Rumors throughout the journalistic community indicate that Lavallee, a former United Press International Editor, may now be working for a weekly picture magazine in Paris' red light district.

Grant, who will begin next week, will receive a salary of $93.50 each week and is scheduled to move into his new residence on the 21st floor of Kennedy Tower in South west.

Soap fans against pre-emption of GH

A group of about 500 University of Massachusetts students announced yesterday that they will take "direct action" against the ABC television network if their demands to "never again pre-empt General Hospital are not met.

Avid Fan, a spokesperson for the group calling itself People United to Save Our Favorite Soap Opera From An Irresponsible Television Network (PUSOFSOFAITVN), said the organization has written telegrams to the network asking for a public promise to never again cancel the show.

NEVER AGAIN CANCEL THE SHOW.

Group members said they were upset That the show was pre-empted by ABC for coverage of the assasination attempt on President Ronald Reagan.

The group announced that it would take "direct action" against the network if it did not comply. Sources said the action could include a take-over of the network 's New York studios, during which the program would be continously aired by the activists.

ABC issued no comment.

Provost says UM begets narrow-minded specialists

Since his arrival at the University of Massachusetts a year ago, Provost Lawrence Bazzint has placed as his number one priority the restructuring of undergraduates to leave the University with a narrow view of the world by requiring or encouraging them to take courses only in their professional fields, to the exclusion of subjects in the humanities.

The Collegian interviewed Bazzint and asked him how current undergraduate curricula create narrow-minded specialists, and so what.

COLLEGIAN: Larry, you think UMass turns out a lot of students who know FORTRAN but can't quote Shakespeare. What the hell, do you think they're a danger to society?

BAZZINT: I wouldn't put it that way. I think a college graduate who lacks an appreciation of the world outside his own society has been deprived of an education.

COLLEGIAN: Well, as you know Larry, most students are here to get job training, essentially. Some of these kids come out of UMass with degrees in Engineering and Chemistry, for example,and get jobs with starting salaries of 25 grand and make more than dad who's been working at the foundary for thirty years. Isn't that enough, or do you think that if they can buy a set of Sterling silverware, they should know which fork to use?

BAZZINT: No, I don't think that's the point at all. My concern is with the question of whether students are getting the education they need in order to live rewarding lives, That knowledge goes beyond that required to make a living.

COLLEGIAN: No kidding? You mean if I got a Porsche 924, a nice apartment on Commonwealth Ave. in Boston, eat at Anthony's Pier Four twice a week, and have bucks left over to blow on Thai-weed and coke, that I'll be happier for understanding Camus and Marx?

BAZZINT: I don't think the kind of student you are referring to is representative of UMass students with bachelor's degrees.....

COLLEGIAN: You're right about that, Larry. Not every student makes the grade. And those that don't are just sore when they start babbling about how great it is to be versed in the classics. Which they can recite in the comfort of their rat-hole in th South End.

BAZZINT: Education and training aren't mutually exclusive. That's my point...

COLLEGIAN: Sure they aren't. Thanks for your time anyway, Larry.

According to McLaughlin, he has discovered a technicality in the NCAA rules that will grant Notre Dame standout, Kelly Tripucka another year of eligibility. Tripuck has been convinced to transfer to UMass and will captain McLaughlin's 1982-83 team after sitting out a year.

"Who cares about the pros," Tripucka said recently. "It would be great to play in Amherst in front of such supportive fans."

To garner early support for his yearling team, McLaughlin has indicated that "he will to into the dorms and get some people who will stand behind the visiting bench and scream their heads off."

Apparently he has met with some success. Five brothers from an unnamed frat have volunteered to do shots of Jack Daniels and Peppermint Schnapps at the game until they puke, and when they do get the urge to heave, they'll do it right on the visiting players in an effort to distract the team. They've even offered to give visiting teams a "UMass welcome" with brass knuckles and bats if asked.

"This is the type of spirit I'm looking for," McLaughlin said.

Word around town at the recent NCAA convention in Miami was that hookers were terribly overpriced. "What's intercollegiate athletics coming to when you can't get laid for less than $50?" asked Joe Robbins, athletic director at the University of Oklahoma... Duquesne University announced earlier this week that it had hired Ted Borseti for the athletic department's newly formed "get tough" program. Borseti, a chronic alcoholic from Medford, Mass., will be in charge of teaching the Catholic University's 4,000 student student-athletes the finer points of getting blasted. "As a Catholic school, we're notorious for producing athletes who are unfamiliar with heavy partying," says Dukes' athletic director Red Manning. "We think Borseti will be able to do the job of familiarizing our kids with potential futures in professional sports, where the ability to drink 14 boilermakers without barfing is as important as being able to hit a clutch free throw."

Good luck to Jim Mosier, the center out of UMass whom the Celtics plan to take in the upcoming draft... Quiz answer: sado-masochism, you dumb shit, you.

Saw George "the Boomer" Scott the other day in Winter Haven. Cheerful and friendly as ever, Boomer waved a greeting as he held up a local liquor store down by Chain O' Lakes park... Not only did the 10-year PGA pro shit in his pants on national television, he is currently up on manslaughter charges after that tremendous fart he cut killed three spectators. Stay away from the beans, Ray.

LOTS OF BASKETBALL FANS—Attendance was high at the recent intramural championship game in the intramural basketball league. GQ II defeated Horsefeathers, 49-44 before a crowd of 37,283, just ten shy of the record at Boyden Gym for intramural spectators.

Baseball team to UMass: Adios amigos

By MOO MOO MORELLI
Collegian Snapper

SAN DIEGO—In a move that has shocked both school athletic officials and administrators, the University of Massachusetts baseball team has refused to return from its recent spring trip, where it participated in the Sun-Lite Classic tournament at San Diego State University.

UMass athletic director Frank P. McInerney yesterday confirmed reports that the team has notified him of their intention to remain in San Diego.

University officials fear the team has become Californian.

UMass head coach Dick Bergquist, reached for comment in San Diego yesterday, also confirmed reports of the team's decision.

"Um, yeah, man. Like, that's the deal," Bergquist said in a telephone interview. "We sat down by the jacuzzi the other day and rapped about it for a while and, like, we came to an understanding, man. We're staying."

Bergquist cited better playing conditions, superior facilities and the availability of hot tubs and young blondes as reasons for the team's decision.

The UMass baseball team shown in the jacuzzi, located on the sight of the UMass/San Diego campus, shortly after their decision to remain in California.

Reports indicate the team will ask UMass President David C. Knapp for de facto recognition as the university's fourth campus in addition to the three facilities in Amherst, Boston and Worcester.

Knapp's office in Boston yesterday declined comment.

Team spokesman Lawrence Mackeral Jacobs yesterday said sever players intend to further their undergraduate careers by drinking and chasing women.

Jacobs added that several players are now professional bums in addition to full-time students. One player, third baseman Barry Chester Bennett, is currently living on a beach with his three wives.

Asked whether team members would be able to pursue an equally demanding academic program while surrounded by so many distractions, Jacobs replied, "Burp."

'Red' deals-Mosier to Celtics

By BOOB RYEAND (a dirty glass)
Doctor of Hoopology

BOSTON—The cigar had been lit and the call had been made to Dave Wong's China Sails restaurant. Boston Celtics general manager Arnold "Red" Auerbach wanted an extra large order of his favorite food last night.

He had a good reason to celebrate because he's pulled off still another coup in his long list of successful wheelings and dealings in the National Basketball Association in his 23-year career.

In a press conference at the Board and Blades club in Boston Garden last night, Auerbach announced that he had traded backup center Rick Robey to the Dallas Mavericks for their first round draft pick and Maverick forward Abdul Jeelani. Since Dallas has the worst record in the NBA, this pick would be the first in this year's college draft. This was part one of Auerbach's surprise.

Part two came when the master of player personnel said that he intended to use that number one pick to choose a local product, center Jim Mosier of the University of Massachusetts Minutemen.

"We've seen Jim (Mosier) play several times at the Curry-Hicks Cage and we liked what we saw," Auerbach said. "We feel that he'll be an able replacement for Robey, who just wasn't doing the job for us."

Mosier, who still has one year of college eligibility left, could not be reached for comment as to whether he'll sign when picked by the Celtics, or finish out his college career in Amherst.

Newly-appointed UMass head coach, Tom McLaughlin, had some advice for the future Celtic.

"I've seen some good ones in South Bend (McLaughlin was formerly an assistant coach at Notre Dame), and Mosier rates right up there with them," McLaughlin said. "But sometimes it's better to finish your college career like Ralph Sampson at Virginia, so that you can polish up your skills."

"Mosier has the raw talent," former UMass coach Ray Wilson said. "But he still might be a little rough around the edges for the NBA."

"A lot of NBA scouts overlook players in New England so I was lucky to get a shot at Mosier," Auerbach said. "Jim certainly has the potential to be a good one. UMass can produce this kind of player. Dr. J went there, didn't he?"

Blackmail in Amherst

Good morning! In honor of the recent arrival of spring, this morning I feast on a breakfast of mushrooms, Budweiser and mescaline. Happy days... Everyone had a pretty good laugh in Winter Haven the other day when Red Sox manager Ralph Houk swallowed a bit of his chew of tobacco and puked all over the place. "This job makes me sick," the old bastard quipped between retches...

Interesting story behind the firing of UMass-Amherst head basketball coach Ray Wilson, who was replaced by former Notre Dame assistant Tom McLaughlin. "Oh, it was nothing special," explains UMass AD Frank McInerney. "As we did with most prospective candidates for the job, we got Tom ridiculously drunk and drugged him. When Tom came to, he just happened to be surrounded by some pretty good looking blondes. A University photographer also just happened to be in the area and snapped some fine shots. They came out great. Surprisingly, Tom was quite eager to sign a contract with us—after we gave him back the negatives, of course."

THOUGHTS WHILE SHITTING—Nice to hear Larry Bird has finally come out of the closet... If Dennis Eckersley could ever stay away from getting toasted, roasted and totally shitfaced the night before games at Daisy Buchanan's, maybe he'd be a 20-game winner again... If Dick Schofield, Lucky Luciano, Huck Finn, Chuck Thompson and Bucky Dent were ever on the same baseball team, that team would have a lineup consisting of

Aggies replace basketball squad

In a move that will "shake things up a little around here," newly-appointed head men's basketball coach, Tom McLaughlin, has cut all present members of the team from the roster.

In another unprecedented move, McLaughlin has announced that in the future, all home games will be played on an outdoor court which will be constructed on the Amherst Town Common.

When asked to explain these seemingly drastic moves, McLaughlin replied, "The new facility will definitely draw the crowds since it is in such close proximity to the places most frequented by UMass students. It is centrally located to the Pub, the Drake, Barsilotti's and other watering holes."

McLaughlin said that he will replace the players he cuts with the present Stockbridge team and a smattering of all-stars from the UMass intramural basketball league.

Professional employees to get pay increases

By DEBORAH ASBRAND
Collegian Staff

Six percent pay increases for University of Massachusetts professional employees, the only campus group that has no collective bargaining unit, are scheduled to become effective later this month.

Representatives of the Union of Professional Employees, not yet officially recognized as a bargaining unit, said announcement of the pay increase for professional staff members will not stop their drive to establish a union.

UMass President David C. Knapp's office issued a memo last week to all campuses stating that pay increases for all non-faculty professional employees had been approved.

In response to criticism from members of the Massachusetts Society of Professors, who have not yet received pay increases outlined in their contract negotiated in January, the Board of Trustees voted yesterday to delay implementation of the staff raises for 10 days.

The trustees approved the 10 day delay after being assured that Gov. Edward J. King will approve the faculty-librarian contract within that period, said Mark Horan of the Office of University Relations.

A UPE ad hoc organizing committee has been working to form a union to represent approximately 500 professional employees on the Amherst campus.

Union members would include University employees such as directors, assistant directors, accountants and computer programmers.

"I tend to look at the raises as the first increases the UPE has negotiated," said Dale Melcher, a member of the ad hoc committee.

"For the University to bend over backwards like this is an attempt to stop the union drive, as well as discredit the other two unions," she said. "It is quite clearly an attempt to union bust."

MSP President Peter D'Errico said he expects his union's contract to reach the legislature within the next two or three weeks. He said he does not foresee much opposition from members of the legislature.

UPE representatives said they are confident a better deal could have been struck if they had entered into negotiations with the administration as a bargaining unit.

"We could almost be certain that if we were unionized we could have negotiated a better deal," said Joan Stoia, a member of the ad hoc organizing committee.

"We are all loyal and hardworking members of the University community, yet as state employees we are in for hard times, as are firefighters, policemen and teachers," Stoia said. "The only protection against upheaval in the Commonwealth is unionization."

Former AG named trustee chair

Former State Attorney General Robert H. Quinn was elected chairman of the new University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees at their second meeting yesterday at the UMass central offices in Boston.

Quinn, 53, of Milton, was chosen by a nominating committee to chair the eight member board. He was unanimously approved by the full board. The new board was appointed by Gov. Edward J. King in late February to work under the newly-created Board of Regents for higher education in Massachusetts.

The tri-campus UMass system was formerly governed soley by a 24-member Board of Trustees.

Trustee Andrew C. Knowles, 44, of Weston, was nominated and unanimously elected of the Board's Budget and Financial Affairs Committee. Trustees also elected Trustee Frederick S. Troy, a retired professor and former member of the old trustee board, to be chair of the Academic and Student Affairs Committee.

The third standing trustee committee, the Executive Committee, will be chaired by Quinn. Its membership will consist of Knowles, Troy and Trustee George R. Baldwin, 38, of Weston.

Trustees also approved a tenured professorship for former UMass President Robert C. Wood. Starting next fall, Wood will teach political science and urban studies at the UMass-Boston campus.

Wood, who was president of the University from 1970 to 1978, was recently fired as Superintendent of Public Schools in Boston.

State college professors threaten to skip classes

By JAMES SIMON
Associated Press

BOSTON—Professors at the 10 state colleges, who have worked without a contract since July, vow they'll shut down classes for 30,000 students Monday unless the Legislature comes through with their longdelayed pay raise.

"They're still playing chicken with us, pushing us up until the deadline," John McHale, a professor of English at Salem State College, said yesterday. "We just want to practice our profession. Nobody would rather march in a picket line than read a book, especially a teacher."

McHale heads the Salem chapter of the Massachusetts State College Association, which represents 1,800 professors and librarians at the 10 campuses.

The association approved a contract proposal, calling for a 25.7 percent pay hike over three years, on Oct. 30, 1980, union officials said. But the Legislature has not yet appropriated money for it.

The funding is part of a package of state employee pay hikes that was approved by the House recently.

The Senate Ways and Means committee was scheduled to act on the bill today. Consideration by the full Senate also could come tomorrow, and Gov. Edward J. King has indicated he will quickly sign the bill.

But the teachers, who have tried informational picketing, work slowdowns and demonstrations at the Statehouse to force approval of the bill, remain skeptical.

"We've heard this before. We just know that we'll either have a funded contract by Monday — or we'll be on strike," said William Belanger, a union chief and physics professor at Worcester State College.

The state college system also has campuses in Boston, Bridgewater, Fitchburg, Framingham, North Adams and Westfield, plus the Massachusetts Maritime Academy in Buzzards Bay and the Massachusetts College of Art in Boston.

"We have a contingency plan for all of this, but we're optimistic the Legislature will come through in time," said Edmund Pignone, general counsel to the state Board of Regents. "We will try to keep the campuses open and allow those professors who want to teach to do so — unless the health and safety of people is affected."

The pay raises for the teachers and librarians, who currently average $21,400 a year, would be retroactive to last July. The raises will cost the state $2.06 million for the current fiscal year, union officials said.

"The students are very upset by all of this, and justifiably so," said Jack Conklin, a professor and union leader at North Adams State. "I know I have a very deep commitment to the students and don't like to have to do something like this.

"We're not a reckless organization. We have tried to work through the political process...But we've gone without a salary increase in five of the last eight years now, and this is the last act of a pretty frustrated group of people."

Court refuses to rule on repeal of Prop. 2½

By STEVEN A. COHEN
Associated Press

BOSTON—A Superior Court judge ruled yesterday that Masschusetts' tax-cutting Proposition 2½ law was "constitutionally adopted" by the voters in November—and it is no business of the courts to decide whether the law is "wise or witless."

"This court concludes that this inititative act...has been constitutionally adopted by the people of the commonwealth and is presently in full force and effect," Judge William G. Young said in ruling on a consolidated suit brought by police unions and the Massachusetts Teachers Association.

"The court expresses no opinion whatsoever concerning whether the act, in its operation, will impair the obligation of contracts or deny to any of the citizens of the commonwealth equal protection of the laws," Young also said.

He said that, "in view of the public importance of the matters at issue, and the need for final appellate review," he was forwarding his decision to the state Appeals Court but recommending that the Supreme Court take jurisdiction.

"It should be noted that this court's proper concern is with the technical aspects of the adoption of the act and the constitutional provisions thus adopted on their face," Young said in his 70-page ruling.

"This court expresses no opinion whatsoever concerning the substantive police choices implicated by the people's decision. As it has said before, whether Proposition 2½ is wise or witless, farsighted or foolish, is no business of the courts."

Carol Doherty, president of the teachers' association, said the case would be up for appellate review automatically, "but in any case, the need for long term tax relief still stands."

State Sen. Alan D. Sisitsky, the first legislator to call for repeal of Prop 2½, said, "The issue has never been its constitutionality but its wisdom."

Prop 2½, sponsored by a group called Citizens for Limited Taxation, was approved by voters on a 3-2 margin in the November election.

Its principal effect is to cap property taxes at 2½ percent of the full market value of a community's real estate. This proviso takes effect with the new fiscal year July 1, and municipal officials claim it will result in severe budget cuts and public employee layoffs.

Estimates of the full first year revenue loss range to $600 million, with up to 20,000 jobs lost.

Most provisions of Prop 2½ affect local government and local revenues, but Young also upheld the proviso allowing renters to deduct one-half their annual rent payments from their state income tax obligations.

U.S. Senate nears legislation on passage of budget reductions

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press

WASHINGTON —President Reagan's budget-cutting allies in the Senate fought off renewed challenges with ease yesterday, moving slowly toward a final vote on legislation to force spending reductions of $87 billion over three years.

Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker had hoped for final passage late in the day, but said the deadline might slip until today.

Aides said Democrats were threatening to force time-consuming roll call votes on a dozen or more attempts to restore some of the cuts proposed for their favorite programs.

But most efforts appeared doomed to failure as Baker, R-Tenn., and Budget Committee Chairman Pete Domenici, R-N.M., demonstrated time and time again they had the votes to pass the president's proposals virtually intact.

The latest challenges to fail included:

—One by Sen. Lowell Weicker, a Republican from Connecticut who has bucked the administration at times over spending. He sought $143 million more in 1982 to continue the Small Business Administration non-disaster loan program.

That was money Reagan originally proposed spending. But when the Budget Committee voted last month to cut it, there was no protest from the White House. The vote on the Senate floor to endorse the cut was 68-28.

—A proposal by Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., and several other Democrats to rearrange the cuts in energy programs, reducing the nuclear budget the president wants increased and restoring some of the administration's proposed reductions in solar, conservation and fossil fuel programs.

The proposal would have cut the budget by $13 million more than Reagan wanted, but would have allocated the money far differently and would have maintained funding for the Solar and Conservation Energy Bank the administration wants to eliminate. The vote to stick with the administration proposal was 65-32.

—A proposal by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., to restore $250 million of the proposed cuts for 1982 and 1983 for preventive and community health. It was turned back on a 62-36 vote.

Former prime minister attempts to regain power in Thailand

BANGKOK, Thailand —Forces loyal to ousted Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanonda were reported driving on Bangkok from three directions yesterday in an attempt to retake power. But the military commander who toppled Prem in a bloodless coup said he had "20 times" more troops than Prem and ordered them to "suppress drastically any threat of disorder."

Despite the tense faceoff, Bangkok was quiet, with traffic normal and most businesses open. There were no reports of violence or arrests by soldiers who supported the coup leader, Gen. Sant Chitpatima, and who were guarding all government buildings with machine guns and armored cars.

Former Gov. Sargent in good condition after surgery.

BOSTON—Former Gov. Francis W. Sargent underwent a three-hour open-heart operation yesterday to bypass two clogged coronary arteries and repair a potentially lifethreatening heart condition.

By the Associated Press

Sargent, 65, was reported in good condition after the operation at Brigham and Women's Hospital.

"Gov. Sargent underwent coronary artery surgery to bypass a blockage in his coronary arteries and to relieve the chest pain and the threat of sudden death accompanying such blockage," said James P. King, a hospital spokesman.

His surgeon, Dr. Lawrence Cohn, removed a piece of vein from Sargent's leg and used it to reroute blood around the clogged heart arteries.

Haig pushes for agreement of American forces in Middle East

WASHINGTON —Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., who departs tomorrow for the Middle East, hopes to nail down the framework of an agreement on stationing American forces as part of a peacekeeping force in the Sinai Desert, informed officials said yesterday.

He also wants to underline for Saudi Arabia the general U.S. commitment to defend the oil-rich Persian Gulf against Soviet-inspired aggression, said the officials, who asked not to be identified by name.

Haig will visit Egypt, Israel, Jordan and Saudi Arabia during the eight-day trip in addition to scheduled stops in Madrid and London. Officials said yesterday other stops also are being considered.

Kocot, Mangan sworn in as SGA co-presidents

Student Senate ushers in new leaders in light-hearted ceremony

By KATHLEEN HOWLEY
Collegian Staff

Larry Kocot and Kevin Mangan were sworn into office last night as the new Student Government Association co-presidents in a fifteen minute ceremony held before the Undergraduate Student Senate.

Ed Lee was also sworn into office as the new senate speaker, and Richard Goldman became the new treasurer.

In the lighthearted ceremony, during which the senators began humming, "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," Kocot and Mangan placed their hands on a copy of the senate constitution and were asked, "do you swear to do a hell of a good job?" As a picture was taken of the new and old officers together, a senator shouted from the floor, "Is there room up there for all those egos?"

"I hope the new co-Presidents will do well," said former co-President Rich LaVoiee, who helped swear his replacements into office. "They're going to need a lot of luck."

"There's a lot of work to be done," LaVoice added, "and if this body stays with it, maybe we can win some battles."

LaVoice said he still planned to work with the student government this semester.

"As Kevin and I step into office we have a lot of issues facing us. We have to work together," Kocot told the senators.

Kocot specifically mentioned the proposed tuition increases and the current problems facing the University of Massachusetts transit system.

Mangan said he would "put his heart and soul" into his new job.

"I think there's going to be a pretty big change in this student government as far as people go," Mangan said. "I'll try to do the best job I can. "Things look really good so far, so lets keep it rolling."

The Senate also passed by acclaimation a motion to commend the former officers for "outstanding service to the student governemtnt."

In other business, the senate tabled for the second time a motion to recall Michael Cohen as clerk of courts. The motion which requires a two-thirds vote of the senate to pass, will be considered at the senate meeting next week.

The Ad-hoc Judicial Board which was set up by the senate to review the charges against Cohen provided the senators with copies of their decision to recommend that Cohen not be removed as judge and clerk of courts.

"There was never any concrete evidence that Michael Cohen had abused his power. There was a lot of heresay," said Carl Hoffman, Chair of the review board.

He said he wanted to emphasize that the review was not a trial.

"It was solely an attempt to present the facts to the senate unbiasedly," Hoffman said.

The senate also passed a motion to endorse a national demonstration against U.S. intervention in El Salvador which will be held May 3 in Washington D.C.

Former CIA director speaks on foreign relations issues

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Correspondent

Stansfield Turner, retired United States admiral and director of the Central Intelligence Agency during the Carter Administration, addressed a filled Johnson Chapel at Amherst College last night on the U.S. economy, military and foriegn relations.

"The U.S. faces a world-wide responsibilty now more than ever," Turner said.

Turner said the U.S. providing leadership and aid to the free world will be difficult because of "restrictions in lesser country's due to the supply and costs of energy."

Turner said that a CIA report showed that in five to eight years the growth of free world energy supplies would be at a rate of only one percent, and that this would not be in balance with the economy.

"I question whether the U.S. can keep lesser developing countries on an equal level," Turner said.

Turner believes that the U.S. should use its economic strength of the U.S. as a weapon. He said that economic warfare was the first sanction applied to both the Iran crisis and the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, but that the U.S. didn't know how to use this type of warfare.

By considering the empty results of the sanctions applied to Iran, Turner said, "mechanisms are not set in the U.S. to do this,"and the attempt to retaliate against the Iranians "was not well tuned."

He added that "the U.S. must study economic warfare more closely.'

Turner said that over the past five years a conception has grown in the U.S. and abroad that the Soviets have military supremacy over the U.S.

"Whether it is true or not, it has influenced behavior and caused a difficult problem in respect to the military," Turner said.

"The Soviets have no prayer competing with the U.S. economically, but since World War II they have had the larger army," said Turner, adding that the U.S. must keep technicalogically ahead of the Soviets.

He also said that the NATO allies have lost some confidence in the U.S.

Former CIA Director Stansfield Turner addresses a full house at Amherst College last night.

"It is very important to have unity and resolve in the alliance," Turner said.

On possible military intervention by the Soviets into Poland, Turner said that it was a different situation than in Hungary in 1956 and Czechslovakia in 1968 because the deviation is among the people rather than with the government.

In El Salvador, he said that "the administration's strong stand is helpful in showing the world that the U.S. will be strong in the future."

Shirley Baptiste, a former Dominican nun speaks at the Campus Center Tuesday night about her religous experience.

Student tells of nun's life: calls it not challenging

By ROBIN MANDEL
Collegian Correspondent

A former nun who spoke at the University of Massachusetts Tuesday night said she left the order because she found after 15 years that the lifestyle was not challenging and too restrictive.

Shirley Baptiste, a UMass doctoral student, told a group of about 10 people in the Campus Center, "I had a strong desire to get my Ph.D. and to become a lawyer, but the religious structure forbade my doing so. I had to teach because that was what the convent determined I should do."

Baptiste said her reason for leaving the convent was that her life had not been intellectually stimulated.

"I felt totally responsible for my life yet I had to constantly ask permission for everything that I did. I always had to be accompanied by someone whenever I went somewhere. I also had to report my whereabouts to my superior at all times. I no longer felt like an individual," she said.

Once Baptiste decided to leave the convent she was required to fill out many forms and to state three reasons why she desired to leave the community.

"It was a nerve-wracking experience to have my Mother Superior watching me fill out those forms. I felt so guilty because of my previous ties between myself and the community," she said.

Leaving the order requires approval from church officials in Rome, Baptiste said. Baptiste said that waiting for word from Rome was enough to cause her emotional stress. The other nuns divorced themselves from here because they were afraid that she would influence them in some way. It was a threat to their stability, Baptiste said.

After 18 months the Vatican approved Baptiste's forms and decided that she could leave the community. She said that for one year, she avoided any entrance into the church and found it difficult to answer questions related to her previous lifestyle.

"I wanted to cut myself off from my previous life until a year later when I went to Mass with a friend. It was a beautiful experience which made me realize that I still needed my past life in order to integrate it with my present life," Baptiste said.

Road and traffic construction project to benefit safety

By MICHELLE MURRAY
Collegian Correspondent

Road and traffic construction on the University of Massachusetts campus is an attempt to channel some traffic flow and was undertaken in the interest of safety, said William A. Lambert, University landscape architect.

The whole project began in June of last year and is slated to be completed early this fall. It is being handled by the Lane Construction Corporation of Meriden, Ct. which won the job with a bid of $1.5 million, Lambert said.

Specific improvements include a construction project now underway at the intersection of Massachusetts Ave., Commonwealth Ave. and University Drive. Parts of Massachusetts Avenue are being widened while other sections are being narrowed to provide for "stacking lanes" which will channel traffic flow by allowing automobiles to take right-hand or left-hand turns without impeding the flow of forward traffic, Lambert said.

Lambert also said that electronic devices, known as trip detectors, are being installed at intersections to note the approach of a vehicle and inform the controller which then changes traffic lights for right- and left-hand traffic movements. The trip detectors are installed beneath the pavement just before the intersection.

"Hazard information beacons," or flashing yellow lights, will be installed at the intersection of Sunset Avenue and Massachusetts Avenue, but they will

Renovated Hatch to offer diversified food counters

By DONNA MAGRATH
Collegian Correspondent

Students and faculty returning to the University of Massachusetts campus in the fall will be able to take advantage of the different food services the Hatch Cafeteria will offer after renovations are made to it this summer.

William Harris, Director of the Campus Center, said "the renovations are expected to be completed by the Fall of 1981."

He said, "It will be a major renovation, costing between $400 and 450,000."

Harris said plans are underway to upgrade all the food preparation areas, make main service counters more accessible, remove the entire glass partition (at the Hatch's front entrance) and to install a chain link grill for security after the Hatch is closed.

Harris said the architects, Ruth, Shives, and Williams, of Amherst "are just about 90 percent finished," with the designing of the renovations.

After the renovations are made there will be a deli counter specializing in grinders where ham, cheese, and other deli items will be sold in the same manner as they are in any market deli.

There will also be a pasta and pizza counter with a "select your own spaghetti sauce," Harris said.

Harris said a "pay by weight" salad bar and soup counter "will be one of the big feaetues." In addition, a new wine and beer counter will be installed around the corner from where the present bar is located. Different breads and cheeses will also be sold there.

Harris said the Hatch is being renovated "as an alternative to the noisy and boisterous Blue Wall and to the Top of the Campus Restaurant which has a more quiet atmoshpere."

The fast food counter will also undergo extensive renovations in an effort to shorten the waiting time and the crowding encountered when ordering.

Amherst votes to seek independence from 2½

By JOHANNA HOSOM
Collegian Staff

Last night Amherst Town Meeting members voted to submit a petition to the Massachusetts state legislature allowing the town to "raise and appropriate monies as it sees fit...notwithstanding any limits imposed by Proposition 2½."

A debate ensued as to whether or not the town might be impairing the state educational system with this effort. The Finance Committee cited the principle of "home rule," saying that Amherst should "take care of its own," and also prove to the legislature that Amherst's stand against Proposition 2½ is still very negative. The town voted against the proposition by 75 percent last November.

Allen Torrey called the section of the article which called for the petition a "misapplication of home rule." He said that an effort by Amherst toward such independence would harm the state education system, and that cities such as Chicopee would be severely affected. "In times such as these it is necessary for us all to stick together," he said.

The petition was approved by a vote of 123 to 45.

The Town Meeting also voted to increase the rate of collecting water supply revenue by 18 cents per 100 cubic feet to be effective as of July 1. These fees would pay for the plans to improve the area water system. It was explained that if state aid was not granted for the system, the new fee would not have to be imposed.

A 14 percent late-payment charge on water bills paid after sixty days was approved. This would provide an annual revenue of approximately $7,500. UMass is also included in the motion. The University has been paying within the time restriction suggested, and is not expected to exceed the limit set.

MassPIRG seeks participation in oil recycling

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

Members of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) will be visiting local gas stations and department stores this week in an effort to increase participation in their oil recycling program.

Peter Glassman, a member of the University of Massachusetts chapter of MassPIRG, yesterday said members will be visiting about 25 local retailers of motor oil asking them to set up and maintain facilities for waste oil storage and to inform their customers of the importance of the program.

Glassman said the "Recycle Oil—Save Energy" (ROSE) program was initiated this semester by MassPIRG as part of a solution to the mounting problem of water and land pollution.

"People do not realize what a pollutant oil can be," Glassman said.

According to a ROSE report, 14 to 16 million gallons of automotive waste oil, 22 percent of the commonwealth's total hazardous waste, are generated annually in Massachusetts.

Glassman said a state law enacted in 1980 requires retailers to have oil storage facilities and to take back used oil. In a MassPIRG telephone survey conducted in February, members posed as concerned customers asking area retailers how to dispose of the oil. Thirty percent recommended dumping the oil, Glassman said, and were "totally unaware" of the law.

Members will speak to the retailers "in a positive way," Glassman said, requesting they comply with the law and prominantly display notification to customers. Glassman said two retailers spoken to so far have been very cooperative. Glassman said retailers not complying may face legal action, but he holds "hope we would not have to."

Glassman said although retailers can receive about 20 cents per gallon for the used oil, their lack of inclination could possibly result from pressure by the oil companies "anxious to make new oil and make more money."

Upcoming Spectrum Literary works shown

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

The five-college literary and arts magazine, Spectrum, held a student poetry and prose reading last night in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union.

About 30 literary enthusiasts were treated to poetry and prose readings of works written by various Spectrum staff members, magazine contributors and associates. Michael Walker, Poetry Editor Christopher Castiglia, Alison Luterman, Myles Gordon, Charles F. Carroll and Richard Paul read various selections of their poetry. A number of these selections are featured in the upcoming issue of Spectrum, which will be available next week on the Campus Center Concourse.

Ernest Black and Scott McGrath read selections of prose. Black's reading was from his novel-in-progress and McGrath performed a humorous short story, entitled "The Anatomy of a Computer Date."

The reading was the fourth in a series of six readings this year, according to Spectrum Managing Editor Melodie Wertelet. The emotions evoked from the poetry ranged from soothing and melodical to disturbing and emotionally tense. The audience was not only treated to wine and snacks, but most of all quenched by a talented group of undergraduate students.

Fans of The Average White Band can have a regular field day this weekend because Friday night they'll be just a short jaunt away at Stage West, and Saturday they'll be at the Rusty Nail. They'll be backed by Boston's Zaitchik Brothers in Hartford, and by the Pleasure Dots at the Nail.

Can you think of a more exciting way to spend the weekend?

The Blue Wall brings in The Stompers Friday night and Willow Creek on Saturday.

If for some unexplainable reason you haven't seen the Elevators somewhere in the area this semester, you get two more chances at Rahar's Friday and Saturday night.

Hangar One welcomes Pastiche and The Paper Dolls Friday.

UPC says still no word on who's going to join Santana at Community Day, but they are working on it, so we can expect an announcement relatively soon (hopefully).

Santana just released their thirteenth album called Zebop, and it should be in the record stores if you want to get psyched for the show.

The Pretenders recently released a five song EP, and it'll be in record stores very soon if it's not there already.

If you feel like taking a ride this weekend Arlo Guthrie with Shenandoah will be up at Keene State in New Hampshire Saturday.

There's going to be a whole bunch of bands coming to the area in April. These include Ray Charles (There's still seats), The Dead Kennedys (I won't say they're good, but how about interesting?), and Human Sexual Response (I think I'll avoid comment).

In the next two weeks Stage West is hosting three tribute bands Rust, Crystal Ship, and The Blushing Brides. I find it difficult to believe that people pay money to see these imitations when they could buy albums by the real bands, or in the case of Neil Young and The Rolling Stones possibly see them.

But then there are those who buy ACDC records, which only goes to show people will buy just about anything.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Remembering Bart Santello

Bob Conte

Doesn't everybody get mellow and nostalgic when the world starts to turn green again? Some whimsical reflections as adulthood prepares to slap me in the face...

1964 — One of my earliest memories is of my brother and I watching the Fab Four belt out "I Want To Hold Your Hand" while my father snores in his La-Z-Boy behind us. My chubby little Italian grandmother is visiting that week, and even she catches the spirit, tunefully mumbling '' '' ra holda you 'and, oooh'' over and over again '' '' eads her bread dough and stirs her mari... ...t Halloween I dress as John, my broth... ...rew Amendola is Ringo. Dickie Zirlis is supp... ...eorge, but his parents won't let him out because he'd accidentally shot Mrs. Chasney in the bum with his B.B. gun the week before.

1966 — The entire neighborhood watches in breathless anticipation as Bart Santello and I prepare to make model ... ...ing history by launching the first frog into outer ... The frog's name is Gilbert and the rocket is a sleek red and white Estes V-2, loaded with the most powerful mother "C" engine that 50 cents can buy. The launch goes smoothly, but the parachute fails to eject itself upon descent, and Gilbert becomes a blotchy green and red memory on the sidewalk when the rocket crashes to earth. An incensed crowd demands their nickels back, and my first venture into capitalist enterprise is a dismal failure. Bart shakes off his loss and fifteen years later gets his Harvard M.B.A.

1969 — I am nearly expelled from St. Mary's Roman Catholic Elementary School after I saunter up to Sister Fredeika during recess and inform her that I believe Adam and Eve to be a load of horse manure and inquire as to why nobody ever talks about evolution and that Darwin guy I'd read about in Time magazine. A horrified Sister Frederika whisks me inside and frantically lectures that if I'd spend more time with my Bible I wouldn't have to resort to radical publications like Time to satisfy my scientific curiosity. That night she calls home and informs my father that he is raising a subversive son. My father laughingly tells me not to worry, that these women are all nuts because they're sexually frustrated. I sit and wonder what the hell that means.

1971 — It's my first trip to the Stadium, and I'm utterly deflated when I hear that Jake Gibbs will be catching that day in place of Thurman Munson, my favorite Yankee. I convince everybody to get the cheap bleacher seats next to the bullpen in right field, hoping that I may get to see him anyway. No luck until the bottom of the seventh, when he suddenly emerges from the clubhouse to warm up the relief pitcher. I scramble to the edge of the bleachers. "Hey Thurman, you're the best catcher in baseball! You're better than Bench by a mile!"

He glances up and momentarily catches my eye. "Unh," he grunts. None of my friends in school believe me the next morning when I tell them I had a conversation with Thurman Munson.

1974 — "You wanna try some?"

"I dunno. I never had any."

"That's okay. You just gotta inhale real deep and try to keep it all in."

"Yeh, alright. Light it up."

"That's it...That's it. Breathe it all in. Try not to exhale..."

"Blaaarrgghhheeee..."

"Don't start coughin', you're gonna lose it all. Come on, it's not that bad. Hey, come on, stop coughin' so loud. You're gonna wake up my parents!"

"Errraablaggghhoooopeerrr..."

"Will you keep it down! God, we're gonna get screwed. Hey, get up, will ya! Will ya get out of the bushes? Are you throwing up or something? Cut it out, man. God, I don't believe this."

"It's cool. I'm alright. I'm alright now."

"So how do you like it?"

"Not bad."

1977 — Naive freshman arrives on sprawling Amherst campus. He's lost and late for his 9:05 Rhetoric class even though his giant map is spread awkwardly in front of him. Though he's bumped into scores of people, he's reluctant to ask for directions for fear of being the standard moronic freshman. Finally, exasperated, he lightly approaches a friend looking upperclassman.

"Pardon me. I'm looking for Bartlett Hall."

"You serious?"

"Uh, yeh."

"You're not kidding?"

"No, I have to get there for a class..."

He recognizes the freshman sincerity, shakes his head in disbelief, and cooly points to a sign three feet away that says "Bartlett Hall." He turns away and mumbles something about how they get dumber and dumber every year. The freshman smiles and gives him the finger and a minute later begins college.

It's hard to understand why

Last Saturday evening, some friends and i decided t/ to Poor Richard's. It was during vacation so it wasn't very crowded, but we saw a few friends we knew. Among them was Brad Ringquist — the type of guy who will always give you a warm hug and a smile every time he sees you. A guy with a dynamic personality, loved and respected by everyone, active in many, many Greek and other community activities — a real leader.

We talked with Brad for quite awhile — he had just graduated from UMass in December and said he was enjoying and doing really well in his new job as a life insurance agent. As we said goodbye to Brad at 1 a.m., I remember my friend saying, "He'll go far in life." I agreed.

Well, he didn't go much farther in life, after all. Twenty minutes later the car Brad was driving was hit broadside and Brad was killed. The driver of the other car was charged with vehicular homicide and driving to endanger.

Brad's many, many friends will miss him very much. Things won't be the same without him around. It's hard to understand why as good a person as Brad Ringquist would have to lose his life in a senseless automobile accident. It could just as easily be you or me next time.

Please, let's be extra careful driving.

Remembering Bishop Romero

March 24 marked the first anniversary of the brutal assassination of Archbishop Oscar Romero as he said mass to his congregation in El Salvador. The previous day, Archbishop Romero had made the "subversive" call to government security forces not to carry out immoral orders. On 2/17/80, just over a month before his assassination by right wing terrorists, Archbishop Romero sent a letter to President Carter regarding US military aid to the Salvadoran government in which he said:

"The contribution of your administration, instead of favoring greater justice and peace in El Salvador, will almost surely intensify the injustice and repression of the common people who are organized to struggle for respect for their most basic human rights...Political power (in El Salvador) is in the hands of unscrupulous military personnel who only know how to repress the people and favor the interests of the Salvadoran oligarchy...Therefore, since I as a Salvadoran and Archbishop of the San Salvador archdiocese have the obligation to work for the reign of faith and justice in my country, I urge you, if you really want to defend human rights —To prohibit the giving of military assistance to the Salvadoran government;

—To guarantee that your government will not intervene directly or indirectly with military, economic, diplomatic or other pressure to determine the fate of the Salvadoran people..."

Unfortunately, the Archbishop's plea was unheeded. In fact in the closing hours of his administration, President Carter overturned 4 years of "human rights" rhetoric to send $10 million in military aid, including $5 million in "lethal aid" to the government of El Salvador. Today, Archbishop Romero and approximately 12,000 other Salvadorans are dead with the crucial assistance of this U.S. "aid."

Our government's message to the world is clear: A government (friendly to U.S. "interests") can massacre its people in order to remain in power and yet be fighting for "freedom and democracy" but if a repressed people picks up arms to fight back against its oppressors, this is "terrorism."

I encourage readers to think about what is happening in our name, and to take a stand against our government's intervention in El Salvador. One important opportunity to take such a stand would be to participate (and get others to participate) in the peaceful demonstration which will take place in Northampton on April 25th.

Where's our tax money going?

Recently, the Reagan Administration announced its proposed budget for the coming fiscal year. It is clear that military spending is going to be substantially increased. What goes unpoticed is that the final figure will represent over 50 percent of the budget! Half of every tax dollar is going to the military. As April 15th approaches, this may be something to consider while we make out our yearly federal donations.

I am not suggesting that we completely eliminate military spending. But given the increasing ... placed on taxpayers, it would be to our advantage to ... good hard look at how that money is being spent. One concerned group of citizens has done just this. The Boston Study Group in The Price of Defense (Times Books, 197... gests that we could have reduced the fiscal ye... military spending from $120 billion to $73 billion, wh... tually improving the efficiency of our defense readiness.

Isn't it time to wonder about the percentage of our tax dollars being allocated to the military?

Accepting violence helps it grow

Atlanta, Lennon, President Reagan, El Salvador. All are reminders of the violence existing in this world. I blame most of it on ignorance and am proud to be part of the 'educated' society of UMass.

Today, Tuesday, March 31, inserted inside the Collegian was a poster advertising the movie 'The Howling'. As I opened the poster to it's full size and digested the contents, I actually experienced stomach spasms. The poster depicted a woman's face from the nose down to her chin, lips painted blood red, mouth wide opened as if screaming in terror or pain. Her fingers are piercing through a paper barrier; her nails painted a grey-blue color as in death. Along side of this offensive picture is the blunt statement 'Imagine your worst fear a reality.' People who have been battered, physically and sexually assaulted know this kind of fear. Being a past victim of violence I know that fear and find the inclusion of this poster distasteful and a reflection of the lack of sensitivity on the part of the 'educated' persons responsible for its distribution.

My worst fear seems to be close to reality, people allowing themselves to be indoctrinated with the idea violence is a normal way of life, accepting it, and not doing anything to stop its growth.

Service to be held for accident victim

A memorial service for Brad Ringquist will be held Sunday, April 5 at 7 p.m. in the Newman Center Chapel.

Sunday's service will be held for those who could not attend the funeral services in Duxbury yesterday.

A memorial fund is being put together by the brothers of Beta Kappa Phi fraternity and will be given to the Natick High School Athletic fund in his name.

"Brad was a brother of Beta Kappa Phi fraternity, past president of the Inter-fraternity Council, and above all a friend to everyone who knew him," his fraternity brother Peter Keenan said.

Ringquist died in a car accident March 22 in Amherst.

Applications being accepted for 'All American' award

The Scholastic All-American Selection Committee is now accepting applications for the 1981 Spring Semester. Students who are active in scholastic organizations and who perform well in class are eligible to join.

The Scholastic All-American is an honor society founded to recognize this country's top undergraduate and graduate students. Students are selected from over 1,280 schools covering all 50 states. Members participate in various nationally organized service projects each year.

Students are selected for consideration based on the extent of their academic and scholastic performance both in and out of the classroom. No one factor is weighed heaviest when a new member is considered. A student's best asset must be his or hers "well roundedness."

Interested students should send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to "Application," Scholastic All-American, Administrative Offices, P.O. Box 237, Clinton, New York, 13323.

Coffeehouse to feature American tunes

A coffeehouse featuring Tom Juravich with "Doc" Iacovelli will be held this Sunday at 7:30 p.m. in Farley Lodge. Admission is $1.00

Juravich sings of America and the American people. His music ranges from cowboy songs and songs of the railroad to traditional ballads and Carter family tunes; from union and work songs to songs from the sea, including many old favorites. Most clearly, he sings in the tradition of Woody Guthrie and Pete Seeger and other singers of the people's music, music which came out of the American labor movement and the struggles of working people.

Over the past years Juravich has appeared at the Chelsea House, Iron Horse Coffeehouse, Folkway, Five College Folk Festival and Green River Cafe, as well as numerous other coffeehouses, festivals, concerts, benefits and community events.

Arts council to offer video art and dance workshops

By DIANE KADZIS
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachussets Arts Council is sponsoring a three day art and dance video residency on campus which will end tomorrow.

A residency involves visiting artists who spend a certain amount of time on campus and are available during that time for informal interactions with students.

The event is a supplemental educational experience for five college students with interests in the arts and communications studies and has been designed to provide a chance for students to exchange ideas, Council member John Furbish said.

The residency focuses on video art and video dance exhibits and includes a series of workshops which provide hands-on experience with electronics.

Sylvia Morrison, Rylin Malone and Betsy Connors are the three residing artists. Some of their previous works will also be shown.

Workshops will be held today in Room 101 Campus Center at 2 p.m., 3:30 p.m. and 5 p.m. and rehearsals for the final show will be held today at 7 p.m. and 4 p.m. in the Student Union Building's Commonwealth Room.

The program will end with a live demonstration at 8 p.m. tomorrow in the Commonwealth Room. The event is open to the public at no charge.

In accordance with Federal regulations, which went into effect last April, all new traffic lights being built at pedestrian crossings must not only carry a bell signal to notify blind people that it is safe to cross but also carry a warning buzzer to correspond with the flashing "Don't Walk" sign.

Brady's outlook better; may regain more functions

WASHINGTON (AP) — The steady recovery White House press secretary James Brady is making from a bullet through the brain is "truly exceptional" and indicates he may regain more mental functions than earlier hoped, say brain specialists.

White House officials said yesterday that Brady was conscious, talking, moving both arms and both legs and generally continuing to improve.

"Physicians continue to be cautiously optimistic as Mr. Brady's neurological condition continues to improve," yesterday's report said.

Brady, 40, and his wife, Sarah, played catch with a ball of cotton or gauze Tuesday night, "demonstrating his ability to move in spite of his weakened condition," said a White House statement.

James A. Baker III, White House chief of staff, said doctors believe Brady will survive and "that mental capacity will be there" despite damage caused by a .22-caliber bullet ripping through his brain.

However, it is unknown how much and what kind of mental capacity will remain following massive injury to the right side of Brady's brain and minor injury to the front lobe of the left side.

Reagan continues to make progress

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite some pain, a high-spirited President Reagan got out of bed and set to work in his hospital suite yesterday as aides indicated he may be released by early next week — and make a major trip before the month is out.

White House physician Daniel Ruge declared late in the day that "The president continues to make excellent progress toward full recovery" from the bullet wound which punctured his left lung in Monday's assassination attempt.

"He has experienced some pain, which is normal for...an injury and surgery of this type. He is now resting comfortably," Ruge said.

Earlier, Vice President George Bush said after a visit that "The president is doing so well...it's really amazing."

As for the shooting itself, sources who declined to be identified say investigators now believe that Reagan was hit by a ricochet from one of the six bullets fired instead of being struck directly.

Two bullets hit Reagan's limousine and the investigators say the president was probably hit by the bullet which struck the rear door. The investigators found miscroscopic traces of paint on the bullet removed from Reagan and the entry wound was more ragged than it would have been had he been struck directly, the sources explained.

Reagan was moved into a private room in a surgical ward and a "full-time office" was set up nearby for staff members, according to presidential counselor Edwin Meese III. Meese said the president may be sent home from the George Washington University Hospital early next week.

White House chief of staff James A. Baker III and his deputy, Michael K. Deaver, who with Meese make up the triumvirate that directs the White and administration operations, spent about 10 minutes with the president shortly after 7 a.m. At that time, the president signed an executive order granting lower import tariffs for products from developing nations.

At the White House, Bush filled in at the president's only previously scheduled appointment for the day, presiding at a National Security Council meeting he would have attended anyway. Reagan was originally scheduled to speak to the Illinois legislature in Springfield.

Hinckley given tests to determine competency

WASHINGTON (AP)—John W. Hinckley Jr., his alleged murder attempt upon President Reagan reportedly spawned by infatuation with a teen-age film star, underwent psychiatric tests yesterday over the objections of hint new attorney, a partner of famed criminal lawyer Edward Bennett Williams.

The mental tests were conducted at the Quantico, Va., Marine base south of the capital, where Hinckley, 25, has been kept isolated and under constant surveillance since his arrest Monday following the attempted assassination.

The tests were administered to determine whether Hinckley, the son of a wealthy Denver oilman, is mentally competent to face trial on charges of attempted murder of the president and assault on a Secret Service agent.

Justice Department sources say ... believe Hinckley was "infatuated" with ... actress Jodie Foster and wanted ... thing that would attract her attention.

Meanwhile, a switch in defe... developed yesterday when one of Hinckley's ... ers, Vincent Fuller, sought at a court hearing yesterday to cancel the psychiatric tests.

Actress says love letters never mentioned Reagan

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP)—Actress Jodie Foster said yesterday that a series of love letters she received from a "John Hinckley" never mentioned President Reagan or "violent acts against anyone."

Miss Foster, an 18-year-old freshman at Yale University, held a news conference at which she said she had been "shocked" and "frightened" to learn that the letters may have been written by John W. Hinckley Jr., who is accused of trying to assassinate Reagan in Washington Monday.

She said she had received a number of letters and notes signed either "JWH" or "John Hinckley" last fall and again last month. She said she had received "several pieces of unsolicited correspondence" after she entered Yale as a literature major and "threw them all away."

"This is not uncommon as I receive a great deal of similar unsolicited correspondence," she said. "At the beginning of March I received three or four more notes similarly signed. On March 6 I gave them to my college dean, who in turn gave them to the Yale police. These are now in the custody of the FBI.

Amherst to hold concert

by LISA LANGONE
Collegian Staff

April 3 and 4 the Amherst College Kirby Theatre will feature a spring dance concert entitled "Portraits. The concert begins at 8 p.m. and will offer six pieces performed by Amherst College students and faculty, some of the five college faculty, and the Daniel Lewis Dance Repertory Company, who are in residence on the Amherst College campus during the spring semester.

One of the pieces presented will be "Passacaglia," choreographed by Doris Humphrey in 1939. The piece has been reconstructed by Professor Susan Hunt and Tara McClellan from the Labanotated score by agreement with the Dance Notation Bureau. "Passacaglia" will be performed to the music of J.S. Bach's Fugue in CMinor.

Another piece presented will be "Open Book," choreographed by Daniel Lewis, the artistic director of the Daniel Lewis Dance Repertory Company. It will be performed by the company, who have recently finished a successful season of performances in New York city.

Tickets for "Portraits" are $2.50 for the general public and $1.50 for senior citizens. The Box Office is open weekdays from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Further information can be obtained by calling 542-2277.

The Campus Center Food Services, Board of Governors, staff, and other students have been involved in the renovation decisions when the architects meet, Harris said.

Brian De Lancey, chairperson of the Board of Governors, said, "We've been working in cooperation with the Campus Center administration by looking at the plans and sketches the architects make so we can help insure that the cost is kept as low as possible."

He said the board intends to "minimize the costs by using equipment that is already on hand, like the pizza oven."

De Lancey added that the back of the Hatch will be redesigned "for late night eating, coffeehouses, video showings and for serving beer, wine and maybe other drinks."

De Lancey also said he hopes Harris will "bring the sketches from the architect before th BOG and give us a full detailed discussion of the Hatch project so we can approve it."

He said the BOG and the Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office hope to circulate a Project Pulse survey by the end of April to find out what students reactions are to renovations that have taken place and how they feel about the future renovations that have taken place and how they feel about the future renovations on the Hatch.

★ Turner

Turner said the U.S. should return to the draft because manpower is not in balance with the Soviet Union, the NATO allies don't take the U.S. seriously, and because "young people have an obligation to service the nation."

He said that service should not be limited to the military, but broken up among other government jobs.

"If at 18 a person doesn't do service, that person shouldn't get social security at 65," said Turner.

As directory of the CIA, Turner said that he felt that nothing was done behind his back.

"I had no concern that there were things being held from me, the members of the CIA are really a fine group of people," Turner said.

Believed pranks cause car damages

In what University of Massachusetts police call a possible April Fools Day prank, 12 cars were broken into and moved, with damage to three of the cars yesterday in lot 44.

The cars were apparently pushed a variety of distances from between 10 rows to 10 feet, Police said. One of the cars was found with all the doors open, another with a damaged glove compartment and the third with the shift link broken, police said.

The incident was reported from the emergency telephone at 3:29 a.m. in lot 44. The caller wished to remain unidentified, police said.

Two firecracker incidents were also reported to police. The first one was reported at 11:30 p.m. Monday by a caller from Lewis residence hall in the Northeast Residential Area. Fireworks were being thrown from a second floor window in Thatcher residence hall in Northeast. Police confiscated the fireworks and issued a warning to the three men responsible for the incident.

The other fireworks incident was reported from Knowlton residence hall in Northeast. The fireworks were being set off near the Graduate Research Center, police said. The students responsible were charged with breach of the peace and turned over to the Dean of Students office. They apologized for the incident, police said.

In another incident, 1,000 pounds of computer print-out paper was reported stolen from the west side of the Whitmore Administration Building at 9:10 a.m. yesterday. Police said the paper had been sold to P. Allen and Son, Inc. for recycling. The paper is valued at $70.

basketball program, despite losing a man like Wilson (who will remain at UMass for the transition while deciding about staying on in another capacity) is positive indeed.

McLaughlin, 30, said his coaching philosophy is not directly moulded from his coach when he was a player, Jack Leaman, or his former boss at Notre Dame, Digger Phelps.

"I've coached against Ray Meyer of DePaul, Joe B. Hall of Kentucky and Bobby Knight of Indiana (among others). I picked up the best tips and strategies of each of them," he said.

UMass' new coach said the Minutemen of the future will be a very disciplined club, stacked with "intelligent, good student-athletes."

"We're going to obtain some good players and 'coach the heck out of them.' I want players who know their limitations and except their roles."

"We will play aggresive defense and a control offense," the best of what Tom McLaughlin has learned.

The new coach said Tuesday, before a recruiting trip to New York, that the team and the fans have "got to be patient, this is a long term thing." He added that the fans themselves, the Curry Hicks Cage faithful, are one of the keys to the Minutemen's future.

"The student body is the most important element of success," he said. "They'll support you and help you win a couple of games just with their intimidation."

The revival of the old spirit and success, if it happens, may create aspirations, on a higher, perhaps national level; the vision of the administration when UMass entered the EAA five years ago.

looked over the centerfield wall from homeplate you would see the ocean. The field is situated on a cliff that overlooks the water. The field at SDSU does not have the same scenic view but the upkeep of the field is remarkable.

"They (the players) keep up much better maintenance on their field," McReddie said. "Their infield is better, it has no tricky hops. The better the infield, the better you play."

So the UMass players return home from San Diego with a fifth place finish in the Classic with five victories against seven defeats and all they myths surrounding the superiority of California baseball having been squelshed or put in proper perspective. The result of the trip was summed up best by outfielder Joe Larkin who stated simply—"The only difference between our game of baseball and theirs is 20 games and 20 degrees.

Jim Weller, who scored seven goals in Tuesday's win over Cornell, saw limited time yesterday but made his presence known and only added to the Huskie frustration when on the field. Midway through the second quarter, Weller outsmarted John Demarche to a loose ball and fed sophomore Dave MeEntee in front of the net for one of MeEntee's three goals.

UConn was never a worthy opponent, the Gorillas kept racking up the score including goals by Rich Missina, Morgan Mohrman, Peter Martino and Eric Conz. Conz scored his tally of the day with seconds left in the first half, twisting past three Conn. defenders into clear view of the net.

The Gorillas play the third of their five-game home stint next Wednesday when they host first ranked Division II Hobart.

McLaughlin: The new man gets his shot

By MIKE ESTRADA
Collegian Staff

The making of the third UMass men's basketball coach in four years reaffirms the administration's committment to the "winning tradition" and establishes that no coach, even one who has served the University for a dozen years, is not spared from the chopping block.

Exit Ray Wilson, whose dismissal after 12 years of coaching here was called an "extraordinarily difficult" decision to make by Frank McInerney, the head of the department of athletics and the man most responsible for making the switch.

Sports analysis

Ray Wilson is a man of great personal charm and integrity," McInerney said, "everyone likes him." The decision to fire anyone "is not pleasant" he said, especially a person of Wilson's stature.

The Minutemen's combined record of 5-48 under Wilson's tutelage was not the lone reason for his dismissal, McInerney said. Rather inherent in the record are other problems, aside from the inability to outscore the competition.

"Its implicit in the record that there are other problems," McInerney said. "Reeruiting, coaching skills, those things are built into it."

Perhaps UMass' two poor seasons under Wilson were not the fault of the soft-spoken mentor. Indeed, the Minutemen's 5-22 record after Jack Leaman's last campaign as head coach (1978-79) was a portent of the years to come.

UMass was a powerhouse that kept close to New England before it entered the Eastern Athletic Association in 1976. After the Yankee Conference later disbanded, the whole solace of past Minuteman success was gone. They accomplished a 20-11 mark in the 76-77 season, but even if the team had kept producing capable players such as Alex Eldridge and Mike Pyatt or imported talent the likes of Mark Haymore, it is unknown whether the Eastern Eight would have been theirs for the taking the last two seasons.

The last batch of super talent left after the 1977-78 season when Eldridge and Pyatt graduated after leading the Minutemen through a mediocre, 15-12 stint. Leaman resigned after the following season, honorably, and Wilson, some said, was holding a nearly empty bag in terms of a continued line of basketball stars.

Wilson brought in some potentially fine division one players in an attempt to get the winning tradition back. But after two years of giving it his best shot, Wilson is gone too.

Enter Tom McLaughlin, the best of both worlds. He is the outsider (assistant coach at Stamford and Notre Dame Universities) that some thought the administration should have reached for after Leaman resigned. But like Leaman and Wilson, he is part of the UMass family. A former Minuteman himself and an admitted UMass fan, McLaughlin will spark local interest while intending to thrive on the reconstruction of the UMass hoop spirit.

McLaughlin was not the only candidate for Wilson's succession, but according to McInerney, "his credentials were almost impeccable."

In addition to his coaching experiences, McLaughlin is a former recepient of the Oswald Baron Award, given to the outstanding student-athlete at the university.

His name appears twice in the seasonal and personal records of Minutemen basketball history. In 1973, his senior year, the six-foot, four-inch forward had a .810 free throw percentage (51 for 63) and in a game against Rhode Island that same season he scored 26 points; the highest point-getting performance of a Minuteman that year.

A New York native who attended Fordham Prep before attending the University of Tennessee and then UMass, McLaughlin sympathizes with Wilson and the task he faced.

"Ray was a victim of circumstances," he said. "He was simply in the wrong place at the wrong time. But there's positives to any change."

That statement alone with the fact that McInerney and the administration surveyed, analyzed and then made a step in the direction of improving the success of the Huskies leashed by Gorillas

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

As everyone including the University of Connecticut expected, head coach Dick Garber's Gorillas simply outicassed the Huskies in a game that more served the purpose of giving the regulars a rest and everyone else some playing time. As they have every other year, the Gorillas consistently controlled the ball and outshot UConn to a lopsided 18-2 victory yesterday afternoon at Boyden.

It was obviously no contest from the very beginning when, five minutes into the game, UMass was already up 3-0 with Garber having started only two regulars.

"We didn't start our regular players," Garber said. "We would have won 30-0 with the regulars. I don't like to see another team humiliated. It's no fun when you're on the other end."

The first three goals were all UMass needed to secure the win. Tri-captain Peter Schmitz put the first one in just 1:14 into the game and was followed a minute later by attackman Chris Corin who scored the first of two. Corin also had three assists on the day. Ray Cozzi blasted the third in, the first of two for the senior defenseman.

It was an afternoon of getting as many men as possible into the scoring records. 12 different scorers went into the books including freshman midfielder Kent Shelley who led all scorers yesterday with three.

Shelley scored the first with 2:36 left in the third quarter, when he scooped a ground ball in front of the Connecticut net and tossed it in unopposed. UConn goalie Stephen Boccarossa had been battling with Shelly out in front of the net but lost the ball. His last two came at the end of the fourth quarter when he batted in a pass from Ernie Shapiro from behind the net and a minute later, Shelly golfed one into the net unassisted.

Mark Fierro moves past a Connecticut defenseman yesterday as Garber's Gorillas add yet another win to their record.

The one-sided match-up had UMass controlling the ball for much of the game. Time of possession was about equal through the first quarter but the Huskies could not capitalize with the exception of one scored by Brett Greenberg.

Sophomore Dan Altschuler in goal refused a frustrated Huskie offense any more than the one shot, blocking a few blasts by Connecticut's Jeff Sherman. Altschuler was helped on the defensive end of the field by freshmen Paul Schmutz and Bryant Goulding who only aided in the Huskie frustration with constant pressure.

Constant pressure was the game story for the Huskies who continually lost the ball. Schmitz continued the Massachusetts barrage late in the first period knocking the ball away from UConn's Jeff Sherman, controlling the ground ball and passing to Corin who set up Skip Vosburgh in the first of his two goals.

Making his Minuteman career debut on the lacrosse field was player-manager Bob Levey who went 0 for 13 attempts in the final quarter and was denied a goal on an outstanding Boccarossa save.

"I've waited for this for four years," said Levey, a senior, "The guys were trying to set me up, the goalie had a couple of nice saves."

Baseball California style, myth vs fact

Jane Wolfson

Everyone who lives on the east coast can identify with the mystique that surrounds the west coast, especially California. Everyone knows Californians are different.

The myths that are applied to California are infamous. The carefree life, 360 days a year of warm sunshine, the laid back atmosphere, all of which are conducive to the development of fine athletic programs. A lot of this is based on the showing of west coast schools on National Polls in a variety of different sports. And baseball is certainly no exception.

When the University of Massachusetts baseball team traveled to San Diego last week to participate in Sun-Lite Classic they were well aware of the teams they were going to face. The team hosting the tournament, San Diego State University, is currently ranked sixth in the nation so they seemed a pretty good indication of what UMass was to expect.

Although looking forward to the trip out west, UMass couldn't help but be slightly apprehensive. After all they hadn't been outdoors or even seen live pitching yet and SDSU had already played 40 games.

"We really weren't sure what to expect," freshman outfielder Keith L. Ovellette said during the plane ride back east. "Most of the top 20 teams (in the nation) are always from the west coast, they have the advantage of playing year round. We expected them to be better than they were. If we had the equal time outside we would have beat them."

After the initial 18-1 loss to SDSU which also marked the team's debut in the outdoors they came back and played some excellent baseball during the 11 game-nine day trip.

"Massachusetts is a much better team than we expected," Point Loma College pitcher Tim Meinert said after Massachusetts had just defeated his team for the second time on the final day tournament. "We didn't think they were going to be as good as they were."

The baseball team also was surprised by what they found out about west coast teams.

"We came into this tournament with more intensity," Minutemen pitcher Vin Todd observed. "We knew that the atmosphere out here is more conducive to baseball, but the guys on the teams out here seem more laid back. With all the games they play there are more used to it. It seemed like they were just going through the motions."

First baseman Warren McReddie said he wasn't impressed by the level of west coast pitching that he saw, which was evident by his .298 average which included two homeruns, a triple, and a double during the tourney. "There is better pitching in the east," he said, "They throw more junk out here and the strike zone is a lot lower."

The team returned back to Amherst with the necessary confidence to be a top team. Tri-captain's John Kraham's sentiment, "This trip showed us that we can play with any team," is shared by all.

One notable difference in California baseball were their playing fields and the upkeep of them. Point Loma College, where UMass played two of its tournament games, is an exceptional example. If you

BOG to prepare renovation plan

By GREG VOLPE
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center Board of Governors (BOG) voted unanimously last night to "authorize preparation" of a plan to increase student input into proposed renovations to the University Store, tentatively scheduled to begin this summer.

The authorization of the plan was approved as a result of an original motion passed by the board on February 26, which set up a "formal procedure" for the board's involvement in Campus Center/Student Union renovations costing over $5,000. The proposed renovations to the University store are estimated to cost around $120,000.

The present plan calls for the board's University Store/Retail Services Committee to work with the Campus Center administration to develop a specific proposal for the renovations.

Brian DeLancey, BOG Chairman, said the board must become involved at every stage of the renovation process to avoid what has happened in past renovations.

"We can't run into this, get our feet wet, and then say the water's too cold. We cannot back off on the renovation process. We must get involved in the initial stages, and the whole process, if the students of this campus are going to be adequately represented in this whole affair," he said.

Director of the Campus Center, William Harris, who is representing the Campus Center administration in the renovations said, "The board's involvement is essential in the process. We're not trying to hide anything from the students. Things are going on all the time, and I hope the board's committees will work along with us in everything we do."

Knapp censure dropped

By KATHLEEN HOWLEY
Collegian Staff

The Faculty Senate yesterday dropped a motion which would have censured UMass President David Knapp for approving a controversial $1 million pay raise for non-unionized professional employees before the money had been appropriated by the state legislature.

Professor Joseph Frank, faculty representative to the Board of Trustees, said he agreed to requests from Knapp and Chancellor Henry Koffler to refrain from asking the 131-member senate for a vote of no-confidence only after Knapp said he would review the proposed raises.

The pay increase which would include a six percent across-the-board increase retroactive to June 1980, would effect about 875 non-unionized professional employees on the Amherst and Boston campuses.

Critics of the administration claim the money had not yet been appropriated by the state legislature and would come as non-unionized employees were completing a unionization drive.

Howard O. Brogan, a spokesman for the Massachusetts Society of Professors, urged Knapp in a written statement "to behave more responsibly."

"Legislative leaders were indignant at the president for similarly distributing money he did not yet have before the funding of our last contract, and they just might not fund another such anticipatory raise," Brogan's statement read.

Loren Baritz, vice chancellor for academic affairs at the Amherst campus, read a statement from Koffler shortly before Frank spoke which said "the Trustees did not vote without regard for securing the money to meet the cost of the increase."

"The University's budget proposal for fiscal year 1982, submitted last October, requested funds for the estimated costs of these salary increases and indicated that a request would be made to cover the costs in fiscal year 1981," the statement read.

Erika Kates discusses women in prison

Researcher cites discrimination at Hampden jail

By KELLY BURKE
Collegian Correspondent

A "blatant" case of discrimination against incarcerated women exists at the Hampden County Jail in Springfield, according to Erika Kates, project director and research associate at the Smith College School for Social Work.

Kates, who recently visited the prison said that while the male inmates in the jail are freely allowed physical contact with their visitors, the female inmates must receive their visitors while behind a security screen which prevents any physical contact between them.

Judith A. Stalus of the Massachusetts Correctional Legal Services, when notified by the Collegian of the situation at the jail said, "It's clearly a violation of the 14th amendment of the U.S. Constitution, and Article One of the Massachusetts Constitution which forbids discrimination on the basis of sex."

Gerry King, Director of Classification at the jail said the security screen was installed in 1977 during the first phase of a renovation of the 90 year old jail in which the women's section was rebuilt. He said there is no security screen in the visiting area of the male inmates, where "a wife is allowed to kiss her husband." The existence of the security screen in the women's section King said, "from time to time becomes an issue because we are looking to be accredited. So we might address the problem in the future."

Nicholas Fiorentino, deputy superintendent at the jail said that recently a presentation was submitted to the state legislature on the second phase of the renovations involving the rotunda, the visiting area for the male inmates. He said when they had sufficient funds the project would be continued and "the male section will be set up the same way."

However, in a later interview, Fiorentino said, "We do intend to take it (the security screen) down once renovations are underway to devise a way to have contact visiting."

When asked if any of the female inmates objected to the presence of the screen, Fiorentino responded, "We have had complaints. We try to respond to their needs. The case workers try to make every attempt to accomodate the gals."

The current inmate population, King said, consists of 5 females and 63 males awaiting trial; and 17 females and 239 males sentenced for up to 2½ years.

Smith research project reveals new insights into growing prison problem

By KELLY BURKE
Collegian Correspondent

The population of women in U.S. prisons is increasing twice as fast as the male population, according to a project director and research associate at the Smith College School for Social Work. For many years, according to Erika Kates, the female population of the prisons has been only 5 percent of the male population.

Kates also said some research shows women being sentenced to longer prison terms. Increased sentences, she said, may be attributed to raising of consciousness concerning women in our society. Kates said this affects the law enforcers — men who run the criminal justice system — and their attitudes have changed, perhaps by becoming harsher.

No evidence demonstrates that women are committing more serious crimes, Kates said. "There has been quite a heated debate by feminists about women's relation to crime. Some authors have made simplistic assumptions," she said.

The reality of the situation shows that a "new assertiveness," or increased opportunity to commit crimes, is not pertinent to female offenders, she said. Mostly poor, black women who are single parents are committing economic crmes related to poverty, like larceny, Kates said.

However, "Women are becoming more assertive in prison, which is demonstrated by the fact that women are taking legal action there. They are not so passive anymore," she said.

According to Kates, though, "Female inmates still do not resort to legal procedures as a means of recourse to the extent to which male inmates are involved."

Kates wrote the proposal for a one year research porject entitled "Legal Issues of Female Inmates," for which the school for social work at Smith has just received a $60,000 grant from the National Institute of Corrections in Washington, D.C.

Researchers will explore what the legal issues are for women in prison and will determine if women have sufficient access to legal resources. According to Kates there are grounds for women to be legally active while incarcerated, and she will investigate why this may not happen.

The situation of mothers in prison, Kates said, "is one of my pet peeves. A woman can be declared an unfit mother by virtue of her record. She's always struggling to prove that she's fit, while deprived of access to her children." The children of these mothers are either taken care of by a family member, or are turned over to the department of Welfare, who "tend to give the children up for adoption without the woman's consent. Prisoners in the U.S. have very few rights. They are the nearest thing to slaves," Kates said.

Weinberger: Soviets have increased invasion capacity

WASHINGTON — Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger said yesterday the Soviet Union has taken steps in the last 24 to 48 hours to increase its capacity to invade Poland and the United States is "taking ... steps" as a result.

Weinberger made the statements in response to questions from Sen. Bennett Johnston, DLa., at the close of a Senate Budget Committee hearing on the Reagan administration's military spending proposals.

Asked about the likelihood of a Soviet invasion, Weinberger said, "I would not want to make an estimate of that now."

"Obviously there is the capability with Soviet and Warsaw Pact troops to take steps in Poland that would be totally incompatible with the country maintaining any kind of independent decision at all," he added.

Asked whether the Soviets had enhanced that capability in the last 24 to 48 hours, he said they had.

Johnston then asked again about what steps the Russians were taking, but Weinberger apparently misunderstood the question and said, "Yes, to the extent that we have planned, we are taking those steps."

President making 'super' progress: Brady satisfactory

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, making "super" progress, took two strolls around his hospital compound yesterday while life support tubes remained fixed in his chest and nose. He told two visiting senators: "I found out it hurts to get shot."

After his best night's sleep since an apparent ricochet bullet tore into his left lung in Monday's assassination attempt, the president was in "extremely good spirits" according to his personal physician.

Reagan walked for 50 yards yesterday morning, then, joined by wife Nancy, ventured out of his room again in the late afternoon.

Meanwhile, John W. Hinckley Jr., the man charged with attempting to assassinate the president, was found competent to stand trial. But during a a court appearance — in which he wore a white, bulletproof vest — Hinckley was ordered held in an institution for further sanity tests while a federal grand jury investigates the charges against him.

A spokesman for George Washington University Hospital, where Reagan is being treated, said that the president's press secretary, James S. Brady, was making satisfactory progress after a bullet pierced his brain in the shooting. But he said "we are a long ways from home on Mr. Brady," also being treated there.

Senate approves budget cuts in Reagan's biggest triumph

WASHINGTON — The Senate handed President Reagan the biggest legislative triumph of his young administration last night, voting overwhelming approval of a plan to force $87 billion in budget cuts over the next three years.

The bill, attacked by outnumbered liberals as a "cruel abandonment" of the nation's needy but hailed by Republicans and most Democrats as a historic turning point in the battle to control spending, passed on a vote of 88-10.

"This is a first and major installment in fiscal responsibility," Budget Committee Chairman Pete Domenici, R.N.M. said of the measure, which calls for savings of $2.3 billion this year, $36.9 billion in 1982 and $47.7 billion in 1983.

The reception, the first of its kind sponsored by the Alumni Office is the idea of Douglas Cooney, the new Director of Alumni Relations. Cooney said he hopes to emphasize to seniors that they automatically become members of the Alumni Assocation when they graduate.

Hazardous-waste conference to feature thirty speakers

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Correspondent

Nine Pioneer Valley organizations are sponsoring a conference in the Campus Center tomorrow to focus on what citizens can do about hazardous waste.

The day-long conference, entitled "Hazardous Wastes: The Toxic Time Bomb," is the first of its kind in Massachusetts. It will feature more than thirty distinguished speakers and citizens' advocates, and will be hosted by the UMass Public Interest Reasearch Group.

Conference coordinators said a need for public awareness is one of the major reasons for holding the event.

"Workers have a right to know that what they are carrying in a barrel may be potentially dangerous as it drips on their pants," said Sandra Goodrich, co-coordinator of the event.

"Another part of the hazardous-waste issue is contamination of drinking water, and that's what affects most people," said Kathy Curry, another co-coordinator of the conference. Twenty-three towns in Massachusetts have lost their drinking water because of illegal dumping."

Lois Gibbs, president of the Love Canal Home Owners Association will open the program at 9:30 a.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

Gibbs will be followed by a series of five morning workshops at 10:30. The topics for these workshops are: what toxic substances and hazardous wastes are; ground water protection; waste management and disposal; waste reduction; and emergencies and emergency preparedness.

Dr. Evelyn Murphy, former Massachusetts Secretary of Environmental Affairs and current director of the Institute for Toxic Waste Management, will deliver the luncheon address at 11:45.

Sen. John Olver will participate in a panel discussion on the role of the legislature, government, industry, and regulatory agencies in the hazardous waste problem.

Registration for the conference will begin at 8:30 a.m., outside the SUB.

'Superstar' shines at Bowker Auditorium

By JOHN BROBST
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Music Theatre Guild production of Andrew Lloyd Webber and Tim Rice's "Jesus Christ Superstar" opened last night in Bowker Auditorium. Performances will be held tonight, tomorrow, and April 9, 10 and 11 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $3 for UMass students, and $4 for the general public, and are available at the Bowker box office.

Billy Collura is well cast as Jesus; Stephen White and Scott McGinn make a nasty pair as Caiaphas and Annas; Jodi Leong (who resembles Yvonne Elliman of the 1973 movie version) beautifully sings the popular "I Don't Know How To Love Him"; and J.B. Wyker is hilarious as the wanton King Herod. The set, the costumes, and the extraordinary dancing are all reminiscent of the movie.

All members of the production are Five College students. Tickets for all shows are going fast. Tonight's performance is sold out, but some seats are still left for tomorrow and next week's shows.

If you're looking for a pleasant evening away from loud bands at bars, this production is for you.

Internship Fair offers experience

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

Students interested in finding job experience will have an opportunity this Monday when the office of Internships holds its annual Internship Fair.

Carol Pinkham, assistant program coordinator of the office, said, "the Internship Fair will be an opportunity for students to talk to representatives of various organizations from around the area. Representatives will be offering students supervised, practical experience in a professional environment for which they can earn academic credt."

Pinkham said the office mailed invitations to about 400 western Massachusetts companies in an effort to provide as many different types of internships as possible.

She said companies and organizations attending are involved in such areas as services for children and the elderly, public information groups, the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group, arts administration, television, public education, drug rehabilitation, extension services, energy management, nursing homes, special education in high shcools, and radio.

Pinkham described the open format of the fair, saying students will be encouraged to look around, talk, and return as many times as they wish.

The fair will be held from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

Cultures celebrated by International week

By PAUL GUEST
Collegian Correspondent

International Week will be kicked-off Sunday, April 5 at the University of Massachusetts by the International Students Association in conjunction with the Foreign Student Office.

"The students participating have learned from other students and want to show what they have got to offer," said Pat Gula, assistant foreign student advisor.

The week will focus on the International Fair which will be held Saturday, April 11, from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

There will be entertainment, food, films, and slide shows representing students from Turkey, Algeria, France, Nigeria, China, India, the Middle East, Italy, Sweden and other countries.

"The purpose of this event is to try and share the different cultures represented by the students," Gula said.

The fair will be set-up in a bazaar-type booth arrangement around the auditorium offering international foods to taste or maybe learning names in a foreign language, along with other types of expositions.

The International Week will start off with Indian Night on Sunday, April 5, at 6:30 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. Admission is $1.00. Included will be Indian classical music, dancing, a fashion show, and Indian food.

An International Table will be set-up in the Campus Center concourse all week from April 6-10, Monday through Friday, for information, publicity, and the sale of raffle tickets. The money raised will help pay the expenses of the fair.

A better chance for city kids

By KAREN-MARIE THOMAS
Black Affairs Staff

For a bright city kid, the public school system and the city streets can be less than kind. National scholarship program, ABC, offers these children "A Better Chance."

The program selects students who demonstrate potential but are hampered by financial problems, an inadequate school system or family instability and gives them the opportunity to obtain a quality education in a combined home-academic setting.

The high academic reputation of the Amherst Regional High school attracted ABC to this area 12 years ago. Housed in a gray Victorian house on North Prospect Street, the seven male students live with two tutors, and the resident director and her son. South Hadley houses the female counter-part of the program.

Although the house is home to these young men, Resident Director Aquila Ayana maintains an academic environment and delegates chores and responsibilities to the students.

"We don't always see eye to eye," she said. "We try to bring all our problems to our house meetings. We have house meetings once a week."

Ayana has been residence director for two years and she feels that the students have adapted well to the Amherst community.

"There is some initial culture shock. The students are told and understand what it means to come here," she said.

Students are recruited for the program during junior high school. Their motivation enables them to leave home and its familiar surrroundings at 14 and attend a majority white high school.

The students experienced comments and assumptions that the ABC program was a halfway house or for juvenile delinquents.

The ABC program is funded through local donations, fund-raising and a substantial contribution made by the United Fund.

David Green, Vincent Williams, David Robinson and Rocendo Marcillo are all from New York City. Samford Livingston and Kevin Nicholson hail from Trenton, N.J. while Keith Hill is a native of Nashville, TN. The seven students are juniors and seniors at the Amherst Regional High School.

Although the young men are actively involved in the community, their schoolwork remains their upmost priority. According to the Amherst Bulletin, out of 48 grades this semester, 46 were A's or B's.

"In the two years I've been here, it's never been a question who's going to college and who's not. At 14, these kids are talking about college," said Ayana.

Minister X raps MLK

By KIMBERLEY GREEN
Black Affairs Staff

Minister Alfred X, 48, talked to a small crowd of spectators about Dr. Martin Luther King and the past and future of black Americans in the Campus Center auditorium last night. Minister Alfred X, of the nation of Islam, formerly called, Rev. Alfred Skip Robinson, is now a follower of "the honorable Elijah Muhummad."

Minister X is the head minister of Mississippi, since he changed his religion a year ago, and accepted ministry under the nation of Islam.

When asked why he changed his belief, Minister X replied, "I just found who I am. Educational institutions in America don't teach us who we are. Islam enables me to live a better life, a righteous life, above all it gave me a closer image of God."

Minister X said he had a question for Mr. Ronald Reagan. "What are you going to do with 30 to 50 thousand people who have been enslaved for over 400 years?

"After accepting being Muslim and digging the roots of the bible and the Holy Koran, I know where we are. We are a people that God promised land to," he continued. "We were held slaves for 400 years."

After listening to some intriguing stories about his family and associates who had been ambushed by Klansmen and the actions he and his organization, "The United League of Tupelo, Mississippi" had to take against the assailants, he gave the crowd a message.

The reborn minister said that he loved Dr. Martin Luther King but, he (King) had made a mistake, he didn't acknowledge that the black people were losing their land.

"I say to Dr. King who dreamed that one day little black and white boys would join hands that, that is accomplished but the problem is worse. I say to Dr. King, how long, but not long, America is in it's last stage...I'm free, I fought, I bled, I died, I'm free at last," he said.

"Origin" the original source

"Origin", a Boston based group formed in 1979, consists of seven musicians who come from several parts of the world...Japan, Canada, Hawaii and America. The variety of backgrounds adds to the already high-quality talent of the individual musicians. This exclusive combination allows for the creation of a unique synthesis of styles.

Performing anything from jazz, funk, to the top 40's selections, they are at home in any setting. It's apparent that this attribute has made them a prime entertainment act for regional affairs.

"Origin" has performed at a number of locations including: The Chatau DeVille, Norfolk Prison (Norfolk, Mass.), Boston Jubilee 350 Events, Boston's City Hall Plaza, Boston University, and Bentley College just to name a few.

Most of the members of "Origin" are, or will soon be, graduates of the Berkley College of music, and are also highly skilled at writing and arranging as well. Add a strong voice to the music and you've got a band that is not only great to listen to, but also to dance to.

They say experience is the best teacher. Well, if that's what it takes to make it, "Origin" has got it. Many members of "Origin" have rendered their services to popular musicians, for example: the Gap Band, Crusaders, Phyllis Hyman, the Sugar Hill Gang, Stanley Clarke, and the list goes on. This just exemplifies the group's musical flexibility.

By name, Origin's members are, Robinette Woolridge singing lead vocals, Tadashi Yoshida - trumpet, Shigoto Suzuki on keyboards, Paul Mifsud playing the tenor sax, Weil Nemets - guitar, Malcom Stucky - bass, and Jack Martin on drums.

As part of the activities planned for Martin Luther King Week, the Black Mass Communications Project in conjunction with the Asian American Students Association and the Duke Ellington Music Committee presents, "A Spring Affair with Origin". The performance will begin at 8:00 p.m., April 14th, in the Student Union Ballroom. The sponsors ask that you come "Dressed to Impress", but however you come, you won't be disappointed, cause "Origin is original".

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Out of Control

Merciful justice and the lunacy of American lunacy

In December, John Lennon was shot dead by a man who is now probably seething in jealousy over his sudden loss of fame to America's newest "precious lunatic." I won't mention the name of President Reagan's would-be assassin, because I don't believe in ballyhooing criminals into tragic glory. I am among the few who believe this way, however — America somehow revels in autistic wonderment over its own indelicately shed blood. One might argue that we all want as much information as we can get when such unusual affairs take place, but this want is a result of media priming. We expect it, because we've been led to believe we have to know or care about the criminal involved.

Perhaps the story would have been better if the Secret Service had such a weapon that would evaporate a busy assassin in the middle of his act, such that no trace of his remains could be found or identified. "There is no suspect in the case, nor will there be one, but we are sure he won't do it again." (Of course this would never happen in America, the land where every public act is either a conspiracy or a potboiler plot, and the gluttonous public suffers from terminal 1963 Dallasophobia.)

I am convinced that if our new precious lunatic thought he would be evaporated anonymously from the face of the earth, or treated without any publicity, then he never would have attempted to show his love for Jodie Foster by killing or trying to kill a bunch of men walking out of a hotel.

What is particularly disconcerting in both the John Lennon and Ronald Reagan cases is that the gunmen got what they wanted out of their crimes, for the most part. In the Lennon case, the murder was a double act of premeditated crime, a "killing out of love," a la Charles Manson. The double crime was RAPE and MURDER, where the Hawaiian Lunatic whipped out his loaded phallic object and fucked John Lennon to death for all the love he couldn't otherwise shower upon the man. And in the Reagan case, the would-be killer proved his love for the fair damsel (whom he never met) by figuring he might go out and slay a couple of dragons with a .22 pistol.

We do not necessarily have to tolerate such behavior, regardless of the motives behind it. It may not be the lunatic's fault he's a lunatic — but it is his fault for not getting help, and it's also his fault for committing a crime.

Reagan's would-be assassin is a young man who apparently has a cancer of family hatred consuming him. He's a "runt of the litter," a loner, a man who probably saw love translated into dollar bills throughout his childhood. It seems only typical that the best defense will be bought to further incriminate the family in its mercenary attitudes. There is no defense in this case but "insanity," though for such a young man from such a posh background to be so murderously "insane" is not a promising reflection on his family. Furthermore, for the father to purchase insanity for his son is adding insult to an already hopeless situation.

Merciful justice (merciful to the wrong subject) is not entirely new in American legal circles. Let me excerpt a bit from a piece Mark Twain wrote in 1870, entitled "Our Precious Lunatic:"

"'Your Honor and Gentlemen: We the jury charged with the duty of determining whether the prisoner at the bar, _____ has been guilty of murder, in taking by surprise an unarmed man and shooting him to death, or whether the prisoner is afflicted with a sad but irresponsible insanity which at times can be cheered only by violent entertainment with firearms, do find as follows...we pronounce the said _____ INNOCENT OF MURDER, BUT CALAMITOUSLY INSANE.'

Twain continues, "It is dreadful to think that maybe the most awful calamity that can befall a man, namely, loss of reason, was precipitated upon this poor prisoner's head by a jury that could have hanged him instead, and so done him a mercy and his country a sevice.

"POST SCRIPT — LATER

"May 11 — I do not expect anybody to believe so astounding a thing, and yet it is the solemn truth that instead of instantly sending the dangerous lunatic to the insane asylum, the court has actually SET HIM AT LIBERTY. Comment is unnecessary."

Well. We shall see what happens in 1981.

The very act of murder is insane — yet American Justice insists in a spectacular Catch-22 that the insanity of premeditated murder is excusable by the very existence of the murder itself! Why can't the person who fires the gun be held responsible for his own deeds? There is a price to pay for antisocial behavior, and if the criminal is not caused to pay that price, but gets fame and notoriety instead, then it is all of us who must pay through a degeneration of society.

The other side of the flip side

I would like to thank the Collegian for its coverage of the intramural ice hockey championship. However, certain comments in Stephen Freker's column ("On the Flip Side," March 31) warrant clarification.

First, What the Pucks, not Breen's Bruins, were the defending champs. The Bruins were champs in the spring of 1980.

Second, the assertion that the intramural officials are far from professional is misleading. Though it is true that all officials are students and many lack officiating experience, it is also true that some are highly qualified; the hockey program has always had at least one professional referee on the staff.

Third, and most important, the implication that there exists more than a bare minimum of unsportsmanlike violence is, I believe, incorrect. In the eight semesters since I initiated the program, some 400 games later, this is the very first instance of a bench-clearing altercation (a fact, I'm sure, that not even our punctilious brethren at Harvard could boast of their hockey program). And to be fair, many of the players on both teams refrained from fighting and wanted to get on with the play. Those that were fighting received suspensions of varied length from next semester's play.

Without question, there have been other isolated instances of individual unsportsmanlike conduct; this is an unfortunate by-product of intense competition. For this reason, our program's rules include severe disciplinary action for transgressors, and our officials are trained to liberally implement the necessary unsportsmanlike penalties.

Considering the league's high level of talent and intensity of play, it is my observation that, over the years, the vast majority of players have shown remarkable self-restraint and sportsmanship. Admittedly, during the league's more inchoate years, it was my inclination, just as it appears to be Stephen Freker's, to be judgemental and unfairly critical of players who take their hockey so seriously. It seemed to me that they should play for fun, exercise, and all the other ostensibly constructive reasons the so called "enlightened sportsman" advocates.

I have learned to both deeply admire the supreme effort that players put out, and to respect the ineffable personal meaning that each extracts from being a responsible, contributing part of a team. It is no wonder that play consisting of such emotional and physical zeal should, from time to time, result in flareups. These are players who take their hockey so seriously that not only do they pay upwards of $300 per team each semester, but travel to Greenfield twice a week to boot.

But understanding the flare-ups is not to condone them. As far as I'm concerned, the administrators of this program have in the past and will continue in the future to demand a successful coexistance between reasonably safe, sportsmanlike hockey and the highly competitive atmosphere the players pay for.

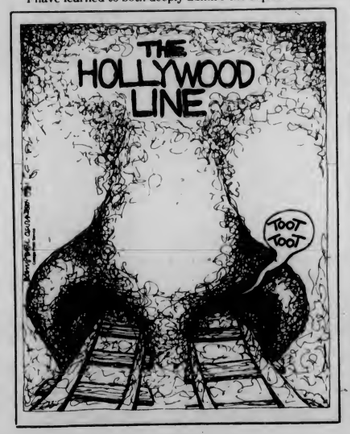
Intramural Ice Hockey Program



Keeping the figures straight

I'm not any more enamored of the level of defense spending than is Colleen Siff (Where's our tax money going?, Collegian, 4/2/81) but any effort to reduce this part of the budget is not aided by the use of incorrect figures. President Reagan has requested Budget Authority of $192.4 billion for Fiscal Year '82, roughly 36.2 percent of the $696 billion proposed 1982 budget and far less than the 50 percent that Ms. Siff has suggested. It is indeed time to "wonder about the percentage of tax dollars being allocated to the military" — but let's understand which numbers we're wondering about.

The UMass women's track team will host their season opener against Harvard and UNH tomorrow at 12:00 at the Llewellyn Derby Track.

Mittmen face Blackbears in home opener

By MIKE ESTRADA
Collegian Staff

The University of Maine at Orono, last year's New England College Champion, will challenge the early season optimism of the Minutemen tomorrow, when they battle UMass in the locals' home opening double header, starting at 12:00 p.m. on Earl Lorden Field.

The high noon showdown, the Minutemen's first game since returning from action in San Diego, will include two of the top three squads tapped for local success in the two months ahead. UMaine shares the number one spot in the latest New England Coaches Poll with Harvard and UMass (5-6) is third.

If the Minutemen have any aspirations of success "we will have to beat Maine," UMass coach Dick Bergquist said. "They are a good team and will be one of the top teams in New England this year." The veteran coach said he didn't mind opening against such a powerhouse saying "we're as ready as they are."

The Bears head coach John Winkin knows what he has and which abilities are questionable. Like UMass, UMaine is solid defensively, returning 17 lettermen. Like the Minutemen, the Bears should have a potent offense. They batted .283 as a team in 1980, including a .346 average attained by All New England selection Kevin Buckley, who Winkin calls "the most talented player we have." "the most talented player we have."

But like the Minutemen, the Black Bears have a mostly young and inexperienced pitching staff. Lost to graduation is UMaine's workhorse left hander Skip Clark, who achieved a 7-4 record with a 2.64 earned run average over 75 innings last year. "The key to the Bear season," will be junior Tom Mahan, who achieved 5-3, 3.29 marks over 52 innings in 1980, Winkin said.

Although starting hurlers for Maine were unavailable at press time, the Minutemen can probably expect to see either Mahan, Joe Johnson (3-2, 4.07 ERA in 1980) or Don Mason (3-1, 4.22) slated for one of the starts tomorrow.

Bergquist will send righthanders Chuck Thompson and Vin Todd to the mound against UMaine. After being shelled in the opener out west against San Diego State University enroute to an 18-1 UMass loss, Thompson settled down and has so far compiled a 2-1 record, including two impressive full-game stints.

"Chuck pitched two complete games and is certainly ready physically," Bergquist said. "He recovered well after that (the shelling) and should be one of our stoppers this year."

UMass shortstop Vin Bonanno shown during the final game of the Sun-lite Classic held last week in San Diego.

Todd, owner of a 1-0 record, is throwing well, Bergquist said, despite cutting the third finger of his throwing hand on broken glass earlier last month. He too pitched a complete game in California while compiling a 2.77 ERA, the best on the staff.

The Bears retrieved a 6-9 record from their Spring trip to Miami, Fla.. They lost convincingly in their first three games against the University of Miami, the number one ranked team in the country. But in the fourth game with the hosts, Mahan had his best outing in a 3-2 loss. The Bear's most impressive win was a 15-10 slugfest victory over the University of Michigan, the number 10 team in the nation.

Read fever may plague the Bears tomorrow. They face Fairfield University in a double header in Connecticut today before making the hop to Amherst to face the well-rested, high-spirited Minutemen, who batted .324 as a team over their last three games.

Trackmen open season at BC

By KENNETH ROLT
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts trackmen will open their outdoor season tomorrow with the Boston College Eagles, at Boston College.

Last years version of the meet saw B.C. edge by UMass, 86½ to 76½. This years meet should be just as close.

Coach Ken O'Brien is optimistic about his teams chances this year "Teamwise we'll be better than indoors."

"In indoors, there are the 1000, 880, 600, and 440 yard runs. Outdoors its just the 440 and 880. We won't have to spread our middle distance men around."

Like last year, a strong showing in the running events will be the teams greatest asset. Admittedly, says O'Brien, the field events lack depth. "We're weak in the horizontal and vertical jumps, and have many young inexperienced throwers."

Leading a strong distance corps will be junior Paul Beaulieu. An NCAA qualifier indoors this year, Beaulieu broke Randy Thomas' indoor UMass record in the mile with a swift 4:04.8 clocking.

Senior Co-Captain Bob Pearson and sophomore John Wright will lead the hurdlers. Pearson will run the 400 meter intermediates and the mile relay, while Wright will run the highs, as well as an occassional 200, or relay leg.

The 400 meter will be one of the most deep events for UMass. Senior Co-Captain Rick Trunfio, Senior Rick Cady, and Pearson will be joined by freshman Brian Osbourne. All have impressive marks in the 400, Cady having his best race indoors this year on Boston University's speedy oval, sprinting to a 48.5 school mark, while Osbourne set his own UMass record in the 600 yard run, an equally impressive 1:11.6.

Sophomore Stephen Hyder, the team's leading scorer in indoors this year, will be the team's mainstay in the shot put, while junior Mark Grasso will again see double duty in the long and triple jumps.

Bill DeVarney, a junior, will run the 100, 200 and relay races. DeVarney succesfully defended his New England Athletics Congress championship indoors this year, and holds the school mark in the 100 meter dash, 10.6 seconds.

In addition to BC, the Minutemen will face during the regular season, Northeastern University, the University of Rhode Island, and Dartmouth College. Those schools represent 4 of the 6 top teams in New England, with Boston University and the University of Connecticut excluded from the schedule. The trackmen will open at home, with their hosting of the UMass Relays, on Saturday, April 11.

Rugby hosts MIT and Central Conn

By FRANK NAGLE
Collegian Staff

The UMass Rugby Club will begin its' season tomorrow, hosting M.I.T. and Central Connecticut College.

The club is carrying four teams this spring in which the A team would be the most competitive and having the B, C, and D teams following in order. But this team set-up might not reflect the strength of each team.

According to coach Robert Laurence, each team will have experienced players. "On our B team this spring we have nine players who were on the A team last fall. The C team has five players and the D team has one player who have all played for the A team in the past." Laurence feels the strength for the spring club is the overall quality of the players.

Some of players expected to help the A team include Joe Lambert, Bruce Simmonds, Paul Morrison, Paul Borden, Brent Goldstien, and George Economou. All of them have experience and Coach Laurence is quite confident when he says, "We should not lose more than two or three games in non-tournament competition. Our A team should be significantly better."

The strength of the B team is in their fast backfield and large front line. Glen Conway, P.J. Nee, and Scotty Baker are expected to be among the standout players for the B team.

Tomorrow the A and C teams will play M.I.T.'s A and B teams, while the B and D teams will play Central Connecticut's A and B teams. The first game starts at 12 noon, and continue every hour and a half consecutively.

Remembering the man from Newport

There is, in the basketball office down at Boyden, a plain cardboard poster, handwritten in green magic marker, taped to the door of one of the assistant coaches' offices. "There's no reason," the sign reads, "to be bitter about anything."

Ray Wilson is not bitter about anything.

It has been two weeks since Wilson learned he was no longer the men's basketball coach at the University of Massachusetts; two weeks since Ray Wilson learned that being a coach meant learning how to deal with being fired.

"I'm too old to be bitter," says Wilson, who has spent a good portion of his 48 years in organized basketball. A standout athlete in both baseball and basketball at Rogers High in his hometown of Newport, R.I., the latter sport took him onto Boston University, where he earned his degree in physical education in 1958. There was never really any question as to what Ray Wilson would do with his life. He would be a teacher — a teacher of the sport of basketball.

"I've always felt that basketball is the one sport that can be taught," Wilson said once. "It has so many basic fundamentals which must be instilled through teaching. Talent wins ball games, but talent without fundamentals will not win as many."

After ten successful years coaching high school ball at Roosevelt in New York, Wilson came to UMass as an assistant in 1968, followed next year by one of his products at Roosevelt, the Intern — later to become the Doctah, Julius Erving. UMass compiled a 172-90 won-lost record during Wilson's ten years as an assistant, with the exception of the 1976-77 season when he coached at Davidson College.

And, then, Ray Wilson inherited a sinking ship.

In the midst of its slide, Wilson was given the UMass men's basketball program and told to turn it around. It didn't turn around, and Ray Wilson was fired.

"I feel strange," Wilson said the other day. "For the first time in 20 years, I'm not tensed up inside. But then I sometimes feel extremely disappointed that I didn't have enough time to complete the job."

That job, Wilson had always maintained, would take five years — only two of which he got a chance to follow through on. One Friday, three weeks ago, Wilson had a meeting with UMass athletic administrators, during which the group re-evaluated the men's program. One week later, that same group of administrators told Ray Wilson they had offered his job to someone else.

"It's been hard, for both me and my family," Wilson says. "You do something for eleven, twelve years, you get used to the familiarity of the same place, and then it's gone. It just hasn't really sunk through yet, I suppose."

What Wilson the man never let sink through to Wilson the coach was the shady side of college basketball, and after his two rebuilding years were destroyed by injury and academic troubles among his players, perhaps integrity ended the UMass career of Ray Wilson.

"I could sit down with a professor and maybe talk to him about a player, ask for special considerations, but I've got to be honest with the kids and myself," Wilson says. "I can't give them anything they don't deserve. That's just not right. I can't let basketball dictate what kind of person I am going to be. And, if a kid flunks after I've sat down and helped him and told him to do the work, well, there's nothing more I can do."

There is more that Ray Wilson could have done. He could have done what many coaches do. He could ask for leniency on his players, he could lean of professors, he could probably falsify transcripts if he wanted to. But he never did and never will. In an age where integrity in the college ranks is a scarce commodity, Ray Wilson abounds in it.

For now, it is a period of re-evaluation. For Wilson, his wife Gloria and his four children, it is a time of transition and a small amount of uncertainty. He will feel out the job market — in which his desirability is quite high — and decide what is best. It could be in, and it could be out of the sport of basketball. There's a strong chance that it will be within the game.

"Basketball has been good to me," Wilson says. "I think the one thing that will keep me in the game is theyoung people. I don't know if I do anything for them, but they certainly do something for me."

Ray Wilson will never be remembered as the best coach at the University of Massachusetts, but he was certainly one of the school's finest persons — and, the hell with the win-loss record, being the type of man Ray Wilson is still matters so much more.

OUR COVER

Delbert McClinton leaned up against Music Editor Byron Laursen's 1956 Ford pickup truck, Neil Zlozower took the picture, and we finally nailed this elusive performer

IN ONE EAR & OUT THE OTHER

Given that Ampersand is directed to the college aged, there might conceivably be something less than gratifying in praise coming from an almost thirty-year-old librarian.

I am nonetheless obliged to Judith Sims for her film reviews. It was when she — almost alone it seems among critics — saw through Kramer vs. Kramer that my attention was attracted. I have come to depend upon her observations.

Finally, as one who (professionally) surveys scores of periodic publications each week, my compliments to Ampersand and its staff for a crisp and intelligent supplement.

anonymous
Charlottesville, Va

I just read Glenn Abel's article about comedian Tom Parks in February's Ampersand. Mr. Abel needs to get his facts straight. Georgia Tech is not in Athens, Georgia. Athens is the home of the University of Georgia and the national champion Bulldogs. Georgia Tech is that little trade school located in Atlanta.

Kathy Kardoes
Athens, Georgia

Author Abel realized his mistake too late. He hoped no one would be rude enough to mention it. Fat chance.

I am quite angered by your concluding paragraph of the Readers' Poll. I must ask: What do you expect? I would venture to guess that relatively few college students, especially those in smaller towns, are exposed to the artistic, new-ground breaking material you so obviously expected us to name. True, I very rarely see such "great" art films as Fellini's Satyricon, or the latest Ingmar Bergman film, or even one by Francois Truffaut. Did you ever stop to think that maybe, just maybe, Ordinary People or even Airplane are better films? Also, you take it for granted that all college students are well versed in artistic endeavors, when they very well may not be.

I just want to add one thing about critics: I feel sorry for you. You simply cannot seem to enjoy anything unless it is "vibrant," "artistic," or "innovative." What's so bad about Top 40? If you use your limited intellect, you may just realize that that is all many college students are exposed to, and have not the "benefit" of your "critical" or "artistic" prowess.

I really resent your patronizing attitude and your belief that there is a right or wrong response to questions based on opinion. Could it be that the fault lies in your poll or in yourselves, or is that too sacrilegious to even contemplate?

Duncan Kennedy
San Diego, CA

Instead of being dismayed at the absence of "off-beat" and "unusual" selections in the first annual readers poll, try viewing the selections from a different angle. Non-recognition of performers like Bruce Springsteen and the E Street Band would merely reveal your readers' ignorance and lack of taste. As it stands, however, the readers' selection of Bruce and the band for a number of the categories reinforces the notion that we are in fact an "informed, intelligent, and educated" audience.

Ampersand ran several Readers' Polls in our first year of publication; we were dazzled then by the wide-ranging interests, the unexpected specializations in the midst of the educated mainstream. This time, our tone was not patronizing; it was simply disappointed. Our readers are informed, educated and intelligent; their interests just aren't very wide-ranging anymore (geography is no excuse).

I want to let you know that I really enjoyed the latest Ampersand. I really think you do an excellent job on this publication. There's always something interesting and worthwhile to read in it. I particularly like the concert and record reviews. I think you honestly try to cover as many groups as possible, but I feel that you have continually neglected to print anything about one of America's foremost (not commercially but musically) groups — the Grateful Dead. I believe that the Dead deserve some space, especially in this, their 15th anniversary year; like Bill Graham has said, "the Dead are not only the best at what they do, they're the only ones who do it." Ampersand, too, is close to this ideal. Keep up the good work!

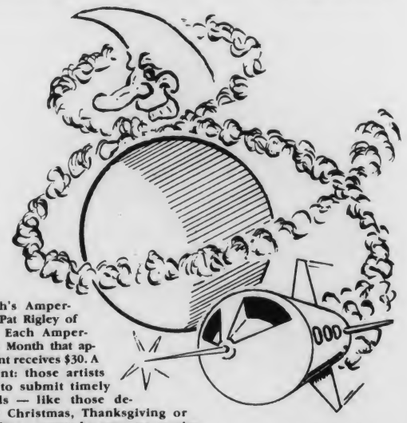
Send your comments, complaints and praise (especially praise) to In One Ear, 1680 N. Vine, Suite 900, Hollywood, CA 90028.

Last month we neglected to list Howard Rosenberg as the photographer responsible for the John Hiatt picture.

Sorry, sorry.



This month's Ampersand is by Pat Rigley of Davis, CA. Each Ampersand of the Month that appears in print receives $30. A Helpful Hint: those artists who wish to submit timely Ampersands — like those designed for Christmas, Thanksgiving or other holidays — must be sure we receive them two months before the holiday. Otherwise, they sit around for a year. Send original Ampersands (on sturdy white paper, in black ink, with name and address clearly printed on the artwork) to Ampersand of the Month, 1680 N. Mommie (& Daddy) Dearest

ACCORDING TO The New York Daily News, actress Faye Dunaway is taking instruction in Roman Catholicism so she can convert before a June marriage to photographer Terry O'Neill, who's the father of her son, Liam. (O'Neill has children by his first wife, living in England.)

According to on-the-set observers of Mommie Dearest, the currently filming Joan Crawford biography starring Dunaway, she ought to bypass the regular priest and hire an exorcist. Apologists claim Ms. Dunaway "always acts difficult when she has a difficult role." Observers say she's pitched countless tantrums, lost exorbitantly expensive jewelry, harangued O'Neill mercilessly, rewritten scenes to her own liking, cut up expensive hand-made wigs and taken upon herself the re-designing of costumes by four-time Academy Award winner Irene Sharaff. Producer Frank Yablans reportedly sought studio permission to fire Dunaway, then backed down when she promised to shape up. The actress' antics have caused the picture's shooting schedule to be revised many times. Yablans' technique, when running late, is to throw away whole chunks of script material in order to finish a picture on time.

Breakups . . . and Not

"IT IS TRUE," affirms Columbia Records. Rockpile, whom one critic called the greatest rock group since the Band, has broken up after only one album and tour. "The split was amicable," Columbia's spokesperson continues, "and the artists will be pursuing separate careers with us." Insiders say the split wasn't all that friendly. Rumors have it that guitarist Dave Edmunds could no longer stomach ultra-pushy manager Jake Rivera.

The Last Metro

starring Catherine Deneuve, Gerard Depardieu, Heinz Bennent, written by Francois Truffaut, Suzanne Schiffman, and Jean-Claude Grumberg, directed by Truffaut

As a look at life in and around a Paris theater during the German occupation, The Last Metro is chillingly casual in its depiction of anti-semitism and adaptation to tyranny. Everyone deals in the black market, an actor (Depardieu) must sign a declaration that he has no Jews in his family before he is hired, while yet another actress is refused work because she is Jewish. Deneuve is the manager/leading lady of the theater whose Jewish husband supposedly escaped the Nazis, but is in fact hiding in the theater's basement. She lives a double life, cooking and caring for her husband by night, holding the theater and company together by day. A terrific character, played by a less than terrific actress, it's a good thing Deneuve is beautiful, because her acting talent wouldn't support a family of field mice.

The Last Metro (which refers to the German curfew) seems to be a warm and mostly compassionate look at these survivors, their everyday courage and their unpleasant compromises, but ultimately, it turns out to be a three-way love story, with echoes of Jules and Jim. The film ends almost as a valentine to Deneuve, with her face framed in a red oval.

I left the film feeling as if I'd missed something; I kept waiting for the clincher, the profound insight into Men and Women Under Siege, but it never came. I was perfectly willing to settle for Insights into a Marriage Under Seige, but these were slender and misleading.

If Truffaut is trying to tell us that our mundane personal problems are more important to us than politics, justice and liberty, he could have made the point more obviously, more bitingly. On the other hand, when compared to recent films emanating from Hollywood and other film capitals, The Last Metro is clearly above that crowd, the work of a man who loves making movies and knows how to make them so well that he holds our attention even when he isn't telling us what we want to know.

Napoleon

directed by Abel Gance, presented by Francis Coppola, new music composed by Carmine Coppola

The silent cinema was history long before Radio City Music Hall was opened in 1932, but it still seemed as if this was the moment for which it had been created: the resurrection of Abel Gance's 1927 epic Napoleon. This latest extravaganza of Francis Coppola, a series of showings of the four-hour movie at the grand old showplace (which was almost closed for good two years ago), complete with live orchestra accompaniment, had the air of a major event from the start, and somehow the confusion at the beginning — dozens of ticket-holders, stranded in the back by a shortage of ushers as the lights went out, began to demonstrate noisily — only reinforced the feeling.

The 1927 premiere also took place in an impressive setting — the Paris Opera. What that audience saw was a gigantic cinema, of sweeping gestures and overpowering images and effects, equalled only by Eisenstein and Griffith and approached since then only by Kurosawa. In creating his romantic portrayal of Napoleon from childhood up to his Italian campaign of 1796 (the first of a projected six-part series!), Gance called upon every resource of the cinema and invented a few of his own. Extreme long shots, backlighting, moving-camera shots, and pyrotechnic editing were used with a previously unknown freedom. The most astonishing innovation was Polyvision — a three-screen precursor of Cinerama used not only for wide-screen images but for complex multiple-image effects which have not been duplicated since.

That performance was a triumph, as were others in Europe. Then, suddenly, a hokey little melodrama with music called The Jazz Singer opened in America, and Napoleon was doomed.

It was the British director and film historian Kevin Brownlow (whose wonderful book on the silent cinema, The Parade's Gone By, includes the best account of Gance's career and the sad fate of Napoleon) who came upon a few reels of the film while still a schoolboy and began to search for missing pieces of it in an effort to reconstruct the original. Except for the triptychs — only the last of the four wide-screen sequences is known to survive — Brownlow had come close enough by the mid-Seventies to start showing the movie around. One of those who saw it was Coppola, who had the crazy idea of putting it on at Radio City.

In January, after successful screenings in London, he did it, with Carmine Coppola, his father, leading the American Symphony Orchestra, periodically spelled by Leonard Raver at the huge Music Hall organ, in an original score whose romanticism was a close match for that of the movie. The 1981 New York audience responded to the film much the way the Paris spectators did. There was cheering and applause for scene after scene — for a pillow fight in which the screen split into nine images; for the dazzling intercutting of Napoleon's escape from Corsica in a storm and a human storm in Paris; for the vivid, brutal recreation of the Battle of Toulon; for the wild bacchanalia of the Bal des Victimes; for the startling reincarnations of the major figures of the French Revolution (Gance himself appears briefly as Saint-Just). A few viewers deserted during the long, drawn-out courtship of Josephine, but the three-screen finale in Italy, crowned by Gance's coup de grace — the superimposition of colored leader to form a giant Tricolor — brought the audience to its feet as if they had discovered the cinema for the first time.

Abel Gance is still alive, but at 91 his constitution is no longer up to the rigors of a transatlantic journey. Thus it was Francis Coppola who came out before the movie to read a short message from Gance and inform the audience that their applause would be transmitted to Gance by transatlantic phone. That applause must have sounded sweet to a man who had to wait half a century for the vindication of his life's work.

DELBERT McCLINTON

BY BYRON LAURSEN

Over the past twenty-odd years, Delbert McClinton has been working up a special instrument. Starting in sticks-of-Texas clubs where customers might walk in "with pistols older'n their grandaddies stuck in their back pocket," the Lubbock-born, 41-year-old singer has been working extraordinary shadings into his blue, rust-flecked voice, an instrument that can express yearning, lust, joy, experience and regret in a single, short phrase. Now, with a lean R&B mixture called "Giving It up for Your Love," a track that actually sounds too good for radio fare, McClinton finally has a Top Ten hit.

"And it didn't come a bit too early, either," says McClinton. "I knew all the records I did were good," he adds over a midafternoon tonic water in a Beverly Hills cocktail lounge, "but I was wonderin' if anyone else was gonna know it before I was dead." McClinton sidles back into his low, naugahyde chair. "I don't need that posthumous kinda s--t. I want it now."

Surrounding us are two publicists, representing Capitol Records and Muscle Shoals Sound Productions, the famed Alabama outfit where McClinton's new album, The Jealous Kind, was produced. Sitting demurely by is Donna Sue McClinton, wife and frequent song inspiration. Less demure, if equally silent, is McClinton's lean, intense road manager, Jack Borders.

I ask McClinton if he paid close attention to the slow, steady chart progress of "Giving It up for Your Love," a climb that started last fall.

"You bet your ass I did," he responds happily "I watched it everyday." He leans forward so his elbows prop solidly against his knees and he joins his hands loosely. "Getting a hit changes everything for me, really. I can make a lot of plans that I could only dream of before. In the first place, I won't have to work eight days a week just to make a living. I just had a three-week vacation, after working every day since October. I'd never had three weeks off before."

Three plans dominate McClinton's future: a major tour of the Southwest and Midwest until May, a new album when that tour ends and — in between, somehow — moving self, wife Donna, six-year-old son Clay and their elegant 1947 Chrysler from Fort Worth to the Pacific-facing canyons north of Los Angeles. "Fort Worth in the winter just don't make it," says McClinton, "and there's a lot of people out here I want to work with."

Will he work again with Jerry Williams, author of the current hit?

"Possibly. He's a very happy individual right now. The last time I talked to him, he was raisin' hogs and livin' in Hico, Texas."

Suddenly, McClinton remembers to tell his road manager that he accepted a date for June: the graduation party of a wealthy Austinite's daughter.

"How much?" Borders demands.

"$7,500.00."

"Hell, Delbert. That's not enough. I gotta make a phone call."

As Borders pivots out of the bar, McClinton grins broadly. "Jack useta be a Marine," he explains.

McClinton started at age 19, leading a hot Fort Worth R&B band called the Strait Jackets. Famous blues singers, the likes of Howlin' Wolf, Lightnin' Hopkins and Jimmy Reed, were apt to choose McClinton's group for backup service. Boasts McClinton: "I still got a microphone Jimmy Reed puked on."

In 1960, McClinton's LeCam Records version of Sonny Boy Williamson's "Wake up Baby" became the first white artist's record played on KNOK, the local black station. Coincidentally, "Giving It up for Your Love" is now an item on soul stations in the South.

In 1962, backing Bruce Channel on "Hey Baby" with his harmonica, McClinton toured England. A twenty-two-year-old John Lennon there sought him out for a backstage harp lesson. During 1964-65, as part of the Ron-Dels, McClinton bounced through three label deals and scratched the bottom of the charts with "If You Really Want Me To, I'll Go."

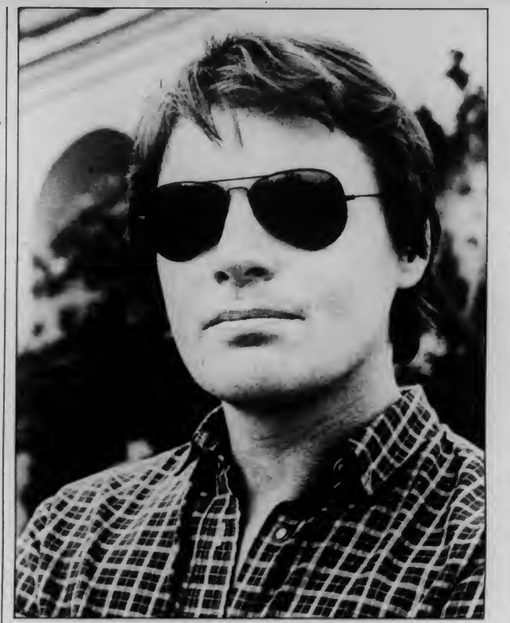
Came the Seventies. McClinton tried Los Angeles. His two countrified, R&B flavored albums with keyboard player Glen Clark for Clean Records are now highly prized by collectors. Bonnie Raitt found the song "Sugar Mama"on Delbert & Glen, the first release. Subject to Change, the second, contains "Cold November," which remains one of McClinton's most affecting songs.

"Thought I'd be a star by today," laments a song based on the Delbert and Glen experiences, "But I'm sweepin' out a warehouse in West LA." Fortunately, Emmylou Harris lifted that song, the country rocker "Two More Bottles of Wine," off Victim of Life's Circumstances — one of a series of terrific but low-selling records McClinton did for ABC Records in 1975-76. Some long-term fans call this trilogy, which also includes Genuine Cowhide and Love Rustler, the best of McClinton's recorded work. Excellence and lavish reviews notwithstanding, ABC did little to popularize the albums. By the time that hapless company got swallowed by the MCA Corporation, McClinton was out of the picture.

"I closed a lotta record companies," McClinton jokes. His next stop, in 1978, was Georgia's Capricorn Records. Once flourishing via the Allman Brothers and political help its owner had extended candidate Jimmy Carter in 1976, Capricorn was in decline when McClinton arrived. But his first LP there, Second Wind, brought out the rock writers in droves — myself included.

"You may be talkin' to me in jail before the night is out," were the first spoken words I heard from Delbert McClinton. Backstage at the Euphoria, a dingy, produce-district club in Portland, Oregon, he was fuming after a near punch-out with the club's boneheaded soundman. The owner told him to get out. punch-out with the club's boneheaded soundman. The owner told him to get out Instead, McClinton stayed and came back the next night too, rigging his own sound system with Fender amps and playing a razor-sharp set that drew on everything from early Waylon Jennings to Taj Mahal.

"I thought I was a bad motherf---r that night," McClinton recalls with a wide smile. "And I got him believin' it too . . . even if the motherf---r never paid me."



"I'm a victim of life's circumstances/ Raised around barrooms and Friday night dances/ Singin' them old Country songs/ Half the time endin' up some place I don't belong."

Delbert McClinton

Capricorn folded its tents just as Keeper of the Flame, the second release, was making the charts. But important groundwork was laid. John Belushi and Dan Aykroyd caught McClinton's New York club shows and joked about stealing his tight, versatile band for the Blues Brothers. Instead, they stole his "B Movie Box Car Blues" for the triple platinum Briefcase Full of Blues album. They also wangled an appearance date for McClinton, who can look roguishly sexy with half an effort, on Saturday Night Live.

"Yeah," McClinton acknowledges, "that helped a lot. If it hadn't been for that publishing money, and my wife's help financially, I couldn't've done it. I couldn't've kept the hand together."

On the new album, McClinton sings songs previously done by Ray Charles, Al Green, the Temptations, Van Morrison and Joe Cocker. On past albums he's covered such heavy hitters as James Brown, Taj Mahal, Johnny Cash, Fats Domino, Mick Jagger and Aretha Franklin. I ask if he's ever intimidated, knowing he'll be compared to such potent originals.

"No," McClinton says, "it doesn't bother me. Because if I can't do it, I won't." Abruptly, Jack Borders reenters with a satisfied gleam alight in his eyes. "What happened?" McClinton asks.

"$10,000.00," Borders says, settling back expansively with a fresh drink, "and after the gig they're flying us to Fort Worth for some Messican food."

THE AMAZING RICKY JAY

BY JUDITH SIMS

Ricky Jay came to dinner eight years ago (I didn't see him again until this interview, but never mind). In preparation for this major event, I left out every deck of cards I owned (not subtle, but effective) — six decks, in various conditions and ages. Jay didn't pay much attention to them until late in the evening. As guests assembled around the coffee table he casually shuffled and fanned one deck; the other decks were in a bowl off to the side. Then, the Moment I'd Been Waiting For: "Pick a card," he said. I extracted the queen of spades. "Place it face up in the deck, anywhere in the deck." I did. All the other cards were face down, the queen was peering up. Jay placed the cards back in their box, then indicated, casually, that the packs in limbo on the edge of the coffee table should be examined. I opened each box, scrambling through the pasteboards; in every single deck the queen of spades was pointing in the opposite direction. We were amazed. I'm still amazed.

He doesn't look or act like any other magician. No top hat and tails, no Doug Henning sequins or boxes, no waxy mustache, no well-rehearsed patter. Jay looks like a large hippie, a Sixties speed-rapper with mid-torso brown hair (which he strokes often) flowing over a natty three-piece suit. His hands look ordinary, but they make birds appear, money disappear, cards fly in and out of decks and over entire buildings; his hands transform the shape and substance and even location of a given item. Jay is also distinguished from the black-cape crowd because he's funny.

He is not a jokey punch-line comedian but rather a beguiling story teller who chortles over humanity's madness, relishing every morsel of weirdness that comes his way (such as his adventures performing on a Princess cruise ship for several weeks, or opening for Emmylou Harris in Lake Tahoe). A raconteur, of which we need more.

He's also an author, of an unfortunately out-of-print humorous instruction manual called Cards as Weapons. "The book is a lot like my act," Jay said, "utterly ridiculous but with some philosophy and actual card throwing instructions." He is currently at work on a history of "unusual entertainers over a 300 year period, people who were absolutely famous in their day. They are weirdos, but they were really famous. It's called Genius or Charlatan? because so many of them are in that nether world, like Wolford Bodie, who called himself 'Bloodless Surgeon, Stage Electrician and Hypnotist.'"

Jay has even written a pilot for a TV series, "but I really can't talk about that now." He could talk about his work as technical advisor on the film Escape Artist, directed by Caleb Deschanel (The Black Stallion), starring Ryan's son and Tatum's brother, Griffin O'Neal. "I taught Griffin to do real sleight of hand, it was important for us to actually do the magic without camera trickery."

Jay himself seems easily amazed — witness his new routine, inspired by a newspaper article, an actual report about "The face of Jesus on a tortilla," in which a Mrs. Rubio of New Mexico was convinced she saw the face of Christ on her tortilla. "They have it in a plastic box, people make pilgrimages to New Mexico to see this tortilla," Jay said, utter amazement in his voice. "Anyway," he continued, "There's a classic magic effect called spirit painting where canvases are initialed and examined and put into a box, and a wet oil painting actually comes out. It's visually done. This effect was once used by fraudulent mediums in seances. I read the article in my act (I've done this effect only once, at McCabe's in L.A.) then brought some guy up from the audience; he picked out two of the four tortillas I had initialed and held them, one on top of the other, in his hand. I then asked him to concentrate on a figure that would be easily associated with American life, something easily rendered in a few lines. I was leading the guy to think of Lincoln on purpose. The guy said he had it. I moved my hands around in the air, lifted off the top tortilla — and there was a happy face on the tortilla!" Jay is thoroughly enjoying himself. "I looked at the guy as if it were his fault — I shook his hand and said 'Have a nice day.' Later I gave him some refried beans on the tortilla and a bottle of Dos Equis!"

Throughout this tale, Jay's voice has bulged with barely suppressed laughter. He loves his work.

But he also worries: about the fact that he's still not a world famous magician/comedian/writer, in spite of an average of one appearance per month on national television for three years (mostly daytime talk shows). About the state of the art in magic; since magic effects are not copyrightable, they are frequently stolen by less talented, less original performers. "Magic is the only art form in the world that has been shaped by amateurs," Jay said emphatically. "Most people's view of acting is the theater or movies, where they've seen a professional performance, but most people who've seen magic have seen some relative do it, or some jerk who's come to their high school—semi-professionals or absolute amateurs."

Jay himself was taught by an amateur — his grandfather. "He was one of a dying breed, a sensational amateur who took great pleasure in turning gigs over to professionals." Jay began doing card tricks when he was 4; by the time he was 7 he'd already appeared on television. Born in Brooklyn and raised in New York and New Jersey, Jay's early years and family life are not happy subjects. "I was always being arrested for being incorrigible, it was an utterly chaotic situation at home; my family and I have not talked for years. The first comedy I did was telling family stories in high school." Jay attended Cornell, Illinois, New York and Columbia universities, bouncing around with no clear career goals, but always perfecting his magic. He enrolled in Cornell's hotel school: "I was so naive, I actually thought I could run a casino in Las Vegas because I'd be the only one who would know about cards and food. Little knowing they don't let the chef anywhere near the casino!"

But Jay has logged a number of hours in casinos since then. "I was banned from playing in a few casinos in Puerto Rico" because he could win so easily; at other times he was hired to spot cheaters (dealers, not customers), and even gave lessons in card handling. "I still have lots of friends who are dealers and card hustlers." How did he manage to avoid the life of a con man? "It was very tempting at certain times in my life, but I'm too much of a ham. If you're a card hustler, your whole life is pretending you're someone you're not. You play down your skill, generally you deal to a partner who wins the money, you can't even say 'God, I'm really hot tonight.' Ostentation gets you killed. As opposed to a performer, who has immediate gratification, which is obviously essential to me. That's the toughest thing for me as a writer. I write one sentence I think is good and I call people up."

So far in his long (nearly 30-year) checkered career Jay's greatest acclaim and attention came in London, where he hosted his own special (offered to him after just one appearance on another show). Jay refused to host a show with a bunch of magicians; rather, he suggested a format where each guest "made" magic — Mummenschanz, Clifford Guest, a ventriloquist without a dummy; and Bruce Schwartz, an "utterly devastating" adult puppeteer. Jay did comedy bits throughout until the end: "I took a piece of tissue paper and tore it into the shape of a moth, then rolled the paper up into a ball. With the camera in on a tight frame of my hands, I changed it into a live moth. Freeze frame, roll credits, and then the credits stopped and the moth went right to the end of the frame and circled around, then the final music and the show was over. Doing that was worth ten years of schlock gigs." So far Jay has been unsuccessful in convincing the BBC to release that special to American television.

Jay will resume touring colleges this spring (he doesn't always do magic; sometimes he gives a lecture titled "Sense, Perception and Nonsense"). At interview time, he was recovering from a mysterious skin rash which hospitalized him briefly. He said he might cut his hair, and he was on a diet, so that when we adjourned to a cafe for lunch, he ordered Perrier and soup. I paid the check with a hundred dollar bill (no, I don't carry them often); seeing it lying there on the little red plastic tray was too much for Jay. He picked it up, folding it in twos, fourths, and so on, down to a little one-inch nubbin. He then carefully unfolded it — it had been transformed into a two dollar bill. I smiled. I'd seen him do this on stage. I wasn't really worried, but when he folded up the two dollar bill and unfolded it back to its hundred dollar state, I admit to a small sense of relief.

How does he do it? I have never presumed to ask, because, like Ricky Jay himself, I love being amazed.

The Latest Astounding Effect

Ricky Jay invites a woman to join him onstage. He borrows a ring from her, puts the ring in the envelope, seals the envelope and gives it to the woman to hold. She holds the envelope for a certain length of time while Jay produces a deck of cards and says that the cards have a relationship to her ring. The woman opens the envelope. The ring is gone! Jay then throws the cards into the audience, far into the audience. There is a balloon hanging from a rafter that has been there the entire time. One of the cards breaks the balloon; a big bird flies out of the balloon and lands on Jay's arm. Tied to one of the bird's legs is a ribbon and a little package, and inside the package is the woman's ring.

OFF THE WALL

Juice Newton: This Angel Is Ascending

An attractive honey blonde from California with the intriguing name of Juice Newton is suddenly one of the hottest ladies in the recording industry. Newton's single "Angel Of The Morning," from her new Capitol album Juice, is ascending both the pop and country charts as if the song had wings. Requests for television appearances and showcase concerts in prestigious clubs across the country are pouring in. According to record biz oracle Kal Rudman: "By the end of the year, Juice Newton will be one of the top female artists in the music business."

What accounts for Newton's virtual "overnight" emergence as a dynamic commercial songstress? The answer is her sound.

After half a lifetime of performing, more than a decade of constant touring and five previous albums, Juice Newton's style is now in style. Megastars like Kenny Rogers and Dolly Parton have obliterated the barriers between pop and country music formats, making room on the airwaves for the blend of country vocal and instrumental textures with pop melodies that Juice does so well. All of a sudden, Juice Newton is a singer with a sound whose time has come.

"I've always been moving in this direction with my music," she says in a voice that reveals her southern Virginia upbringing. "My roots are in folk, but now I consider myself to be a country/pop singer with the accent on 'country!'"

"Juice's voice is definitely a country instrument," agrees Richard Landis, producer of Juice. "But when she brings that instrument to mainstream material, that's when the mass appeal magic happens!"

Newton and Landis have succeeded in capturing this magic on vinyl, emphasizing through song selection and arrangements some provocative aspects of Juice's personality that have never come through in her earlier recordings. "I've always thought of Juice as a female desperado," says Landis. "Personality-wise she's strong, not the least bit submissive, and yet she's very feminine. She can sit at the bar and drink with the boys, but you never forget that she's an extremely appealing woman. We wanted to show this combination of toughness and tenderness!"

This portrait is developed with stylish skill on Juice. Songs like "Angel Of The Morning," "Shot Full Of Love" and "Queen Of Hearts" evoke images of a spirited, passionate and playful contemporary woman. She's the kind of lady every urban cowboy would love to meet and every urban cowgirl would love to be.

Juice (the source of the nickname remains shrouded in mystery) was still a teenager when she began her career singing folk songs in coffee houses. "It was the 'telling' side of folk music that attracted me," she recalls. "It was hard-hitting. It really said something to you."

But by the late '60s, the demand for folk music had died. Traveling to college in California, Juice met guitarist/composer Otha Young. The couple have been together ever since, progressing through a variety of lineups, moving from acoustic folk styles to more expansive, electrified country-flavored pop of Juice. The progression is musically chronicled on five albums, two early folk rock efforts and three more recent Capitol LPs—Come To Me (1977), Well Kept Secret (1978) and Take Heart (1979).

With her smash hit "Angel Of The Morning," Juice Newton is becoming America's favorite urban cowgirl.

Along the way, Juice's hybrid musical style fell on some rather indifferent ears. Top 40 stations thought her "too country," while country audiences were tentatively receptive. But increasingly enthusiastic response to her versions of pop songs like "It's A Heartache" (a gold record in Mexico) and "Sunshine" confirmed a crossover potential that has now become a reality.

In its first two weeks of release, "Angel Of The Morning" was added to the airplay list of more radio stations than any other record in the country. The single is a hit with pop, country and adult contemporary listeners alike, and the album features other selections just as stunningly performed.

"It's taken a long time, and it's been tough," says Juice, "but now that the barriers are down, I think music like mine has a chance to reach a lot of people!"

Turn on Juice and you'll hear why she's right.

Warren Zevon
Stand in the Fire

(Asylum) Live rock albums can provide a boost to an artist's career, or they can show up a performer's weaknesses as a live act. Fortunately for Warren Zevon, an almost-star in need of a strong LP, Stand in the Fire is one of the best in-concert records to appear in some time. Collecting the singer/songwriter's strongest tunes in one package, it makes an effective case for his importance as an up-and-coming rock talent.

Besides serving as a "greatest hits" package, the LP offers a spirited, good-humored performance by Zevon. His vocals are convincingly aggressive when they should be, winningly tongue-in-cheek when his most absurd songs call for a lighter touch. A revised "Werewolves of London" finds him bellowing out to the crowd that the monster "is looking for James Taylor," an amusing lyrical switch.

While several ballads are delivered with conviction ("Jeannie Needs a Shooter," "Mohammed's Radio"), Stand in the Fire's finest moments come during the grittier rock-outs. Side Two features a sizzling-hot sequence of such tunes, opening with a snarling "Lawyers, Guns and Money" and closing with a manic cover of "Bo Diddley."

Zevon's latest LP is so enjoyable that I'll just mention in passing that its two brand-new songs aren't terribly interesting. What really counts is that, on the whole, this is his most potent album to date.

Creedence Clearwater Revival
The Royal Albert Hall Concert

(Fantasy) This long awaited live document from the late, lamented Spartan heroes of rock has more than its share of problems, none of which should restrain the group's fans from buying a copy. There is, in fact, positive incentive for collectors of rock curiosa. It seems that the LP's fourteen cuts weren't recorded at London's Royal Albert Hall in April of 1970 at all. No, they really originate from an Oakland Coliseum concert in January of that year. Whoops! Fantasy Records, after presumably firing its archivist, is reprinting the cover, which makes this edition an instant oddity.

If the snafus had ended there, this could well have been a classic among live LPs. The songs are certainly here; "Born on the Bayou," "Green River," "Travelin' Band," "Proud Mary," "Fortunate Son" — a deposition to Creedence's long overlooked contribution to the three-minute single. These are tough, tight tunes that should sound as good, if not better, as when they first ate up the charts in the early Seventies.

The fact that they don't is the fault of one person — some guy named Danny Kopelson, credited with the remix on this technical disaster. As good a drummer as Doug Clifford was, there must have been something else happening up there that night in Oakland. Actually, you can just make it out behind the thundering drums and deafening cymbal crashes. There seem to be some guitars, it's hard to tell; there may even be a bass, although it could be turntable rumble. The only thing that survives — and survives gloriously — this horrendous mix is the astonishing whiskey-and-Bull Durham growl of John Fogerty's vocals. It's reason enough to own a copy. Fogerty's singing is simply among the best in rock and roll. Its terse urgency is matched only by the songs he wrote.

Too bad, really. A Creedence Clearwater Revival revival is long overdue. This mislabeled, mismixed album is a frustrating indication of what might have been.

Ian Dury & The Blockheads
Laughter

(Epic) Ian Dury & the Blockheads are enormously popular in England due in large part to Dury's portrayal of an earthy Cockney street character with a heart of gold. Ironically, the central element of their appeal there — the decidedly British character of the music — is Dury and company's biggest single drawback in terms of attracting an American audience.

Dury, decidedly British

On Laughter, his third LP, Dury doesn't so much sing songs as spin yarns while the Blockheads lay down a suitable groove behind him. The replacement of musical director Chaz Jankel by former Dr. Feelgood guitarace Wilko Johnson has shifted the overall sound from the slick funk of Do It Yourself to a more basic, raucous brand of rhythm & blues.

The Blockheads are such a crackerjack unit — special kudos go to Norman Watt-Ray's stellar bass work—that they essentially overshadow Dury's contributions. Several songs cry out for more substantial lyrical content than Dury telling us (however wittily) what it feels like to be a train and tossing off pearls of wisdom like "Take your elbow out of the soup/You're sitting on the chicken" and "A mouse runs up your leg/It's one o'clock in China" for our edification.

Dury & the Blockheads are undoubtedly more effective onstage where Dury's persona is more fully developed, Johnson can unleash the definitive (accept no substitute, kids) psycho-strut and the sheer musical excellence of the band simply overpowers any lingering shortcomings. On vinyl, they're still something of an acquired taste for American listeners; Laughter is a solid albeit uneven album that requires acceptance of Dury on his own terms to fully appreciate the music.

The Clash
Sandinista!

(Epic) Look Out! Clash upside your head!

It's easy to feel a little dazed after hearing Sandinista! The Clash's latest opus is 36 songs and 2-1/2 hours long, and it pursues its political and social themes down practically every musical back alley imaginable. The record is so vast and so difficult to assimilate that Epic shuddered at the very thought of releasing it here; indeed, the label has boiled it down to a 12-song sampler called Sandinista Now! for critical and radio consumption.

Yet, as rugged as the early going may be, Sandinista! in the end is the Clash's richest and most daring release yet. It may not have the gut-ripping impact of The Clash, but it showcases a band that is willing to risk all and pull off a difficult creative and imaginative caper nonetheless.

Politics, both English and international, make up the core of Sandinista! The group tackles a kaleidoscope of subjects: the new Cold War (in "Ivan Meets G. I. Joe") sex in government (in "The Leader"), the draft (in "The Call Up",) American and Russian imperialism (in "Charlie Don't Surf" and "Washington Bullets"), the political fate of postwar England (in "Something About England"), public housing (in "Up in Heaven"). Seldom is anything just thrown against the wall to see if it sticks: the music and lyrics are composed with care and dynamically played and sung.

The less political material (though none is strictly apolitical) ranges over subjects far and wide: from the independent U. K. music scene to police harassment, from the drug world to the New York transit strike. There is an excited inquisitiveness on Sandinista! that is unexpcted, even after the giant steps of London Calling. Musical styles are as divergent as subject matter, with fun, folk, blues, jazz, gospel and (of course) massive doses of reggae churning together in a thick, marvelously detailed production sound.

No other post-'77 U. K. band has attempted a musical conception structured on such grand terms. Joe Strummer, Mick Jones and company have already been written off in the English press as the victims of hubris; yet, to these ears, their achievement seems as large as their ambitions. The early romantic naiveté of the Clash's political views has been stretched with each succeeding album, and on Sandanista! they elongate things to the snapping point. But, despite a few uncertain moments, nothing ever snaps.

The Clash persist in testing themselves musically, and they are now testing their audience as well; those without the patience or imagination to appreciate the band's metamorphosing style may get left behind by Sandinista! It's a race to catch up with this fast-moving and adventurous band, it's true. But the Clash have already made their stand: running in place isn't really running at all. Sandinista! is a grand adventure in music and in politics, and it's worth the chase.

Elvis Costello
Trust

(Columbia) Considering his attacks upon greed and status-seeking in his songs, it seems insulting to suggest that Elvis Costello thirsts after the American hit record that has thus far eluded him. Yet Trust reflects such a desire.

With a string of brilliant albums to his credit, Costello has set the highest standards in rock songwriting and performing. Some viewed him as just another bileful New Waver when he first appeared, but it's become clear that he's actually a staunch musical traditionalist, drawing upon influences as diverse as Sixties psychedelia and Hank Williams barroom balladry to create his sound. In tandem with the versatile, flashy Attractions, he's released records of unusual wit, ingenuity and emotional punch.

Trust doesn't indicate that Costello has lost his touch. But for the moment, he isn't growing or progressing. It's chief flaw is that much of what it contains has been done before, and generally better, on his earlier LPs.

Costello's lyrical preoccupations are the same as ever — sexual paranoia, shallow trendiness and the spectre of government control. His special brand of militant alienation lacks its usual bite, however—"Lovers Walk," "Pretty Words" and "New Lace Sleeves" rely too heavily on his now-familiar songwriting formulas. At times, his verbal tricks (puns, strange juxtapositions) are enough to carry him through a lyric, but too often the ideas play out.

His country entry for this album, "Different Finger," fails to offer anything different from his past compositions in this vein. Trust's showcased number, "From a Whisper to a Scream," is indicative of the LP's shortcomings. Though Costello and co-vocalist Glenn Tilbrook labor mightily, they can't elevate this song above the mediocre.

Those are the notable duds — there

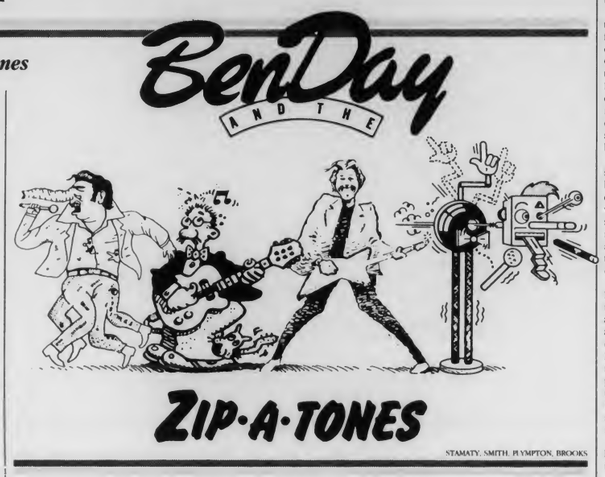
BenDay & the Zipatones

IN NEW YORK



Bill Plympton said the joint was a firetrap and if anything happened New York would lose its cartoonist population in one big flame.

What happened instead was a smash — the one-time only-and-forever performance of Ben Day and the Zipatones, four well-known New York illustrators and cartoonists, a pickup drummer and bassist, and three singers — the Zipettes.

Bill Plympton, nationally-syndicated author of "Tube Strips," "Medium Rare," and the weekly strip, "Plympton," and Mark Alan Stamaty, Village Voice author of "Carrrttoonn" and "MacDoodle Street," started their career at friends' parties doing a broken-down Elvis imitation. Plympton knew most of the songs on guitar and Stamaty's wobbly knees captured the pathos of Presley's last days.

When Lou Brooks, AKA Eddie Romaine and frequent illustrator for Playboy and Rolling Stone, decided they all should go legit-for-a-night, adding his own stand-up lounge comedy to their Elvis dreams, one heard the stumble of fools shuffling in. And what the hell.

But it was a happy moment that gave birth (albeit breach delivery) to Ben Day and the Zipatones, reverentially named for tools of the graphic design trade.

On Friday the 13th of February, Plympton, Stamaty, Brooks and Elwood Smith — himself ubiquitously published but unheard as a singer — hauled their friends and art directors down to a hired hall on deserted Bond Street and made good. A better surprise than found money — not for the hot guitar licks or sugared voices — but for the volatile happy havoc they played on all expectations.

Lou Brooks as Eddie Romaine (the humor of funny glasses done to a sick twist) ought to be signed. And the guys played great. They practiced hard for the Bond Street bash. You could see it and thank them.

Country favorites and solos from the Zipettes (two of them — Liz Gallagher and Maureeen McElheron — the only pros in the Zips) built languorously up to Brooks' and Stamaty's (AKA Ben Day) star turns.

Brooks composed and sang "Baked Bean Boogie" in homage (???) to Boston, and a smash hit, "The 10 Commandments of Art" — "Always use a nude model whether the assignment calls for it or not" . . . "If you must use a nude male model/insist that he wear an athletic supporter" . . . " when spec'ing type, always use Helvetica Medium . . ." (C. 1981, Lou Brooks, Inc.) There was other stuff about finding his girl in the arms of a stat messenger who lost an invaluable, irreplaceable work of art on the subway and got it in the heart with an X-acto knife.

And finally, there was Ben Day — Stamaty with no wobbles.

"I get $25,000 per wiggle." And he was smooth and pretty in yellow pants and blue brocade, hair slicked back, playing the best joke on a joke that Elvis ever gave rise to.

Altogether a great bash. A quick blip on the radar screen of self-serious entertainment, and a spectacular argument for one-night stands.

Billy & the Beaters

SAN DIEGO STATE UNIVERSITY

Their name suggests a trendy New Wave group but Billy and the Beaters are quite the opposite. Led by singer-guitarist Billy Vera, an active artist since the mid-Sixties, this nine-piece outfit is as staunch a rhythm and blues band as you could ask for. Vera himself is hardly a young firebrand either — resembling a Rick Nielsen entering middle age, his looks match his musical track record.

Billy and the Beaters, then, are no punks — their virtue as a group lies in their tightness and polish. These qualities were in evidence at their San Diego show, a satisfying affair despite a few awkward moments. While limited in scope, this concert demonstrated the group's considerable potential.

The band's horn-heavy r&b style was in evidence from the show's opening moments on. The Beaters feature four saxophonists on stage, who honk out thick, rhythmic blasts which evoke the old Stax/Volt sound. Few bands use such a horn section on stage, and the reedmen's insistent squeals were refreshingly different. Clustered about a single mike, the sax quartet was visually striking as well.

Vera's sax section was so potent that they tended to obscure the other players, including former Doobie Brother Jeff "Skunk" Baxter, on tour with the band as a special guest. Apparently, his presence was mostly intended as a commercial draw, for his contributions on steel guitar were slight. Confined to a corner of the stage, he could be seen shaking his head when a band member would ask him to solo.

His low profile, though, was more than compensated for by Vera, an engaging, frolicsome stage personality with a strong, flexible voice. Doing splits and wheeling about, he genuinely seemed to be having fun under the spotlights. His affection for r&b was evident as well. His original material, particularly "I Can Take Care of Myself" and "Someone Will School You, Someone Will Hold You," effectively combined sophisticated word-play and bump-and-grind festiveness with raunchy sentiments.

Vera's fifteen-year background as songwriter and performer serves him well in concert. His professionalism matches his enthusiasm on his upbeat numbers. Vera's only failing would appear to be his treatment of ballads. By giving them long-winded, tear-jerking introductions at the San Diego State show, he undercut their effectiveness. Though he well may have been sincere when offering such heartache songs as "Here Comes the Dawn Again," his excesses made them hard to take.

Billy and the Beaters' biggest asset is that few bands are covering the turf they are. Their music is decidedly Oldy Wave, but timeless in its energy. With a bit of fine tuning, Vera and company could become a hitmaking proposition.

are also some successes here. "White Knuckles" boasts a galloping arrangement and frantic singing in the manner of E.C.'s "Oliver's Army." "Strict Time," an amusing look at prudery, bounces to a zesty Latin tempo. And "Shot with His Own Gun" is one of Costello's best ballads to date, touching in its portrait of a desensitized gigolo.

Still, the overall impression Trust leaves is less than satisfying. For the moment, Costello is treading water artistically, even if this LP may be his commercial breakthrouh.

MILES DAVIS
Miles Davis Chronicle, The Complete Prestige Recordings

(Prestige) The Prestige recordings can be looked upon as a series of lab sessions that led to breakthroughs for not only Miles but the rest of the jazz world as well. The net result was a reordering of harmony, a reconsideration of the small group in jazz, an alternative mode of expression for the trumpet, several stylistic changes in the music and the cultivation of an audience that knew how to sit still and listen.

Davis was something of a child prodigy, snatched up at the tender age of 19 by the grand master of bebop, Charlie Parker, to be his front line trumpeter. The reigning trumpet influence at the time was, of course, Dizzy Gillespie. Gillespie's superlative technique, consisting of an advanced harmonic sense, practically unlimited power in any register and a fluent quickness, made him the standard by which trumpeters were judged. Davis had technical limitations that he eventually used to his own advantage.

Cornetist Nat Adderley explains: "I think Miles realized that he was never going to be able to play like Dizzy and that he'd better develop something that was more in keeping with what he could do, instrument-wise. As a result you've got a style. Over the last twenty or thirty years it is the most prolific trumpet style."

Although he had gained reknown in the Parker group and in 1949 had offered an alternative to bebop with his quietly revolutionary "Birth of the Cool" recordings, in 1951 Davis was little more than an itinerant trumpeter. Drug addiction and its attendant miseries had undermined any continuity in his life. Prestige was one of the companies recording jazz that could sign "name" musicians at bargain basement prices.

The music: Oddly enough, the strongest set of tunes is a 1951 date led by alto saxophonist Lee Konitz, the only Prestige session in which Davis was a sideman. The two George Russell tunes "Ezz-Thetic" and "Odjenar" represented the avant-garde of the day and Davis makes an interesting addition to the group of Lennie Tristano disciples.

A January, 1953 session reunites Davis and Parker. This time, Parker is the sideman and Davis the leader. As an added kicker, Parker plays tenor, as does the other horn player on the date, Sonny Rollins. According to Dan Morgenstern's liner notes, it took a fifth of gin (for Parker) and a little pleading (for Davis) to get this session underway, but the results are fascinating. Parker sounds totally relaxed and at home on tenor and Rollins shows no signs of being intimidated.

Davis had taken to playing with a Harmon mute in his trumpet, producing the brooding, introspective, cool quality that went straight for the heart. In April of 1954, having shaken off his addiction, Davis, with one record session, shut down the cool school that had been taken over by white West Coast players. The tunes were his own "Walkin'" and an old Gillespie gauntlet "Blue 'n Boogie."

The following year at the Newport Festival, Davis won over the entire critical fraternity with one performance. Though he had been dismissed by the scribes for years, they now rushed to restore him to grace. Columbia Records beckoned with a fatter record deal but there were still contractual obligations to Prestige. The last four Prestige dates were somewhat quick and dirty but Davis still found the time to lay the groundwork for probably the greatest small group of the 1950s.

Davis took a tenor saxophonist who at 29 had not completely found his own voice yet, John Coltrane, a pleasant but not outstanding pianist with a penchant for cocktailisms, Red Garland, an unknown bassist barely out of his teens, Paul Chambers; and a drummer who to everyone else's ears played too loud, Philly Joe Jones. This was the quintet and though there would be some personnel changes, this was to be Davis' working band for the rest of the decade.

Although the band reached its finest flowering on record with Columbia, (cf, Kind of Blue, In a Silent Way, Miles Smiles) the Prestiges are more than rewarding. The standout tune, for me, is the lovely ballad "It Never Entered My Mind." Coltrane lays out and it's just Miles and the rhythm section. Even though he fluffs the theme, even though he recorded the definitive version of the same arrangement for Blue Note two years earlier and even though Garland doesn't approach Horace Silver's achingly beautiful solo, the piece is exquisite. It's followed by "When I Fall in Love" and given the same muted, moody treatment. It is, to quote Stephen Davis, "a great song to have a broken heart by."

& OUT THE OTHER

REPORTS THAT Mick Fleetwood has ended his fourteen-year stay with Fleetwood Mac can't be substantiated. They started when it was revealed the lanky drummer was pursuing a solo project called Mick Fleetwood's African Odyssey. Fleetwood has been spending considerable time in Ghana, working with guitarist Todd Sharpe (of the Bob Welch band), plus numerous Ghanian musicians. A benefit concert for the Ghana Musician's Union, held February 21, will be televised on PBS channels, together with footage on the making of the album.

Big Business

FRANCIS COPPOLA'S Zoetrope Studio is still in business, thanks to a $500,000 anonymous loan (reportedly from Norman Lear) and $8 million from Canadian real estate whiz Jack Singer (who now has his own office at Zoetrope); Singer says he'll see to it that there's enough cash for Coppola to finish One from the Heart.

TWENTIETH-CENTURY FOX is facing a major change: outright purchase by Denver oilman Marvin Davis (a pal of Ford and Kissinger) whose estimated weekly income exceeds $1 million. If Davis goes through with the stock purchase, 20th will then become a private company, no longer open to public scrutiny.

WALTER ANNENBERG, the man behind TV Guide and one of the men behind President Reagan, has pledged $15 million to the Corporation for Public Broadcasting ($1.5 million per year for ten years). Seems only fair, now that Reagan has slashed funding for public radio and television.

'DISNEY ON FILM — A Forum on Animation and Fantasy Filmmaking in the 80's" is currently touring 33 universities across the country, featuring animators and live-action experts; filmed comments from Kirk Douglas, Ray Bradbury, Shelley Duvall, etc.; and previews of upcoming Disney features (like The Fox and the Hound, The Black Cauldron, and live action clips from Popeye, Dead and Buried, Never Cry Wolf, etc.).

Stung

STING OF THE POLICE could be a movie star: he's seriously discussing a TV movie called Parole and a Stigwood film called While my Guitar Gently Weeps, in which he'll reportedly play a famous guitarist whose hands are broken by thugs (Sting appeared briefly in Quadrophenia). This film is not based on the George Harrison song, but on a book by Paul Breeze (and the name may be changed). George Harrison has no involvement in this film, according to Stigwood executive Beryl Virtue.

KIM PRING, Miss Wyoming of 1978, picked up a bigger prize recently; a $26,500,000 judgment against Penthouse magazine and writer Phillip Ciofari. According to Pring, there were too many similarities for comfort between herself and the heroine of "Miss Wyoming Saves the World," an August, 1979 short story by Ciofari about a baton-twirling beauty queen. Especially galling to Pring were the fictional character's sexual turns with contest judges and various others.

Something New for the Midnight Show

A SEQUEL TO The Rocky Horror Picture Show is due soon, called Shock Treatment, also produced by Lou Adler. Brad and Janet (played by Jessica Harper of Stardust Memories and Cliff de Young) try their luck on several TV game shows like Save Your Marriage and Are You a Psychotic? One of the hosts lusts after Janet and tries to get Brad committed to an insane asylum. You've been warned.

Who's in What

BETTE MIDLER will star in a Las Vegas romance (she'll sing a couple of songs) called Jackpot; the producers want Richard Gere to costar (who doesn't?). . . Natalie Wood and Tim Hutton will star in Two of a Kind, about an older woman novelist's relationship with an aspiring young writer . . . Sally Field plays a nightclub singer in A Private Affair who falls in love with a 15-year-old boy . . . Robert Redford's next will be The Verdict, in which he plays a Boston lawyer who is ostracized by polite society when he accepts a medical malpractice suit . . . David Naughton, the dancing fellow in all those Dr. Pepper commercials, stars with Jenny Agutter in An American Werewolf in London, directed by John Landis, about . . . you guessed it . . . an American college student who is attacked by an unknown beast on the moors one night . . .

THE OFT-POSTPONED film biography of Ghandi is about to start with an Anglo-Indian, Ben Kingsley, in the title role (after unsuccessful attempts to cast English actors like John Hurt). Candice Bergen will play Life photographer Margaret Bourke-White; Martin Sheen also stars, and is donating his salary to CONCERN, an Ireland-based organization that supplies food and medical aid to impoverished Third World nations.

WE HEAR THAT Debbie Harry's solo album will be produced by Rogers and Niles (the guys who did Chic, Diana Ross, etc.) and will be most, if not all, R&B . . . Jack Nitzsche's music for the film Cutter & Bone (remember last May's Jeff Bridges cover story?) uses a zither and water-filled glasses (played by Canadian Erik Harry) and is reportedly dazzling.

Chasing Chase

CHEVY CHASE has been busy in spite of abysmal reviews for Caddyshack (which nevertheless scored big bucks last year) and Seems Like Old Times. He's starring in Over the Rainbow (nicknamed "Over the Budget," since it is), about the making of The Wizard of Oz, specifically the casting of all those Munchkins (Carrie Fisher co-stars as a non-Munchkin); next Chase will do Modern Problems, co-starring Patti D'Arbanville, described briefly as "about telekinesis." Let's hope it's better than The Fury.

Last Month's Changes

FITZCARRALDO, the Peru-locationed film to star Mick Jagger, is currently on hold because co-star Jason Robards came down with dysentery and had to cancel. If director Werner Herzog does not find a replacement soon, the production may close down altogether.

And Taipei, the James Clavell epic that has been on and off and on, is once again off. Too expensive.

And More Sci Fi Movies

ROGER CORMAN'S New World Pictures will release Planet of Horrors this summer, an *Alien*esque journey to a distressed planet, with pyramids thrown in for good measure. Corman also plans a film called Shopping Center, to be made in Houston, and he's offered starring roles to all members of the Doobie Brothers, but nothing is definite yet.

Attention Student Filmmakers

THE WINNER of last year's Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences Student Film Award in the Documentary Achievement Category was Karl Hess: Toward Liberty by Roland Hallé and Peter W. Ladue, made while they were students at Boston University (where Ladue now teaches). This same film is currently nominated for an Academy Award in the Best Achievement in Documentary Film, Short Subject category. Huzzah, congratulations, and we'll all be watching the televised Awards ceremony March 30. Deadline (each year) for the Academy's student film competition is April 1. Check local university film departments for details, or write to Karen Arandjellovich, Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences, 8949 Wilshire Blvd., Beverly Hills, CA 90211.

Pick a Card

IT COMBINES TWO THINGS I've always found appealing: trading cards and old blues singers." R. Crumb, probably the most influential of the "underground" cartoonists, is describing Heroes of the Blues, a set of illustrations he made of country blues artists of the Twenties, Thirties, Forties and Fifties. Mounted like bubblegum trading cards, Heroes of the Blues comes in a boxed set of 36 and is sold in various record shops and comic book stores. Guys like Clifford Gibson, Blind Lemon Jefferson and Bo-Weavil Jackson are represented. The lone woman is Memphis Minnie, who cut more than 150 records, including "Bumble Bee Blues." Because the cards are hot sellers, Crumb is planning a series on old Jazz artists and another on old Country & Western stars.

R.I.P.

CRITICS CALLED Michael Bloomfield a "bizarre figure, whose vast potential has remained irritatingly unfulfilled." That might have been his epitaph, except for two brand new releases reportedly worthy of Bloomfield's copious talents.

The man Guitar Player Magazine called "barroom Scholar of the Blues" died in San Francisco of unknown causes. His body was found by police in his car on the morning of Sunday, February 15.

"He was up, he was fantastic, there was absolutely no depression," says Norman Dayron, Bloomfield's neighbor, producer and close friend since college days. "The new records were his best art, better than anything he'd ever recorded before."

Son of a wealthy industrialist, Bloomfield was hooked on the blues via radio. As a teenager he jammed with giants like Muddy Waters and Magic Sam, Howlin' Wolf and B.B. King. His fame came with the Paul Butterfield Blues Band, Electric Flag and the high-selling Super Session albums.

Bloomfield's guitar led Bob Dylan into the electric age on "Like a Rolling Stone," Highway 61 Revisited and Blonde on Blonde. But his favorite recording remained If You Love These Blues, Play 'Em As You Please, a 1977 Grammy-winning instructional album for guitarists.

Sol Louis Siegel

Eyewitness

starring William Hurt, Sigourney Weaver, Christopher Plummer and James Woods, written by Steve Tesich, produced and directed by Peter Yates.

Although Eyewitness has the same directing, screenwriting and editing (Cynthia Scheider) team that gave us the wonderful Breaking Away, don't look for too many other similarities. Eyewitness is a mystery-love story, but only half of that hyphenate works.

The mystery plot (an Oriental man is found dead in his office; a TV reporter investigates, the janitor leads her on, and dozens of people follow them) is full of contrivance and coincidence and downright hokum; it is one of very few (perhaps the only?) mysteries I've ever seen in which no one solves the mystery; the murderer simply tells why he did it.

Writer Tesich's best invention is the Hurt character, a man with an unglamorous job (janitor in a big office building) who likes his work, a man without guile or artifice who comes right out and "says the dumbest things," according to the object of his affections, TV newswoman Weaver (who looks like Jane Fonda but seems awkward and uncomfortable in this role). How can a rich, talented, glamorous woman find love with a janitor? Take, for instance, this brief scene in which Hurt tells Weaver how he'd like to wax and buff her floors: "... slowly. Gently. Until they beam. Anytime."

Hurt almost, but not quite, makes up for the silly plot. He is so sternly understated he could be an Eighties version of Gary Cooper, but when he talks, animated by his great desire for Weaver, he becomes eloquent, witty, like Cary Grant. He has enough modern angst to vie with Pacino and Travolta and that crowd, although he looks like a stolid Aryan with his rimless glasses and blond hair. He seems really weird when he isn't being perfectly charming. Judging from his success in Altered States, and from the many feminine squeals emitted during the Eyewitness screening, we're going to have to get used to him. Shouldn't be too hard.

La Cage aux Folles II

starring Ugo Tognazzi and Michel Serrault; written by Francis Veber, Jean Poiret, Eduard Molinaro & Marcello Danon; directed by Molinaro

Ugo Tognazzi and Michel Serrault (two of the most improbable leading men around) are back, in a sequel to the fabulously successful La Cage aux Folles. This time around, however, the gay gentlemen fall flat on their powdered noses.

In II, the gents are too confined to a narrow, tedious espionage script to really cut loose with their outrageous characterizations. Serrault's Albin is put through innumerable unfunny costume/gender changes, and the joke wears thin very fast. This time around, Albin is reduced to frequently emitting his high-pitched shriek, while Tognazzi's Renaldo is allowed to be little more than straight man to Albin. He follows Albin around, pleading his love and being practical, and he spends too much time dealing with the various nondescript detectives and spies who clutter the story.

The script relies too heavily on the characters' gayness for its laughs and delivers numerous gay cliches — straight detectives forced to dress and act gay, tough guys picking fights with the gays and getting punched out by the undercover cops. Gone for the most part is the familiar and necessary setting — the nightclub and apartment of the title — where the campy characters can, in their own way, be normal. Also gone is the wonderful burlesque of the original; here the characters become fluttering queens, and that's not worth paying to see.

UM prof seeks board election

By MARK L. CURELOP
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts professor seeking election to the Amherst Board of Selectmen this Tuesday said he would speak out against the University if the decision was warranted.

"Although I'm a member of the faculty I'm willing to speak out if the decison is well thought out," said Richard H. Minear professor of history at UMass and member of the Amherst Planning Board and Town Meeting member.

Minear was on a planning committee five years ago studying the feasibility of a Northeast bypass through campus. He opposed the construction of such a road because he felt it would not benefit the University or town.

Minear opposed Prop 2½ when the proposed law was first brought to the public.

"It's a way of creating havoc in local government," he said.

"Prop 2½ includes an anti-growth measure which can create a cutback in services and is a deterrent to economic development," Minear said.

The Board of Selectmen will have to get out and see what the schools and towns need, he said, in order to help alleviate the cutbacks of Proposition 2½.

The candidate said that the new board and UMass will have to work closer.

Minear said that the University and the other four colleges should confer about the implications of President Reagan's budget cuts for Federal Transit programs and specifically Five College transit system.

Amherst town elections tomorrow

Once again voters will be asked to go to the polls tomorrow in Amherst's Town Election to register their support for the candidates of their choice for Board of Selectmen and Town Meeting members.

Only one issue question is on this year's ballot which asks voters if they would support a general law that would protect elected or appointed municipal employees for no more than one million dollars if they were to be sued while carrying out their duties.

The Board of Selectmen race include candidates Elizabeth Cramer, incumbant Roger C. Jacque, University of Massachusetts history Professor Richard H. Minear and Elizabeth Wilkinson.

UMass Dean of Students William F. Field is the uncontested incumbent Moderator of Town Meeting.

Running for the one and five-year terms of the Amherst Housing Authority respectively are Joan Ross Logan and Jon Hite.

Two seats are open for the three-year term of the Jones Library Trustees. Barbara Carpino, Horace W. Hewlett, and Vera Joseph Peterson are seeking election to the post.

Robert M. McClung and John G. Schiesser are running for the one-year term as Jones Library trustees.

Running unopposed for the Amherst School Committee and Amherst Redevelopment Authority are Marybeth Bridegam and Margaret R. Roberts.

Rosemary Sprague is seeking the post of elector of the Oliver Smith Will.

Coalition attacks Tuition increase

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

A student coalition to fight tuition increases has begun a campaign to block a $202 per-semester tuition hike proposed for University of Massachusetts in-state students by the Board of Regents.

Tuition increases for out of state students were not available at press time.

The proposed hikes slated for UMass are part of a plan by the regents to increase tuition at all institutes of higher education in Massachusetts in order to return $12 million of the education budget to the Commonwealth.

Ronald Keefe, coalition member and chairman of the statewide student advisory committee to the regents, said UMass is scheduled for the largest increases, while tuition at community colleges will be raised by $92; at state colleges by $125; at Southeastern Massachusetts University, $138 and Lowell University by $142.

Keefe said the Commonwealth is currently 48th nationally in per capita funding of higher education, while tuition costs are ninth highest.

The coalition last night began distributing leaflets throughout dormitories to inform students of the severity of the problem, and to request student attendance at two upcoming regents meetings in Boston.

The advisory committee will meet Thursday with the Regents to provide student input before the Regents vote at their Tuesday April 14 meeting.

Keefe said the hike could force 500 students to drop out of UMass, in addition to students affected by financial aid decreases and housing increases.

Energy for the 1980s

Conservation bill could step up aid

By CHUCK KILFOYE
Collegian Staff

A bill to allow the University of Massachusetts Amherst campus to retain any funding saved through conservation measures will be brought before the education committee of the state legislature today in Boston.

"What the bill proposes is that any money saved by the University through energy conservation will go back to the campus in the form of financial aid for the students and future energy conservation programs," said Larry Kocot, Student Government Association co-president, and co-author of the bill.

"Prior to this, any money saved by the University was sent back to the state, so there was no incentive for the University to try to save energy," Kocot said.

Kocot said of stronger conservation measures were not put into effect, then in the future there will be surcharges imposed on students for energy use in the dormitories.

Ken Moore, Chairman of the Public Policy Committee for the Undergraduate Student Senate and co-author of the bill with Kocot, said that the bill basically establishes an energy account for UMass.

"Fifty percent of any money saved will go to the financial aid program and fifty percent will go to energy programs," Moore said. "This way you have incentives for both the students and the University to conserve energy."

"I think it's going to have a snowball effect," he said, "it has been getting very good response from the legislature. Sen. Paul Tsongas has supported it by sending letters to the legislators, and Rep. Thomas E. Norton of Fall River, chairman of the energy committee, is going to testify on behalf of the bill."

Kocot and Moore will also be in Boston to testify in favor of the bill.

"A similar conservation program worked out well at Ohio State. Their legislators just decided to give it a try and it worked," said Moore.

State Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst, filed the bill.

No local aid King warns

BOSTON — Gov. Edward J. King promises no immediate relief to communities straining under the effects of Proposition 2½.

"We're not unmindful of the feelings of the cities and towns. We'd like to be loved, but we'd rather stay low in the foxholes until things become clearer," King said in an interview.

King said he feared cities and towns might not pare down their budgets as much as possible if the state volunteered more local aid soon. It is estimated cities and towns will lose $600 million in property tax revenues in the next fiscal year beginning July 1 because of Proposition 2½.

"Timing is very important," King said. "If the state comes in and assures that lesser economies take place, then we have made a mistake...

"Three hundred million (in local cuts) is a good cut, but not if $420 million can be cut," King said in an interview published in yesterday's edition of the Boston Herald American.

King indicated that he believed some communities are not suffering financially as severely as they claim to be.

"I went to a meeting two or three months ago and I was told that in the first week of March there'd be no money for (Boston) schools and that was it," King said.

"It didn't happen. Then it was the end of March. Now they're set through April," he said.

Reading problems brain shape linked

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press

BOSTON — People who have trouble learning to read are more likely to have unusually shaped brains, and this difference may help explain how dyslexia is inherited, researchers have found.

The doctor directing this study says it may someday be possible to examine a brain X-ray and predict an individual's inborn talents and weaknesses.

The human brain is not symmetrically shaped. Instead, part of most people's brains is larger on the left side than the right. This area is the top and back of the brain called the parietal and occipital lobes — sections involved in reading, writing, math skills and sight.

However, in an unusually large number of the learning impaired, it is the right side, not the left, that is bigger.

"These data are statistical," said Dr. Peter B. Rosenberger. "They don't tell you anything very important about any one case yet. They're simply giving us a clue about conditions of the brain that may increase the odds that you're going to be dyslexic."

Rosenberger is director of the Learning Disorders Unit at Massachusetts General Hospital, where the study was conducted. It was published in the Annals of Neurology.

His team studied 53 youngsters who had trouble learning. Their reading abilities were at least two grades behind other people their age, and reading was their chief problem.

Reagan on top of Poland crisis

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, running an intermittent fever and showing traces of particles in his damaged lung, conferred briefly yesterday with Vice President George Bush, who described him as "fully on top of the situation" in Eastern Europe.

The president also met with Vernon Jordan, the civil rights leader who also was the target of an assassination attempt.

The particles discovered in Reagan's wounded left lung are "most likely...either dried blood or damaged tissue" that reflect normal scarring and debris, said Dr. Dennis O'Leary. They were found in a series of chest X-rays taken yesterday morning.

"We don't believe this is out of the ordinary," said O'Leary. But he added: "We'd rather it was clearing." A White House medical statement said that the "persistent lung infiltrates," as the particles are called, "would be expected to resolve quite slowly."

Jordan, president of the National Urban League, was visited by Reagan in a New York City hospital last August while recovering from wounds suffered in an assassination attempt last May in Fort Wayne, Ind.

David Fischer, the president's appointments secretary, said the meeting in Reagan's room at the George Washington University Hospital was "very warm and personal." He said the president commented to Jordan, in a reference to their earlier hospital meeting, "this is a switch."

Haig seeks to calm Israeli fear

JERUSALEM — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., seeking to calm Israeli fears over the sale of U.S. military equipment to Saudi Arabia, declared yesterday that Israel's security and well-being are "central to American policy in the Middle East."

With the Polish crisis weighing heavily on his mind, Haig arrived here on the second stop of his tour of four Middle East nations. Following a meeting with Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin, Haig said of Poland: "We have been following this situation minute by minute." He flew to Israel from Cairo where he had conferred with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat.

Haig was in close touch with Washington throughout the day on events in Poland, U.S. sources reported. Soviet criticism of the Polish independent trade union Solidarity and of the Polish Communist Party leadership has raised fears of possible Soviet intervention in its Warsaw Pact neighbor.

Haig told reporters the situation in Poland "remains more tense than it has been. We've been watching Soviet military steps with growing concern."

Haig noted Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev's trip to Prague, Czechoslovakia, for that country's Communist Party meeting and said it "may be an important occasion with respect to Soviet actions affecting the Polish situation."

Disposal facilities needed for toxic waste

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Correspondent

The hazardous waste conference "The Toxic Time Bomb" was held at the University of Massachusetts on Saturday, and featured a wide range of speakers and workshops in its day-long program.

The conference's keynote speaker was Lois Gibbs, president of Love Canal Home Owners Association.

Gibbs formed the association in August, 1978 when a local newspaper began running articles on the Hooker Chemical Company's waste disposal on the site where an elementary school had been built. While attending that school, her son developed epilepsy, asthma, and blood, liver, and urinary diseases.

"My son was literally dying in front of me, I had to do something," said Gibbs.

An investigation by the New York State Board of Health in June, 1978 finally confirmed the reports by the local newspaper. A health order moving all pregnant women and children under the age of two from the area was then given.

"There was mass hysteria in the streets after the order was given," Gibbs said. "We called Governor Carey and asked him 'are you going to let these children die Gov. Carey?'"

She said that pressure on politicians was the only way the residents could get any results, and President Carter responded by signing a bill for $15 million which would pay for a permanent move for any resident of the area.

Gibbs is now forming a national citizens clearing house based in Washington, D.C., which will emphasize helping individual communities with problems similar to Love Canal.

A second keynote speaker was Dr. Evelyn Murphy, director of the Institute of Toxic Waste Management, a private, Brookline-based organization.

Murphy said that the Environmental Protection Agency estimates that 80 percent of the wastes in Massachusetts are being disposed of illegally.

"The problem in New England and Massachusetts today is that there are no licensed facilities for the disposal of toxic wastes," Murphy said.

Talking machine assists visually impaired students

By DEBORAH ASBRAND
Collegian Staff

When a student with dyslexia looks at a page of printed material, the letter "b" may appear as the letter "d", and words may appear jumbled.

A legally blind student may have only 10 percent normal vision, and may be able to read only by recognizing the shapes of words.

But visually impaired students in the Five College area will now have greater access to reading materials used in their classes as a result of the recent purchase of one of the most recent breakthroughs in technology—a machine that electronically reads aloud printed materials.

The Kurzweil Reading Machine, acquired through the efforts of the area's five colleges, was demonstrated to members of the community on Friday for the first time since its purchase last month.

The machine, which will be a permanently housed in the University of Massachusetts library, consists of a computer, an electronic scanner, and a keyboard, all of which fit on a single table.

By placing a book on top of the electronic scanner, the Kurzweil machine produces a computerized voice which reads the text aloud in a unique nasal tone with a slightly foreign accent.

The machine will be available to students on a reservation basis after they have been trained to use it by Virginia Craig, director of the UMass library.

Craig estimates that students will need about 10 hours of training before they will be ready to use the machine on their own.

The Kurzweil machine was acquired by the Five College community after several staff members at Amherst College worked to secure funding for the machine. An anonymous private foundation supplied $25,000 of the total $29,800 cost for the machine.

The balance of the funding was supplied by the Five College presidents, said Pat Aho, foundations specialist at Amherst College Development Office.

The University will provide funding for the $2520 yearly maintenance costs.

"In my opinion this is a prime example of the advantage we have in coordinating our efforts in the Valley," said Amherst College librarian Will Bridegam.

UMass Budget

UM: Tough budget year Must offset Prop 2½ effects

By DEBBIE SPARKS
Collegian Staff

This could be the University of Massachusetts' most difficult budget year since 1975, because of the pressure on Massachusetts legislators to boost aid to local cities and towns to offset the effects of Proposition 2½, Ken Moore, Chairman of the Undergraduate Student Senate Public Policy Team said.

Prophesizing for fiscal year 1982, Moore said, "we're going to have snowplows fighting microscopes."

Moore, along with another public policy member Terry Monac, went to the State House last Friday to testify in budget hearings on behalf of UMass. The House Ways and Means Committee hearing room overflowed with more than 200 people all waiting to give testimony on various aspects of the state budget.

After a grueling day of waiting in state house hallways, Moore and Monac never got a chance to speak and had to be satisfied with hand delivering their written testimony to the legislators, he said.

The process of funding new budgets each year begins with the governor submitting his recommendations for all state agencies for the coming fiscal year. Each agency also submits its own version of a budget request. Public hearings give the public a formal chance to support or dispute the two budget recommendations.

This year Governor Edward J. King's UMass-Amherst budget recommendation is $605,000 below the amount appropriated last year. According to Moore this translates into some very definate changes.

"Aproximately 100-200 professors and faculty will loose their jobs and 100 graduate teaching assistants positions will be eliminated. This also means larger class sizes, fewer sections, elimination of courses and more restrictive enrollment ceilings," Moore said.

Moore said that it also likely the equipment budget will not receive the type of funding it needs.

"This means that equipment in the areas of computers and engineering will become obsolete," he said. "Our basic goal is to get the equipment budget at least adequate to meet our needs."

Moore said he is encouraging students to pump legislators with as much information as they can by letter writing and individual lobbying of their state legislators.

The Collegian carried a story that week concerning the resignation of the board of editors of the Hunter Bulletin, the newspaper of Hunter College in New York City. The editors had been reprimanded for running cigarette advertisements in the paper when cigarette smoking was not allowed on the campus. The Student Council of the women's college then took over the management of the newspaper.

No Future: UMass-Ed King

Governor Edward King has announced a tuition increase of $200 for next year. The most interesting aspect of the announcement is that Governor King does not have the authority to raise tuition. The newly created Board of Regents has this authority, and what King means is that the Board of Regents will increase the tuition at the April 15 meeting.

How can Governor King predict what the Regents will do? Because King appointed the entire Board. King is dictating the increase to the Regents because the State needs money to bail out the cities and towns from Proposition 2½. The tuition increases are just one of the many examples that the Board of Regents is simply a puppet of Ed King and his policy to undermine Public Higher Education in this State.

Before Governor King took office, the system of Public Higher Education consisted of five separate Boards of Trustees with authority over their respective segment. Today, the Board of Regents has power over the entire system. Last spring, Governor King, with the help of Ways and Means Chairman John Finnegan (who King nominated for State Auditor), attached a rider to the budget creating the present system. This back-room democracy prohibited public hearings and forced a legislator to vote against the budget, which would have sent the State into fiscal chaos, in order to vote against the Board of Regents.

The Board of Regents consists of 15 individuals appointed by King. Two of the fifteen are women, one of whom is black. Their average age is fifty. Eight of the Regents are high-level business executives and five are officials of private colleges.

The implications cannot be over-simplified. The Chairman of the Board of Regents, James Martin, is a former president of the Massachusetts Business Roundtable (an organization representing business interests in this State), which currently has executives on loan to the Regents evaluating the staff of Public Higher Education.

One Regent, Ray Stata, was the first president of the Massachusetts High Technology Council. Another Regent is Dr. Wang, of Wang Laboratories. Currently, high tech on Route 128 is experiencing shortages of technicians and engineers. This group will promote their own interests, increasing the technological programs while undermining the fundamentals of higher education, that is, the Humanities and Liberal Arts.

The representation of private colleges on the Board of Regents poses a double-barrel threat. Presently, higher education is experiencing a decline of enrollment, coupled with the rising cost of living and decrease in financial aid to students. This means that public and private colleges must compete in a smaller market (of entering students) as their costs increase. It is only natural then for the private college interests on the Board of Regents to undermine the relatively low cost of Public Higher Education.

To add to the ammunition of tuition increases, a study by the Carnegie Commission of Higher Ed recommended that 33 percent of public higher educational costs should be assumed by the students. Currently, on this campus, students pay approximately 17 percent of their educational cost. Also, Massachusetts is experiencing a financial crisis due to Proposition 2½. To alleviate the problem, the State must find new sources of revenues other than taxes.

The tuition students pay goes into the State General Fund, just like any tax, so the State is raising our tuition to help bail out the cities and towns from Proposition 2½, and if the State follows the recommendations of the Carnegie Commission, tuition will double.

The $200 tuition increase is only the tip of the iceberg. In 1982, Ed King will run for re-election. He will tell people about the "good" things he is doing as Governor, citing the raising of the drinking age and the reorganization of higher education, coupled with tuition increases at public colleges, as high major accomplishments. Ed King is riding on the backs of UMass students to get himself re-elected, and nobody is stopping him.

Beyond the flood of pity

Before the banks of mainstream America are overrun and begin to flood the pages of the Collegian with a tsunami of indignation over the recent assassination attempt on Ronald Reagan, a not-so-mainstream citizen has a few thoughts to add. Like most everyone else, I am infuriated by this irresponsible act of nihilism—but for very different reasons than those of the whining newscasters and yellow editorialists. My anger is based upon the inevitable repurcussions that attempted assassination and assassinations bring.

First, no matter how dispicable or inept or evil the victim has been or was, the person is immediately apotheosized by the press. Had Reagan died, he would have ascended to glory like the Kennedys in a cloud of dangerous patriotic pomp. He lived however. Hence, we are stuck with something much worse than a dead martyr: a live one. Out of sympathy, Reagan will undoubtedly enjoy undue popular and political support for his policies and programmes that is all we need. Further, the S.S. (Secret Service), the same charmers that want to slap the Collegian Classified pranksters with a prison term, will also enjoy increased popularity.

More important than popularity, police powers have always been broadened as a result of these acts. Wire tap authority was greatly expanded after J.F.K.'s assassination. More wire taps, more F.B.I. authority. Doubtless this will help Reagan's case to allow the C.I.A. to function within U.S. territorial boundaries. Then there is always the perilous clamour to throw all the stops on capital punishment—to revive the Saturday morning public hanging (another one of Reagan's aspirations).

Obviously, I haven't a calorie of pity to expend for the man. A man who would outlaw abortion on demand and thus cause a renaissance of the back ally butchers; a person whose saber rattling endangers humanity itself; a politico who flagrently supports and abets the carnage of the Salvadorian junta; an actor whose skills are plied to sugar coat a racist welfare mentality that could well throw hundreds of thousands into the streets; Ronald Reagan is not worthy of our pity, only our vigilant contempt.

For these reasons, and many others, perhaps burning him at the stake is too merciful. However, in Reagan's case, emotions and morals can not legitimize solitary violent deeds. In the case of any President of the United States there can be no purposeful blood justice, because dead or alive all of us suffer as a result of such senseless acts like the one of last Monday afternoon.

Finally, and most importantly, do not be swept away by the deluge of media nonsense that this event has unleashed. Just because Ronald Reagan caught a twenty-two slug in the chest does not excuse him for what he is. On Monday morning, he was a man to be viewed with the utmost skepticism and anxiety; indeed, a man to be feared. Today, our view of him can only be more anxious and skeptical; he has become more of a danger to be reckoned with.

Read between the lines

This letter is to remind Joshua Chernin that like most things in life, one must read between the lines, or in the case of our national budget, the figures.

For example, the budget is mixed with trust funds—such as Social Security, the highway trust fund, and the airport and airways trust fund. Trust funds are not financed by income taxes but by their own separate taxes. This deceptively swells the human resources part of the budget. Also, it is interesting to note that the entire H-bomb enterprise, both research, development, and production is is the Department of Energy. In fiscal 1980, out of the total DOE budget of $8.42 billion, 3.0222 billion (35 percent) went into nuclear weapons.

Does Joshua realize that 70 percent of the interest on the national debt is attributable to military spending? Like a spreading cancer, our past, present, and future military spending is consuming the vital parts of our budget—human services.

We, for our part, have chosen not to support with our labor a government whose main business is war.

Dance concert: Vibrant, fresh

By LISA LANGONE
Collegian Staff

The notion of spring brings to mind words such as fresh, new, lively, and vibrant. Saturday night's spring dance conert, "Portraits," fulfilled and complimented these refreshing images.

Presented in the Amherst College Kirby Theatre, the first of five pieces was "Soarings," choreographed by Jane Carrington-Lewis. It was a fine composition of abstract modern dance, done to music by Keith Jarret and Gary Burton. The emphasis of this piece was on the impetus of movements, to give a more dynamic quality.

The second piece, "Ballade," choreographed by Ann Sokolow, was a delightfully romantic dance. The two couples leaped and twirled together in soft pastel costumes. The effectiveness of this piece stemmed from the continual juxtaposition of the partners. There were also many quick, almost jerky movements, which resulted in a sudden pause of even halt in motion altogether. This technique was elegant stylistically, and a pleasure to watch.

The third piece, "Passacaglia," choreographed by Doris Humphrey in 1939, was truly the most magnificent piece of the evening. This powerfully dramatic performance was reconstructed from the Labanotated score, and had incredible impact. It opened with the dancers grouped together in a pyramid formation, wearing regal, burgundy colored garb. The movements were of an unusual assortment, and very uniform in their style. With gusts of high leg extensions and flowing arms, the piece moved with great strength. It was tastefully done, and the dramatics of "Passacaglia" were intensified by the music of J.S. Bach's Fugue in C Minor.

On a somewhat different note, was "Beasts That Might Be," choreographed by Deanna Dron. It was a highly abstract piece, done without music, but to unusual animal-like vocal noises from the dancers. It was fun and witty, with an especially nice performance from Dana Kornfeld. She was truly the major force in the dance, with her graceful strength and agility.

The final performance was an emotional piece, "Open Book," choreographed by Daniel Lewis, and performed by members of the Daniel Lewis Dance Repertory Company. In a unique modern style, incorporating theater and dance, the piece was certainly a new experience for me. It seemed to ponder the many questions of life and love in a melodramatic dance. The dancers were all exceptional, and revealed a real sense of vitality.

Overall, "Portraits" was a success. It maintained a stronger sense of continuity than most concerts I have seen. The majority of the dancers displayed excellent and enthusiastic talent, and should be commended for their fine performance.

"Pilot. The pens you have to hold onto with two hands."
—Rodney Dangerfield

"I don't get no respect. I make a deposit... this guy's making a withdrawal —including my Pilot pen."

It's almost criminal how people ga far my Pilot Fineliner. Why? Its fine point writes through carbons. And Pilot charges only 79¢ far it. People get their hands on it and forget it's my pen. I got no pen. And no respect.

People ga nuts over my Pilot Razor Point too. It writes with an extra fine line. Its metal collar helps keep the point from going squish. For only 89¢ they should buy their own pen—and show some respect for my property.

New budget promises fights

By STEVEN A. COHEN
Associated Press

BOSTON — On the House side, the public show is over. Now it's down to business.

Shortly, the House Ways and Means Committee will report the next fiscal year's budget to the floor. And everyone who has been wondering how the Legislature will respond to Proposition 2½ can see what's on the House leadership's mind.

The drama will resume once the $6 billion-plus budget clears the House. It then goes to the Senate Ways and Means Committee, where, as in the House committee, the cards are played close to the vest.

Everyone will see what's on the Senate leadership's mind when the Senate committee reports its version of the bill to the Senate floor. Often, the House and Senate sharply disagree. Whether they will where it counts this year, only time will tell.

Where it counts, of course, is local aid.

The House committee concluded weeks of hearings on Gov. Edward J. King's $6.4 billion budget for the fiscal year beginning July 1 Friday, and the bill is expected to reach the floor in another week or so.

King proposed only about $37.5 million in direct new local aid to help the cities and towns cope with the local tax-cutting law passed by voters in November. Municipal officials estimate the local revenue loss at up to $600 million in fiscal 1982, and they want the state to assume half the burden.

No one expects King's local aid figure to stick. How much it will rise, and how the higher figure will be achieved are the questions.

Plans have been put forward publicly by legislators.

Rep. Gerald Cohen, House chairman of the Taxation Committee, has proposed a freeze on the state budget, at this year's level, to free up $360 million for new local aid.

Eyewitness is a letdown

By TOM FAISON
Collegian Staff

The major problem with Peter Yates' film Eyewitness is simply that it doesn't meet the expectations that one has of it when entering the theatre.

Yates, a very popular director in Hollywood today, has tried to combine elements from three of his previous films in hopes of making Eyewitness a success. However, instead of another hit, he has made a confusing and disjointed film that leaves the audience in the dark. Yates' first American film Bullit with Steve McQueen, featured one of the most exciting (if not most contrived) car chase sequences ever filmed, but its counterpart in Eyesitness is an awkward scene that involves a motorcycle, a bike chain, and a car load of Oriental villains that really has nothing to do with the rest of the plot.

In The Deep (one of my favorate garbage films of all time) we have a charming young couple that gets chased at a fevered pitch through the lovely Bermuda countryside. In both films, the plots are relatively incoherent, but at least in The Deep we know who the villains are and what they have in mind by harassing the couple. In Eyewitness we don't really know who anyone is or why they do some of the things that they do. In many cases, the action really has no direct bearing on the plot.

In Yates' Breaking Away, the enormously successful family drama of a few years ago, there are a number of distinct characters, and we often get to know their motivations almost as well as our own. There are two families in Eyewitness, but because they are so silly and stereotypical we neither get to know them nor care about them.

One family is the "typical" Irish one, with the drunken, vulgar and crippled father, the hysterical mother and the sensitive son. Since they do little more than fight, we quickly lose interest in them. The other family, is made up of wealthy and aristocratic Jews who (as the New Yorker's Pauline Kael puts it) come off more like Nazis. When we first see them, they are putting on a little chamber music concert (father on violin, mother on 'cello, daughter on piano) for their guests, who look like left-over extras from Dr. Zhivago. But, instead of arguing, they interact through Mozart and Zionist slogans.

The major focus of the film is now obvious, the offspring from these two wildly diverse family units are thrown together through a series of events that step from a murder in which the hero Daryll Deever (William Hurt, the embryonic protagonist of Ken Russell's Altered States) works as the night janitor. The heroine, Jackie Sokalov (Sigourney Weaver, the feline, creature killer from Ridley Scott's Alien) is an ambitious TV newswoman who is assigned to the case and hopes to use Daryll to discover the identity of the murderer.

The stinger here is that Daryll, who has been secretly worshipping Jackie throughout the years via the television screen, is pretending to know more than he actually does in order to get to know Jackie better who is already engaged to Joseph (Christopher Plummer), who smuggles people out of The Soviet Union for a hobby...

Give up? It gets worse from here. Through a series of dead ends and Dickensian coincidences the film finally winds down to an awkward and contrived conclusion.

However, in spite of all of these problems, Eyewitness has a smooth, semi-slick look to it, and the cast, (especially the leads) are fresh, talented and almost succeed in breathing new life into this tired old plot. There is also an excellent bit between Daryll and his father (Kenneth McMillan) that suggests the power that the film might have had, had it not tried to be so damn cute.

In retrospect, there is a scene that almost perfectly sums up the entire film. The two policemen who are investigating the case (Steven Hill and Morgan Freeman) attempt to chase a suspect (James Woods) through the congested streets of downtown Manhattan. However, they are unable to continue because, like the rest of the film, their 1975 Chevy runs out of gas.

Army ROTC. Now you can take it in 2 years, too.

If you missed taking Army ROTC in your first two years of college, you may not have missed out. Because of the Army ROTC Two-Year program. You'll have to attend a special six-week camp the summer before your junior year. But you'll be well paid for it.

And altogether, you'll earn a total of about $2,900 to help you through your last two years of college. Then you'll earn a commission as an officer at the same time you earn a college degree.

Batters split home opener with Black Bears

By MIKE ESTRADA
Collegian Staff

A timely offensive onslaught in the opening game and a streak of ineffective pitching in the nightcap made and broke the Minutemen on Earl Lorden Field Saturday, where UMass split its home opening doubleheader with the University of Maine at Orono, 9-8 and 4-11.

Trailing 8-2 in the first game, the Minutemen plated seven runs in the sixth inning, including a three-run home run by Waren McTeddie and a two-run shot by Dean Bennett, to take the game out of the back pockets of the Black Bears and coach John Winkin.

But after tying the game at two in the nightcap the Minutemen saw their chance of a sweep slip away when Maine scored nine times in its half of the sixth, worsened by six walks by four different UMass pitchers and the slugging of Black Bear leftfielder Kevin Buckley.

The Maine co-captain from Braintree lined a solo home run over the left field wall with one out and later in the same inning propelled a massive grand slam far above the same stretch of wall to put the visitors up 11-2. The Minutemen failed to amass another comeback despite scoring twice again before the end of the game.

The Minutemen and coach Dick Bergquist move their record to 6-7 after the doubleheader, two games in which UMass displayed things both negative and positive.

Bergquist said he "is a little concerned" about the effectiveness of his pitching staff after seeing veteran righthander Chuck Thompson and the rest of the staff tagged for 18 earned runs on the day.

The hitting however, was fairly steady and always strong. Given that the wind was blowing straight out all day, UMass ripped nine extra base hits, including three home runs, while outhitting the Black Bears, last year's New England College Champions, 18-15.

UMaine, after convincingly sweeping a doubleheader from Fairfield University in Connecticut Friday, moves its record to 9-10.

GAME ONE: UMass starting pitcher Chuck Thompson's curve ball and slider were really snapping at first. The senior faced only ten Maine batters through the first three innings, forcing six ground outs, striking out one batter and allowing two singles.

The Minutemen supported Thompson early. With two outs in the bottom of the first inning, Mark Litano doubled off the wall in center and catcher Jim Aulenback, who gunned down Bear Dick Whitten in an attempted steal of second base in the top of the inning, pounded a home run over the right center field wall to put UMass up 2-0.

But the Bears got to Thompson in the fourth, scoring five runs on six hits and two walks to take the lead, 5-2. The visitors scored three more times in the sixth with home runs by Rick Lashua and Pete Adams to make the score 8-2 which chased Thompson from the mound, and set up the dramatic Minuteman comeback.

The fortunate winning pitcher was Tony Presnal (1-1) who came on to get the third out in the sixth and force three straight ground outs in seventh.

GAME TWO: Other than giving up two runs on two hits in the first inning, UMass starting hurler Vin Todd was having his day in the second game. The righthander faced just 13 batters through the next four innings, the only baserunner being Maine rightfielder Tom Vanidestine who reached first on a fielding error charged to shortstop Vin Bonnano in the fourth.

Meanwhile, the Minutemen caught up with Maine righthander Stu Lacognata, tying the game in the fifth inning. With one out Barry Bennett singled to left, Dean Bennett singled, and Bonanno plated both men with a double. UMass blew a chance to take a lead when Litano struck out and John Kraham, with the bases loaded, popped up ro second baseman Mark Sutton.

From the Minutemen's point of view, the sixth inning was a nightmare. Buckley's first home run chased Todd from the mound, giving way to Presnal's second appearance of the day. Presnal got Vanidestine to pop up to third baseman Barry Bennett but walked the next two batters, on scoring when Sutton slapped a single to center.

Bergquist went to the bullpen for Dan Cook and Cook promptly walked three straight men and threw a wild pitch as two runs scored. Minuteman Steve Drellick was the fourth pitcher of the inning, entering the game with the bases loaded. He walked Kevin Bernier for another run and was tagged for a grand slam by Buckley, which gave the Black Bears an insurmountable, 11-2 lead.

Ruggers wallop MIT, CCSC

By NANCY PARKS

With a fierce, constant eastern wind in their faces, the University of Massachusetts A and B rugby teams managed decisive wins, Saturday, over MIT and Central Connecticut State College, 34-3 and 30-6, respectively.

UMass B team saw action first against Central Connecticuts' A team. The half started out quickly for Central who took an early 6-0 lead. But coming up from behind, UMass took the lead in the middle of the first half and held on throughout the second half holding Central to their original score of 6 points.

The Minutemen steadily built up the lead to a strong 30-6, with a number of hard-earned tries and placekicks.

MIT is a team that advisor Doc Laurence had expected to beat; but not by such a big margin.

"Seven years ago MIT had the strongest rugby team; we did expect to win this game, we have a very fast group of kids, but definitely not by such a big margin."

The A team is made up of the top players in the club, and Laurence felt that MIT just could not cope with the strength and size of the men on the team. There is also a great deal of speed on the B team, as well as the A team.

The A men did not seem to have any trouble going against the wind that was cutting across the field during the game. They scored some fast, strong tries against the win and there was no question as to who had the advantage in the game.

According to Laurence, on a day such as Saturday, when the wind is racing over the fields, it is preferable to have the wind in your face the first half of the game.

"I know this field well," said Laurence. "Once this wind starts blowing it builds up and then stays steady."

"When we flipped for sides at the beginning of the game, MIT won and decided they wanted their backs to the wind the first half. The strategy here is to hold them back until they get tired and then the first half ends and they have to face the wind. That's what happened today and the men grabbed a quick, strong advantage."

An air of intimidation and useage of a new offense led the men's varsity volleyball team, 16-4 over the University of Maine Saturday at BC, wrapping up UMass' regular season in the Northeast Collegiate Volleyball League with an 8-0 record.

The Minutemen, who had no problem taking the first game 15-6, entered the second game overconfidently. "Misserves and being mentally out of position," cost them the game 4-15, according to Coach Al Morel. "It happens a lot, we blow them away the first game, then let up."

UMass then changed from a one to two setter offense. Killer spiking and excelent defense by Mark Ruegg and Steve Geryk led the team to victories in the remaining two of the three games. "We just took control again with a lot of intimidation," Morel said.

"We changed offense to enable setter co-captain Pat Ryan, (number one in New England) to hit as well," Morel said, "But it will take a while before he can get used to the change and really hit."

With a lot of practice and luck, Ryan, a junior, will be ready to face Springfield College Wednesday night. The Chiefs, the top team in New England for the past five years, have won the National Collegiate Athletic Association title four times in the past 10 years.

"They (Springfield) beat us when we played there (two weeks ago), but maybe being home will help us put the ball away when we need to."

The last home game this season is Wednesday night at NOPE at 8:30, making it Senior Night, according to Morel. The majority of the team will graduate including, co-captain Mark Farrante, Scott Houle and Jack Chandelor. Also playing in their last home game are Ruegg and Kevin Russell.

The Minutemen are under a lot of pressure to beat Springfield because UMass' entrace to the Eastern Championship Meet on April 22nd, is contingent upon a victory.

Trackmen/women suffer losing weekends

Beaulieu wins 5000

The women's spring track team lost its season opener on UMass's wind swept outdoor track last Saturday to UNH by a score of 65-38 and to Harvard by a score of 58-38.

UMass's junior Micki Callahan and freshman Nadine Jackson teamed up in the field events and sprints to score the bulk of points for the UMass women.

Callahan came in first in the 100 yard dash with a time of 12.6 and finished second in the 100 meter high hurdles in 17.4. Callahan picked up second place in the long jump with a leap of 16'½". "The times were bad today because the wind was so bad. I could really feel it during the hurdles," Callahan said.

Jackson won the discus with a throw of 129'10½" and the 220 yard dash with a time of 28.2. Callahan also placed in the 220 with a fourth place time of 28.9 in the second heat of the event. Jackson finished third in the shot put with a throw of 36'11". Jackson and Callahan also were part of the winning 4x110 relay team which won in a time of 52.1.

"Every meet they both compete in at least three events. They will both compete in the pentathalon later in the season," coach Ken Banda said.

Karen Snow won the javelin with a throw of 120'6". The high jump was won with a jump of 5'1" by Liane Rozell and Jill Kennedy finished third with a jump of 5'0". Kennedy finished fourth in the 400 meter low hurdles with a time of 1:14.8. It was Kennedy's first time competing in the event.

In the middle distance events UMass failed to place a runner in the half-mile and did not enter anyone in the 440 yard run.

The mile run was both a tactical race and a battle against the wind for the women. After an 82 second first quarter-mile and a slow 2:42 half-mile, the front runners, including UMass's junior Judy McCrone, broke from the pack and finished with a 68 second final quarter. The kick of Harvard's Darlene Beckford was too much for the other runners and Beckford won in 5:08.3 with McCrone finishing fourth in 5:16.5.

"I though I'd take it out on the third lap, because I knew Beckford could outkick me," McCrone said.

Junior Cathy Petrick ran the two-mile but failed to place. Petrick has been sick lately and missed a chance at competing in the Easterns during the winter indoor track season.

In a meet that should have been much closer, the University of Massachusetts men's track team opened their 1981 season on a sour note Saturday at the hands of a well prepared Boston College team, being defeated handily 99-66.

The Minutemen's biggest problem was their inability to score more than 5 points in any event. They did so only on two occasions; in the javelin throw and the 5000 meter run.

Ironically, UMass outscored BC, 19 to 17, in an area which has been weak for the past few years: the throwing field events. This was largely through the efforts of a superlative javelin team of freshmen Al Madonna, Dan Joyce, Dana Berenson, and sophomore Steve Johnson. They gave UMass a sweep of the top four places. All had personal best throws, with Madonna firing 192'2" to qualify for the New England'.

The 5000 promised to be somewhat of a showdown, featuring the Minutemen's Paul Beaulieu against BC distance ace Fernando Braz. Braz, cheered on by the partisan crowd, pulled the leaders through the two mile mark in 9:36. But as the race wore on, it became strictly a two man race between Braz and Beaulieu. To the dismay of the fans, the junior Beaulieu zoomed past Braz with 300 meters left in the race, and sped to a convincing 14:43.2 win. Senior Kyle Martin took third in 14:56.1, after having placed second in the 1500.

Bill Devarney had outstanding early season sprint efforts, winning the 100 mjbdash and placing third in the 200. The junior's times of 10.7 and 22.2 are his second best ever in those events, and both qualify him for the New Englands. The 100 mark also earns him a berth to compete in the (IC4A) championships.

Mother of Slain Atlanta Child Speaks on Campus

Carmille Bell, mother of the fourth slain child in Atlanta, Yusef Bell, spoke to a concerned crowd of some 250 people Wednesday night at the SBA auditorium. Bell, a chairperson for the support group called the Committee to Stop Children's Murders in Atlanta told how the Atlanta police and other National officials did not become involved in investigations until nearly 15 children were missing, or murdered.

Bell exclaims that the childrens murders starting in 1979, did not receive proper news coverage. At this time 6 children were found murdered or missing. One of which was found strangled, raped and tied to a tree.

"Still each one of these was played as isolated incidences" said Bell. The general feeling at that time was "sure is a shame these bad things happen. Atlanta's a wonderful city and nothing unusual is going on."

Shortly after the 6th death, the support group was formed. Every attempt to discourage and discredit the group was made by local officials. Later after a few more deaths occured the group went to the Public Safety Committee of the City council at Atlanta City Hall to ask for help.

At this time the death toll rose to 11 children dead or missing. A task force consisting of one sargent, and four investigators was formed. Days later, Clifford Jones of Cleveland who was visiting his grandmother in Atlanta was killed and thrown away beside a dumpster.

During the period that Clifford Jones was killed, his hometown Cleveland paper printed the story. A Black Shriners convention being held in Cleveland helped to make the people realize that something unusual was happening in Atlanta. It was not until the media told the story nationally that the task force grew from 5 investigators to 17.

"It's a little bit heart breaking to Atlanta mothers to know that Atlanta children were not important to make that jump," said Bell. "During a period when things were very frightening, one of our tv stations ran a story about a guerrilla warfare camp back to back with the story of the missing and murdered children in Atlanta. Almost as if they were trying to create a picture of a racial situation, where maybe there was or maybe there was not a racial situation."

It was not until a boiler in the Boying Homs daycare center in Atlanta exploded, that people thought the incidents were truly connected. At this time 15 children were dead or missing. That is when national tv acknowledges the real issue.

Bell spoke of "smoke screens" officials were using to hide the real issue such as "did he always hang out on that corner or why don't their parents take care of them."

The real issue said Bell is "Children are being killed, the killer has not been caught and there are children missing. Where are they•"

Atlanta Self-defense Patrols Attacked by Police

Reprinted from Workers World

By Bob Bruton

ATLANTA, March 24--"Why the hell aren't the cops out looking for whoever is killing our kids instead of hassling us for protecting our neighborhood.?"

This statement by Dovie Newell was the burning question on everyone's mind Sunday night as over 50 supporters and members of the recently formed Techwood/Clark Howell Homes armed self-defense patrols jammed the hallways of the Atlanta city jail protesting the arrests and police harassment of the self-defense patrol.

The patrols, formed last week to defend the Techwood area from racist attacks, was organized as a result of the frustration and anger felt in the Black community over the failure of the Atlanta police to stop the continuing murders of Black children here. Twenty-two Black Atlanta children have been killed in the last 21 months. Two Black youths, Timothy Hill and Jojo Bell, are still missing.

Rally hits cops

The Sunday night rally at the jail demanded the release of Modibo Kadalie, a patrol organizer who was arrested earlier in the day. Five patrol organizers have been arrested in the last five days on a series of trumped-up charges aimed at disrupting the community patrols. (All those arrested are now free on bond.)

Following chants of, "The cops and the Klan work hand in hand," rally speakers demanded an end to the "racist harassment of the self-defense patrols." Speakers pointed out the racist history of the police department and blasted "the government authorities (who) have stood by and done nothing when the Klan and Nazis walk the streets (brandishing loaded shotguns and automatic rifles.) But when the Black community tries to defend itself the cops occupy our community and throw us in jail."

Although many of the residents of Techwood have complained to the city administration that the police don't respond when called, now that they have decided to protect themselves the police havev virtually occupied the Black community. Ov er 60 cops were assigned to the Techwood area this past week end when the patrols began.

Even though none of the murdered and missing children have been from Techwood, Israel Green, president of the Techwood/Clark Howell Tenants Association, stated Friday, "We want to make sure that none of our children gets snatched because the police sure aren't protecting us."

Wide support

The big business press and the police claim that almost no support exists for these self-defense patrols. But letters and phone calls of support have come in from throughout the U.S. asnd also from Canada, England, Spain and Sweden. A delegation from the Soviet Union visited Techwood last Friday and presented a Soviet - made lamp to the community as symbolic of their solidarity in the struggle.

In the Techwood area itself, support is growing as shown last Saturday when nearly 100 angry residents and supporters protesting the arrest of Jerome Gibbson one of the patrols surrounded a police car and refused to release it. This action forced the police to return Gibbs within half an hour, issuing only a written citation for carrying a pistol without a permit.

A coverup?

The call for armed self-defense of the Black community in the face of increasing racist attacks has struck a responsive chord here. More people are asking, "What is the role of the cops in this tragic series of racist attacks?"

Is the killer a cop? Is it the work of the Ku Klux Klan? Is there an officially sanctioned coverup of whoever the killer is ?

And why is it that the Atlanta police can mount what they call "the most massive investigative effort in the history of this city"; can bring in the Georgia Bureau of Investigation and the Federal Bureau of Investigation; can offer a $100,000 reward for information leading to the arrest of whoever is responsible; and the cops and city administration can drag out the largest array of psychics, seers, "topnotch" investigators from five major U.S. cities, and hundreds of bounty hunters--and yet the first arrests connected with the racist murders are residents of the Black community attempting to protect their children?

These are the questions that are being asked more frequently--and they must be answered. It will be in the struggle against the racist attacks, for self-defense and self-determination for oppressed peoples, and for a society that doesn't allow murderous and fascist groups like the KKK and Nazis to exist, that these questions will be answered.

2 Added to List of Victims in Atlanta

The names of Timothy Hill, age 13, and Eddie Lamar Duncan, age 21, have been added to the list of unsolved murders in Atlanta. The inclusion of the two latest victims rises the count of the missing and murdered to 24.

Initially these two victims' names were not given to the special task force designed specifically to the murders because of the runaway history of one, and the adult age of the other were not thought to be related. The authorities had previously declined to place Hill's name on the task force list because of his history as a runaway and because assertions were made by some that they had seen him alive. Eddie Duncan was also added to the list after his body was discovered Tuesday night in the Chattahoochee River about fourmiles from where Hill's body was discovered the previous day. Originally, his death was not thought to be related because of his adult age, but was later added because the autopsy shows his cause of death to be similar to the children's deaths.

Timothy Hill: was the eighth black child's body discovered in Southwest Fulton County since the series of puzzling murders began. A police issued a statement saying that Hill's death indeed "fit the general pattern" of the deaths of the other black youths in the special force's case.

The tour of the Special Task Force's headquarters disclosed walls filled with graphic charting, measuring and tracing patterns of such information as the ages of the victims, the month and the year they were last seen, the day they were last seen, the meteorological conditions on the dates of disappearances, phases of the moon on these dates, information and organizational flow charts, maps of the city showing patterns of abductions and distances between discovered bodies.

There were also numerous composite sketches of suspects as seen and sent to the task force by psychics from all over the country and abroad.

Lee P. Brown, Atlanta's Public Safety Commissioner said that the task force was equipped with "the most sophisticated computer system in the world for a criminal investigation."

It is believed by Mr. Brown that one person is not responsible for all the killings, and while more information is gained daily the force is still unable to make any arrests in any of the murders.

BLACKS IN AMERICA

PART II

by Donna Davis Nummo Staff

The 1960's marked an era of political and social upheaval. however, in retrospect it seems that the efforts, monies and lives of countless people have been in vain.

§The Civil Rights Movement gave Black people rights but they have been counteracted by other factors. The Anti-War Movement incensed many young Americans but twenty years later we are on the verge of another more devastating catastrophe. Women have been accepted into the labor force, however, primitive attitudes towards them haven't changed.

§A closer look at the emergence of the Civil Rights Movement will reveal two important facts. First, Blacks had to fight for rights that are supposedly guraranteed by the Constitution. Second, Blacks fought because they were being dehumanized by an exploitative system. The end products of the Movement gave us the right to sit upfront or in the back of a bus, the right to be served at any public restaurant, the theoretical right to be employed anywhere (as long as quota guidelines are not exceeded), and the right to more political representation. And yes, we do see Black bodies occupying positions that were formerly reserved for Caucasians. And, lo and behold, Black mayors and congressmen do exist. However, the bottom line is: Blacks are no better off now than they were twenty years ago!

§The Civil Rights Movement gave Blacks the right to be more visible in society. However, the Movement failed to give us one important thing: power. A rough estimate indicates that the Black race comprises one tenth of this country's population. Yet Blacks do not have control of one tenth of this country's wealth. Furthermore their political strength isn't might enough to secure a legal holiday for one of its most beloved leaders.

§The Civil Rights Movement also failed to give Blacks more effective legal recourse against systematic homicide. So far no one has been able to ebb the tide of killings in Atlanta, or stop police officers from murdering young Black men.

§In the meantime, Blacks are becoming angry and gearing up for a fight. But before going through the same scenario that was acted out twenty years ago, lessons from the past should be scrutinized. The Civil Rights Movement was not a fruitless experience. It was a hard fought battle, but it should not be thought of as the end. Instead it should be viewed as phase one of an important step towards equalization. And if there is a mass demonstration of Black people that approaches the magnitude of the Civil Rights Movement, do not forget to remind Black leaders not to accept borderline compromises. Instead, the Black leaders must implement the construction of a monetary and political power base, or twenty years from now we'll be trying to rememberwhat all the yelling and screaming was about.

TO BE YOUNG, GIFTED AND BLACK

by Bill Rousells, Public Information Officer, The Black Collegian Magazine

We should never forget that it was illegal to teach a slave how to read. To properly educate an oppressed people is to provide them with an effective tool for their liberation. In that vein, today, it appears that the securing of a quality education for our Black children is becoming increasingly difficult.

§The educational crisis impacting Black young people (particularly in urban areas) stands as a stark harbinger of slow death to our souls, spirits, minds, and our future.While we certainly face other immediate dangers, we must face the challenge of preparing this generation of Black youth for survival and progress in a complex, hostile society.

§We certainly face much harder times with the Reagan administration which has given the signal that the federal government will severely limit resources to aid American workers, students, small business, and poor people in this economic crisis. We face the genocidal murder of Black youth in Atlanta and the de facto legalization of police and Klan murders of Black people in Miami, New Orleans, Greensboro and most urban areas of America. Facing these bleak circumstances, the problems confronting urban public school systems, historically Black colleges, and the general reduction in educational opportunities for Black students are crippling our ability to survive the current economic and political crisis we face in America.

§It now appears that integration of the American public education system, for which we fought long and hard, is being used as a tool to distort and disrupt the education of Black young people. Integration, as it has been implemented in urban public school systems (particularly in the South), has resulted in a steady decline in academic achievement of our young people.

§Integration has been implemented as an assimilationist tool proclaiming the superiority of white American culture, intelligence and heredity. This is happening at the expense of developing positive, constructive models for our Black children. The committed Black teacher has been replaced by whites who could care less about fully developing the potential of Black children, and by young teachers, Black and white, who see their jobs as a means to obtain a paycheck. I'm sure you've heard these paycheck hounds exclaim "I got mine, it's up to them to get theirs," butthey rarely put forth any extra effort to make sure, "they get theirs." Both Black and white teachers place an inordinate priority on behavior control while neglecting the intellectual development of Black children.

§Integration has meant the abandonment of the public school system by whites to such an extent that urban school districts This has resulted in pressures to cut back tax monies for public education and increasing efforts to implement state support for private and parochial education spurred by "middle class" whites who are seeking aid to education their children outside the public system.

§In the higher education arena historically Black universities, which graduate more than 70 of the Black professionals, are being forced to abandon their historical mission, to increase white students and faculty presence, and to merge and be submerged by larger predominately white institutions.

§The Bakke decision and other judicial and administrative trends (i.e., restricted admissions policies, cutbacks in financial aid, etc.) have resulted in a reduction in the number of Blacks enrolled in predominately white private universities as compared to five years ago. The desegregation edicts of the Justice Department are resulting in shrinking rather than expanding higher educational opportunities for Black students in public universities.

Educational opportunities at all levels for Black students are being severely curtailed.

§Therefore, it is the responsibility of our young people with our help to break through the educational barriers placed in their paths. They must prepare themselves to be three times better than Mr. Charley's children and they must use whatever resources at their disposal to get a quality education.

§Furthermore, it is our responsibility to challenge conditions that exist:

§ 1) We must gain control of urban public school systems where the vast majority of our young people are educated

§ 2) We must institute programs, people, and policies which provide the basis for quality educational experiences based on mutual respect for divergent cultures and which recognize and encourage the development of the intellectual and practical skills necessary to compete in today's society.

§ 3) We must take control of our own destinies and provide the financial and political support for the perpetuation and development of historically Black universities.

§ 4) We must develop additional and alternative educational experiences to provide our children with an understanding and appreciation of Black culture, heritage and struggle for survival in America.

§ 5) We have the responsibility to make sure that this generation of Black children gets the sustenance, encouragement and support to continue our struggle for survival and liberation.

§Spurred by the first annual Black College Day rally in Washington, D.C. last September, several student, faculty, and alumni based organizations have begun work legally, politically, and economically to support the survival of Black universities. Students and faculty at Cheyney State University, the oldest Black college in the country, have sued the State of Pennsylvania and the U.S. government in an effort to retain Cheyney's historical identity and to provide additional resources to enhance educational opportunities for Black students. In Louisiana, Grambling and Southern University students, alumni, faculty and supporters are organizaing to bring political pressure to assure additional resources for these highly acclaimed Black institutions. Both Louisiana and Pennsylvania, along with eight other states are being forced to desegregate their institutions of higher learning. In the desegregation process, a pattern of limiting state resources to Black schools along with increaing pressures to have the Black universities to merge and be submerged by predominately white schools is emerging. The efforts in Louisiana and Pennsylvania are challenging these racist patterns and laying the basis for further efforts to save Black colleges nationally.

Skip Robinson Lectures During MLK Week

by Joe Gannon Nummo Staff

"Now the question before Reagan is; 'What will you do with 30 to 50 million blacks who yearn to be free?' If Reagan wants to save this country -- and the question is before the house tonight -- 'What will American do with 30 to 50 million Black slaves!'

This was the question posed by Minister Alfred Skip Robinson of the United League of Mississippi Thursday April 2 before a crowd of about 150 in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Minister Robinson was brought to UMass as a part of Martin Luther King Week and was preceeded, thursday evening, by a half hour of glorious gospel music by the "Voices of Jubilation" choir.

The United League was founded in Mississippi by Skip Robinson in 1966 after he broke with the NAACP and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference over the issues of land and the SCLC's philosophy of non-violence. "the United League had different concept." Skip said, in explaining his split with the NAACP and the SCLC. "Land is power." Skip said, and so the United League began mobilizing Blacks around the issue of land.

"What do we have today in 1981? Sure we are educated a little bit better, we eat and sleep in intergrated places, but hell, we don't own nothing! We don't own nothing." Skip said, explaining the mistake M.L. King made in demanding civil rights without establishing the means for economic security as well. As proof of this Skip quoted statistics showing that in 1940 Blacks owned 1 percent of America's wealth. In 1980, Skip said, 'Blacks owned only one-half of one percent of America's wealth, and only three percent of one percent of the land in America.

As a recourse to this Skip said Black people, "... should be about building our own factories, buying farm land, and raising our own food and feeding our own children."

It was after the United League began mobilizing Blacks around the issue of land that Skip related to the audience how the Klan had dug nine graves a block from his house for him, his wife and children and then fire-bombed his house while his family slept inside. His family escaped unharmed but the incident convinced him that the United League must take up armed self-defense if it was to survive.

The United League now has 500 armed women and men who act as security for the United League's offices and during thetheir demonstrations.

Skip -- who a year ago converted to the Nation of Islam and is in charge of the Ministry of the State of Mississippi -- also talked about the need for Black people to police their own communities in order to halt "Black on Black" crime as the United League began doing in 1974.

"the problems we are having today are because we are not together ourselves. We want the Klan and police to stop killing us but we won't stop killing one another."

Skip also had a message for the white people in the audience. He said white people, too, had an enormous responsibility in organizing their own communities because it was their ancestors who enslaved Blacks and it was they who are destroying the world today.

His voice echoing in the auditorium Skip asked the Black people present as he had asked Dr. King years before, "How long -- but not long -- how long shall we, will we suffer in America?"

The Crisis of The Black Community

Reprinted form Final Call

By Sonia Sanchez

Four hundred years ago, the white guardians of Western Imperialism initiated the African salve trade. The nature of Western Imperialism was physical and cultural. Blacks survived physically but not culturally. The European's reality became the reality to be reckoned with, for Black men put on a new language and religion and became another being; became negroes througha process of alienation, neutralization, indoctrination and creation. By crossing the ocean during the Middle Passage, where millions lost their lives and their dignity, crowded and meshed together like stunted clay, the African became alienated from his land. Once here whites began to neutralize him by taking away his drum, refusing him the sanctity of his language and customs, and making him a neutral being.

White people then began the mental castration of the Black man. In Africa the Black man would sing to his son(s) that this night they would drink palm wine in celebration of a good harvest. A young African boy would work the land with his father and hear the joyous work songs, the dignified sounds of a man who was triumphant with the produce from his own land, and the father would turn and look around him knowing that he could feed his family and himself. There would be a sense of well-being and manhood. But in America, this same African became not a man taking care of his family or working the land with a joyous song, because it is a different song one sings when the produce comes from threats and whippings and numbed bodies exhasted by continuous work. The Black man now had to ask the white master for all that he needed. The Black man became the mental mistress of white America, reduced to begging another man for all his needs. Now, all the things that satisfied the nature of a man could no longer satisfy this new man produced by indoctrination and fear. This new man, a Negro, had now appeared.

The Black woman carried the unborn child within her, shrinking into herself as she watched those she loved beaten until they were not seen; the adrenalin rushing through her into the unborn child, that child now knowing fear even before birth. After birth the mother fed the child on the milk of fear, and so began the process of dehumanization.

This "new Negro" was now forced to "build his Americanism on race values," that is to seek a racial self-respect, in order to compensate for whatever pressure there may be from the majority culture. Dr. W.E.B DuBois in 1915 produced a book of African history entitled THE NEGRO, to show that with little or no assistance from others, Black men had constructed a distinctive and complex cultures in Africa, pointing a finger to the African states that Islam had developed.

It was the music of the Black man from West Africa that lingered the longest in the Black man's memory. It was also a vehicle that he most frequently used to express his reaction to his introduction to slavery.

Most West African were farmers and were familiar with a series of agricultural work songs which they sang in the seasons of planting and harvesting. Naturally those work songs would be the most frequently sung under the circumstances of the Black man's subjection to enslavement on the plantation establishment, being that the better part of his day was spent working in an agricultural environment. Obviously, singing a song to one's own labor on one's own land is quite different from singing a song to one's own labor, without payment or favor on someone else's land.

The original concept of work connected with the concept of suffering and deprivation of reward. However, pure African songs could be heard in the souther United States as late as 1900.

While it is true that the change of the wording of the work song was reflective of the change in the Black man's concept of work, more significant than the change in the attire of the African work song is that such transition was indicative of the Black man's subconscious alteration of his definition of man's life on earth. This change was a result of being born in chains and under the tutelage of the eyes of the slavemaster. To be born in slavery was like being aman born blind whose definition of the world differs from those who walk in light and can see the world and the blind man who cannot see himself.

The new definition of the Black man's role and world was ahped by the white man and by the condition of slavery which he imposes upon the Black man. The work songs of the plantations were reflective of the ffect of the imposition of slavery which was that of a change in the cultural reference point of the Black man from that of the Eastern Sun to that of a Western Sun.

The crisis of the Black community is the history of America -- salvery and oppression. Capitalism and imperialism with the accompanying sores of racism, sexism, and discrimination. Since we have refused to mount an attack on capitalism and imperialism, we are now involved with the syumptoms, i.e. delinquency, poor housing, high suicide rate, poverty, etc., and treating them as the problem. The latter is a method used quite successfully by oppressors to convince an oppressed people that they are the reason for their own non-development, non-progress and failure. We have internalized the crisis instead of externalizing it, and have in one sense become the crisis.

The crisis in the Black community is 400 years of oppression. The symptoms are police brutality, high youth unemployment, genocide, poor and inadequate housing, high crime rate, bad school, deterioration, and slums. As the Washington Post called the slums last year, "the burying grounds for the American Dream." And who are they burying under these grounds? US!

The Crisis is not really us. It is a system that continues a history of exploitation and degredation. We must teach our children that we are not the problem, that our behavior emanates from years of oppression, and that to move out of a crisis to the recovery room means each one of us must understand that that whore called capitalism must be taken off the streets of the world and retired. I am talking about systems not symptoms.

My brothers and sisters you must treat the negative behavioral patterns that have seeped out of this cesspool called America. You, Modern Day Witch Doctors, must bind our mental wounds while explaining this oppression that has made animals out of our men, women, and children in many urban centers, and examine our people's patterns and gather up our strengths and offer them as strengths to a corporate Black community.

The Black intelligensia must now decide in these last days of the 20th century to let the word be given to the universe. Let the words be said

PUERTO RICO: A Time Bomb

Roxana Bell Nummo Staff

The Reagan Administration has proposed devastating cuts which will affect the Puerto Rican people. Cuts such as $650 million (more than the proposed cuts of $415 million for the City of New York) which will cause the loss of 30,000 jobs, making the new motives for emigration of over half million Puerto Rican citizens to the U.S.. $300 million will be cut from the Food Stamp Program, of which over 70 percent of the people in Puerto Rico are now receiving food stamps and 90 percent meet the eligibility requirements for food stamps. The Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA) will be cut $140.6 million and $11.3 million in educationalgrants will also be cut. In Puerto Rico, 90 percent of the students who attend colleges or universities are dependent on these grants.

If all this occurs, unemployment will rise from 19 percent to 30 or 40 percent. But the Puerto Rican working class already suffers from what "unofficially" but more realistically amounts to 30 percent to 40 percent unemployment.

Under the Reagan program tax cuts are supposed to balance off the budget cuts by serving as inducements to savings and investments, thereby lowering inflation and creating more jobs. The tax cuts have been exposed as a give-away to the rich. But in Puerto Rico this scheme is a

In the March 30 Nummo News article on the El Salvador rally, it was reported that "a representative of the Western Mass. Latin American Solidarity Committee spoke on what people can do, such as writing to your congresspersons about your feelings towards the U.S. involvement in El Salvador."

Writing to congresspersons was not mentioned by the Western Mass Latin America Solidarity Committee representative at the rally. A part of what the Latin America solidarity committee does is petitioning but it is not the focus of our work. The focus is educational outreach: to expose the U.S. military and C.I.A. roles in Latin America and to encourage support for the movement throughout the continent for positive social change such as the Sandinista revolution in Nicaragua.

At the rally, we stressed the connection in countering mass media distortions.

At this time, I would like to express my support for and appreciation to the Nummo staff for providing uncontaminated news to the UMass community as well the community-at-lage. While many people complain about the commercial media, Nummo writers are a few who have done something about it.

Analysis of the Lee-Acosta Bid

As someone who had the opportunity to work with the Third World Caucus during the Presidential election, I was truly taken back, and moved by the talent, energy, and determination that exists within that organization. Not only does the Third World population benefit by the caucus' political participation, but the university community as a whole is enriched by their involvement. No group that I have worked with in two and a half years of student government can match them in their ability to work together and subordinate their personal ego to a higher cause. In the course Nelson's and Ed's campaign respect was won from both the Kocot-Mangin people and the LaVoice-Mazollo camp for the organizing skills, their ticket managed to put together as well as the class and integrity their campaign exemplified. Whimsical speculation that the Lee-Acosta ticket could muster no more than a few hundred votes or a mere 7 at best, disappeared in the closing days of the election. It became apparent to all that Lee and Acosta were a formidable ticket and that the Presidential bid was a three-way race. Their impressive performance in the debates, much of which was unfortunately edited form the video taping , helped to energize the campaign in its final hours.

Nelson and Ed solidly won the commuter vote with their strong platform on commuter issues. They won Butterfield and came within 20 votes of taking away Northeast from LaVoice and Mazolla. They finished with an impressive 22 of the vote with the universg no more than 41 . As Ed Levine pointed out in his News Analysis for the Collegian, had the campaign gone another week, Nelson and Ed could very well have won.

Why this strong showing by what was originally considered such a dark horse candidacy• If Nelsons and Ed had managed to reach only the third world community their percentage of the vote, proportionately should have been no more than3 . It should be pointed out that most of Nelson's and Ed's white support did not come from any politically active members within the SGA until the closing days of the campaign. While that support was appreciated and surely important, the majority of whites who joined in and lent a hand were those who had been previously uninvolved in politics; surprisingly they were predominantly female.

It is my sincere belief that they were attracted to the Lee - Acosta ticket not only by rhetoric, ideology, nor even platform, but rather by a personal sensitivity they felt both candidates showed for students. Their message and vision was a democratic one. They wanted more students to take part in the decision making process of government. They felt that students don't have enough control over their own lives and they wanted to change that. They let it be known that the Lee - Acosta ticket was a team everyone would be on, black and white, male and female. They won hearts as well as minds.

Only if students could come and work together as equal participants on the important issues affecting their lives would there be any positive change. Student Participation was their answer to the problem of alienation and Student control over the decisions and issues that affected their lives was their cure for the feelings of frustration and powerlessness that inevitably arise in a community such as ours when run by a top heavy heirarchy. It was their ability to communicate their desire to rise with the students and not above them that gave their broad appeal. It was their idea that student government can be an effective tool for students when it is truly run by the students themselves, that made them unique. These then are some of the reasons for their surprise showing. Ed Lee is now speaker of the S.G.A. Senate and Nelson Acosta has emerged from the campaign more respected than ever by many UMass students for the race he ran and the vision he had the courage to put forth. The work he had done for Student Government and for the 3rd World Community will not go unrecognized. ·

In closing I would just like to mention briefly the other candidates; Rich LaVoice leaves behind many fine accomplishments. Few people realize the time difficulty and dedication the SGA presidency entails. If Rich had his shortcomings, dedication was not one of them. I would also like to congratulate Larry and Kevin on their fine and solid victory and would end by adding that if the mutual respect that existed between their people and those of us who backed Lee and Acosta, continue, now that the election is over, then the student body as a whole will truly be served. Every indication is that this will be the case. With a full heart then and no regrets.

Education Aid Cuts to Have Wide Impact

by Sadanobu Ikamoto Nummo Staff

Recent budget cuts proposed by President Reagan and the OMB director David Stockman would have a wide impact. "The ones who will be hurt are primarily the poor children, the ones who need help the most" says Craig Phillips, North Carolina's Superintendant of Public Instruction.

Dr. Phillips estimates that about 2,000 of the 6,000 tutors, teacher aides and compensatory teachers, to improve the quality of the education for the poor would be severely curtailed.

Speaking on behalf of the National Educators Association, a 1.8 million member organization of teachers assigned to improve the skills of the poor and the handicapped in the states would have to be curtailed.

The former assumptions are becoming clearer and clearer. Mr. Reagan's budget cuts, despite Mr. reagan's denials, end up in hurting the disadvantaged. It is a great regression of progress made in the 60's under Kennedy and Johnson. It was through the implementation of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 that the Federal Government embarked on full-scale aid to elementary and secondary schools and students in institutions of higher education, creating the framework for the progress that is much part of the nation's education fabric today.

The first year cost of the elementary and secondary education program was about $ 1.4 billion. Expanded since then to provide aid in educating migrants and non-English speaking students, additional grants to the poor areas and several other programs, the appropriation for programs under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act for current fiscal year totaled about $ 3.6 billion. These would be severely curtailed.

Education of quality for all peoples is the only way we may attempt to put remedy to the inequity that exist in our society. It is ironic that it is often the same people who complain about illiteracy among the youth are those who support these education tax cuts. If Mr. Reagan and his financially secure colleages had to send their children to schools that would be affected by these drastic cuts, they would think twice about doing so.

Reagan's Two Dictionaries

by Gertrudis Garcia Nummo Staff

During the second week of March President Reagan was interviewed by Frank Reynold of ABC News. One of the questions asked Mr. Reagan was: "If Afghan rebels ask hus for arms, would this administration consider sending them"• Mr. Reagan's answer to this question was in the affirmative.

Mr Reagan said that those fighting the Soviet Union soldiers in Afghanistan are not rebels but instead they are freedom fighters. When I heard these words commng out of Mr. Reagan's mouth, I felt very bad (not because of my understanding of the problems in Afghanistan but instead for reasons I will present in other paragraphs of this article). Mr. Reagan also said that the propaganda campaign of the Soviet Union had succeed in making the people believe that those fighting in Afghanistan are rebels (terrorists).

In my mind I asked Mr Reagan: "How is your goverment and the media system of this country presenting the struggles going on in Central and South America• How do you describe the Nicaraguan Revolution, the nation of Cuba, those fighting against a military junta that has killed more than 30,000 Salvadoran people and at least 10 Americans in El Salvador• Are they presented as freedom fighters or as terrorist•

Apparently the Reagan administration, before taking command in the White House, ordered two types of dictionaries to be printed. One to be used with the allies and other to be used with those nations that exist and function independently of the policies of the United States.

When the Reagan administration has something to say about the Salvadoran and Nicaraguan people it uses that dictionary which describe the fighting in El Salvador and the Sandinista Revolution in Nicaragua as the work and actions of terrorists and communists.

'When the Reagan administration, using the 'US allies dictionary', describe the repressive governments of Argentina, Chile, Bolivia, Honduras and other countries in Central and South America, these are presented as "countries governed by moderate juntas and few wealthy families that are protecting them from being trapped in the claws of the communist monster".

I believe that the rhetoric of two dictionaries used by the Reagan administration is propaganda deemed to fail. These times are not the 50's of Mr. McCarthy. Today the American people, especially the youth, are not blindly accepting what the Associate Press and United Press International, in conjuction with the White House, are presenting in the mass media. Now more people know that the repression, hunger, sickness and poverty that Latin Americans suffer are powerful reasons to fight against governments that exist only to be puppets of the United States and not for the solving of their own problems

While I write this article, President Reagan is hospitalized as the result of Mr John W. Hinckley's assassination attempt on him. The world is waiting for what Mr. Reagan has to say about this experience. I think that in Mr. Hinckley's case Mr Reagan is going to talk out of his dictionaries. He is not going to call Mr Hinckley a terrorist (because of the social status of the Hinckley's family) nor he is going to call him a freedom fighter. At the same time that I disagree with Mr. Hinckley's methods of expressing his frustrations, I ask the Reagan administration to look and hear the people of this nation and those of the Third Word and help them solve their problems without using his dictionaries. The people of the world need solidarity not definitions of the methods they use to solve their problems.

Is Military Alternative for Unemployment?

by Sadanobu Ikemoto NUMMO STAFF

By 1984, it was predicted by a United States spokesman that the thrust to tie together military training and civilian education would result in military supervision of the largest school system in the world.

In an inflation ravaged economy resulting in high level of unemployment, career military service come to seem an attractive option to many young people. Increasing number of students enrolled in ROTC programs attest to this.

It was in the late 1970s that military incursions into education surfaced in secondary school levels. Scheduled to open on September 1979 was the Cincinnati, Ohio Military Academy, first military public high school in United States history.

Posed as an alternative high school at a time when the Cincinnati public school was near bankrupt, the academy was to be a partnership between the Pentagon and the local school board.

It had been in the planning for four years and gained support within the Board of Education as well as from many school administrators. The army considered it a pilot program. However it dtd not open. As people learned about it, opposition mushroomed. Peace groups, teachers, unions, church groups, women's organizations and community forces founded a coalition, kicked up a storm and thwarted the Pentagon's plans.

And there were other military-youth programs that emerged:California has also been selected by the military for pilot program involving education of disadvataged youth. Under a new agreement between the Departments of Labor and Defense, the Job Corps is going to establish a 'military component preparation' reaction. Labor Dep't expects that about 6,000 adolescents to be enrolled.

Pre-military and "pre-employment training takes the first seven weeks. Then its off to boot camps, with jobs said to be "guaranteed" when they return- unless the youth opt for military career. Service in the State Guard is mandatory.

The Oakland Chamber of Commerce has heartily endorced the Oakland Guard program for "combatting unemployment" and increasing "the personal strength of the California National Guard."

With the growingly dim economic forecast combined with call for expanded military expenditures, would the disadvantaged youth be forced to enter into the military as an only viable option• President Eisenhower warned the nation about themilitary-industrial complex.There are indication that we may have to worry about the military-educational complex.

complete fraud. Even Reagan's economists admit that because no federal taxes are paid in Puerto Rico, it will not benefit from the tax cuts.

The present cutbacks facing Puerto Rico are tied to the general economic crisis of imperialism and colonialism. These economic attacks are sure to kindle the militantstruggle of the Puerto Rican people for real independence and liberation from U.S. imperialism.

NO U.S. WAR IN EL SALVADOR

Reprinted from Workers World

By Andy Stapp

By a vote of eight-to-seven an appropriations committee of the U.S. House of Representatives voted yesterday to give Reagan the additional millions of dollars he has requested to arm, train, and advise the fascist Salvadoran army.

White House sources have let it be known that the junta there will get at least $200 million over the next year. The generals and colonels directly running that small Central American nation (with a civilian fig leaf in the person of Napolean Duarte) constitute the oldest military dictatorship in the Western hemisphere, and also one of the most repressive.

Everyday for the past year, an average of 40 people have been murdered either by the Salvadoran army or by one of its paramilitary death squads. The dominant clique are U.S. corporations like Coca-Cola, Sears Roebuck, and the rich coffee growers who control the country's main export, most of which goes to the U.S.

To protect their puppet rulers from the wrath of the super-oppressed Salvadoran people, thousands of whom are engaged in an armed insurrection against the police state regime, the U.S. government has sent not only money but everything from bazookas to Huey helicopters to the notorious "Gren Betet" Special Forces. The latter are imperialism's counter-insurgency gunmen whose SS-type murders in Viet Nam became so blatant that the commander of the entire operation there was arrested in 1969 for war crimes!

One of the seven representatives on Capitol Hill who voted against the new military aid package to El Salvador, Clarence D. Long (D-Md.), reminded the others of Viet Nam by pointing out, "We're voting on a Gulf of Tonkin resolution to legitimize United States intervention." The Gulf of Tonking resolution was a hoax rigged up by the Pentagon and President Johnson to stampede the Congress into approving a massive escalation of the Viet Nam war.

But while Reagan and Haig escalate their Salvadoran version of Viet Nam, mass anti-war sentiment is growing even faster than it did in the mid-60s. A March 11 public opinion poll conducted by the Cleveland Press found 80 percent opposed to military assistance to the Salvadoran junta. Other recent polls published by the Detroit News and Detroit Free Press revealed 82-84 percent against aiding the dictatorship.

Even more significantly, people arecoming out to protest publicly. Yesterday alone, anti-war, anti-intervention rallies, some numbering in the thousands, took place in New York, Massachusetts, Ohio, Michigan, and Illinois.

The following is a statement from Rafael Cancel Miranda, one of the Four Puerto Rican Nationalist Prisoners, in support of the May 3 action.

Let's not wait until the bombs are falling on peoples and nations to do something to stop war--let's start from right now before it's too late! Let's stop the Reaan administration, and the miliary industrial complex, both tools of the imperialists, from murdering the people of El Salvador and our own peoples. The heroic people of El Salvador are struggling for their rights, for their humanity, for their freedom from oppression and exploitation. Let's stop the Pentagon, Wall Street, and Reagan from committing murder against them.

The people of El Salvador are friends of the peoples of the United States and the people of Puerto Rico, of the peoples of all nations--let's make sure that we, as people, stop the Pentagon, Wall Street and Reagan from commiting more mass murder and genocide against the friendly but brave people of El Salvador.

If we don't do something right now, then all of us will pay a higher price later. For the sake of all peoples, let's stop the Haigs, the Reagans, the dangerous little Hitlers of today, from bringing more sorrows into our life.

For your own sake, for your children's sake, for the sake of the people of El Salvador--act now! March to the Pentagon on May 3rd--a little walk to the Pentagon on that day might help all of us from walking straight into hell later on!

Fight for jobs, fight against racism and repression and oppression at your own backyard, fight for your own rights, stop being drafted into wars of aggression--don't be tools of your own enemies because the enemies of the people of El Salvador are your own enemies too.

Long live the people of El Salvador!

Down with the enemies of all peoples, the warmongers of the Pentagon, the fascists at the White House--and their masters at Wall Street and Madison Avenue!

Freedom for El Salvador--right now!

Nicaraguan Aid Cut

§On April 1, the United States Government cut off from Nicaragua the remaining $15 million of a $75 million economic aid packet approved last year by the Carter administration.

§The action taken was the result of the fear of the U.S Government that Nicaragua was supplying El Salvador with military aid. Even though State Department officials had earlier announced that they had seen a marked decrease in military aid crossing the Nicaraguan border into El Salvador they still fear what they call political and logistical support for the leftist guerrillas.

§However, it becomes appparent that the termination of this aid is a stepped up effort to weaken and possibly overthrow the 20 month young Sandinist, Nicaraguan Government.

§Because of the important interest of the United States and its private setor certain members of the U.S. State Department have stated that they favor a policy of "first strangling" the Sandinist Government economically and then financing dissent groups.

§In light of these State Department perspectives right wing Nicaraguan exiles are waiting for the green light by U.S. Government officials to invade Nicaragua.

§The green light will be probabably given when either the effects of the U.S. "economic strangalation" has begun to take effect or when the Sandinsit military begins to show signs of becoming a stable force (currently the existing 40,000 man strong army and police is being expanded to include a 200,000 man popular militia).

§Many of these Nicaraguan dissent groups include several exiled National Guard, and other former supporters of the Somoza regime. A few dozen have been receiving military training in camps run by cuban exiles outside the city of Miami, U.S.A.. Currently these exiled "leaders" claim a 600 man "freedom force" stationed in Honduras, near the Nicaraguan border, which is waiting to be joined by "sympathizers from Guatemala and Miami.

CENSUS

Black population up

The official number of Black people in the U.S. grew 17 percent in the last decade compared with an 11 percent increase in the U.S. population as a whole, according to provisional figures released by the Census Bureau Feb. 23. The figures, based on the 1980 Census, put the official Black population at 26.4 million, or 11.7 percent of the U.S. populace.

The bureau attributed the increase to improved counting procedures in Black communities and to an actual increase in the Black birthrate. The agency said its counting of Blacks last year was a "significant improvement" over its 1970 procedures.

However, this year, as in past years, Blacks, Latinos, Asian-Americans, Native Americans and other third world people have criticized the government for undercounting these groups. They have charged that the underrrepresentation has denied them an dequate allocation of financial and other social resources.

In addition, this year's undercount will likely result in the loss of seats held by Black Congress members in industrial Northeast and Midwest cities. According to the Washington Post, at least six of the 18 members of the Congressioinal Black Caucus may lose their seats this year when congressional district boundaries are redrawn.

FDR EL SALVADOR LIBRE

LETTER FROM THE DEMOCRATIC REVOLUTIONARY FRONT OF EL SALVADOR

TO THE GOVERNMENTS OF THE WORLD

At a time when international solidarity is a determining factor in the triumph of the national liberation movements of the world, and when the poeple of many countries are fighting to achieve independence, peace, justice, and liberty, we bring you greetings in the name of the Salvadoran people and their organic and political expression, the Democratic Revolutionary Front of El Salvador (FDR).

Our people have suffered for decades the political oppression of military dictatorships which have denied them their most elemental rights as citizens. This oppression has been established on an oligarchic exploitation model and has been the cause of the hunger and misery that the majority of our people live with.

Therefore, for many years the organizations and political parties that make up the FDR have made use of all the non-violent methods available to end this situation. They have tried participating in elections and the response has been fraud and repression. They have attempted to organize unions and exercise the right to strike and the answer has been unfruitful negotiations and more repression. The attack on opposition ideas, especially in the universities and other educational institutions, has become more widespread and intensified. Finally, the religious persecution that exists was demonstrated most dramatically and bloodily by the assassination of the highest official of the Salvadoran Catholic Church, Archbishop Oscar A. Romero, precisely because he had become "the voice of those who have no voice."

In light of this situation, in which the dictatorship has closed all democratic channels for popular expression, major sectors of the people have been forming military and mass political organizations in order to fight back against the violence perpetrated by the military governments. These organizations also constitute a way of creating a power capable of overthrowing the forces of the oligarchy in order to create a new society.

The process of popular struggle has culminated in the organic unification of all the democratic and revolutionary organizations to form a broad united front in order to overthrow the dictatorship and install a new government. The Democratic Revolutionary Front (FDR) is the manifestation of this desire for unified struggle and the expression of the most deeply felt aspirations of all the Salvadoran people. All of the organizations that make up the FDR completely agree that the only viable alternative for our country is to politically and militarily transform the present power structure and implement a democratic revolutionary government.

The FDR has committed itself before the Salvadoran people and before all free people of the world to create and develop a national government that is both anti-oligarchic and anti-imperialist and whose policy is based on: the broadest pluralistic participation of the people in the management of the government, the strict respect of human rights, the right to self-determination and equal status for all nations and on the principle of non-alignment. A mixed economy which protects small and medium-sized businesses will be formed to replace the economic power of the oligarchy and new regulations will be established concerning foreign investments which will take the national interests more into account.

The current alternative, implemented by the military government with the determined aid of the reactionary forces of the U.S. government, is lacking in any social base and only manages to sustain itself through the repression of the civil population and the popular organizations. In practice, this repressive policy amounts to no less than genocide. Therefore, the "reforms" that have been decreed haven't fawered the people but, rather, have become methods of political and military control in the slaughter that is being carried out by what amounts to an occupying army. Thousands of peasants and small-town dwellers have seen the necessity to abandon their homes and flee to the cities or neighboring countries in order to save their lives in the face of the terror unleashed by the army. This has created a serious refugee problem whose dimensions continue to expand.

In the face of this extermination policy, the people have responded by augmenting their struggle through resistant actions on the part of the worker and peasant movement. The people have also responded by strengthening the popular army and its militias which carry out armed actions throughout the territory of El Salvador. These actions are aimed at being the final blows to a government that is steadily collapsing day-by-day.

The present Christian-Democratic military Junta is not only the object of the massive repudiation of the Salvadoran people, but also of other peoples of the continent and of the democratic and progressive governments of the world that have offered solidarity and recognition to the FDF. The dictatorship which oppresses our people has only been able to find support from governments of the United States, Venezuela, and Israel and military dictatorships of the continent. These governments, within the framework of an incorrect and aggressive policy of "national security", have revived elements of the cold war in order to justify their aid to the bloodiest dictatorship in Salvadoran history.

The millions in military aid that the U.S. government gives to the Junta, their open as well as covert participation through unconditional alliances, and the constant threat of direct military intervention in El Salvador, are all elements that form a policy of aggression against a small nation that is struggling for self-determination. We are sure that the intervention on the parts of the U.S., Venezuelan and Israeli governments will not succeed in destroying the democratic-revolutionary movement. It does, however, constitute a threat to the peace of the region and denies to the Salvadoran people the right to independence that the United Nations Charter recognizes as the right of all peoples.

We know that your government is humanitarian and has a policy which is respectful of human rights, against imperialist interventionism, and in favor of the people's self-determination. Therefore, in the name of the human principles consecrated by the United Nations, and in the face of the suffering and struggle of all the Salvadoran people, we ask your enlightened government to give us the following support:

1) Denounce the human rights violations that are being systematically practiced by the military forces in El Salvador and demand respect for human rights through international solidarity.

2) Inform the world's conscience of the greve problem constituted by the thousands of refugees and take international action to alleviate their suffering.

3) Condemn the military and political intervention of the U.S. government and its allies, and demand respect for national independence.

4) Condemn the present government junta for its repressive, anti-human, and anti-popular policy.

5) Recognize the FDR as the authentic expression of the Salvadoran people and as the only alternative to achieve peace and the just development of the Salvadoran society.

The Salvadoran people did not look for war, it was imposed on them.

The Salvadoran people love life and love freedom and, therefore, want to reduce the social cost of the just war that will free them.

The Salvadoran people have earned the right to forge their own destiny.

We trust in the cause of our people, which is the cause of all Central America and of all the free people and governments of the world. It deserves the broadest understanding and solidarity possible from your people and your government.

Sincerely,

Enrique Alvarez Córdova

Haig Prepares Third World 'Hit List'

Reprinted from Guardian

As the Reagan administration continued its barrage of rhetoric against "Soviet terrorism" last week, the outlines of its actual foreign policy became a little more clear.

In Latin America, Africa and the Middle East, the alleged need to counter the USSR is being cited as justification for a policy of military buildup and improved ties with reactionary regimes. As the example of El Salvador sy the privary target of Washington's militaristic policy in the third world is not the USSR but rather the indigenous national liberation movements and liberated countries in the various regions.

Last week, Secretary of State Alexander Haig told ause commitee that the Soviet Union had a "hit list" of countries it hopes to g ain control of in Central America. Simultaneously, an aide revealed that Washington had its own hit list, headed by Cuba. In testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Undersecretary of State Walter Stoessel Jr. disclosed that the U.S. had made specific contingency plans for military action against Cuba, shoulfqretext present itself.

Also on Washington's list is Angola. The administration is trying to repeal the 1976 law barring covert aid to antigovernment guerrillas in the South African-backed Unita. This is one aspect of an evkng policy of closer alignment with the racist Pretoria regime. In Latin America, the U.S. is pushing a similar policy of cementing ties with the military dictatorships of the southern co1 Haig's congressional testimony last week also showed how the U.S. hopes to advance its nominally Soviet-directed militarism in the Middle East and Southwest Asia. The secretary of State told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee March 19 that Washington would seek a "consensus of strategic concerns" among Israel, the Arab countries (including Iraq, with which the U.S. presently has no formal relations), Turkey and Pakistan. The basis for this consensus, which would somehow override Arab-Israeli differences over Palestinian national question, would presumably be the supply of U.S. weaponry to all the countries involved. A major portion of next year's $7 billion U.S. military aid budget is slated for the region.

AID TO PAKISTAN

As part of this package, the administration announced March 23 that it would offer Pakistan more than $500 million in military assistance next year. Haig has asked Congress to lift restrictions placed on military aid to Pakistan because of that country's refusal to allow inspection of its nuclear power program. A sufficient supply of conventional weapons, said Haig, would quench Pakistan's "nuclear thirst."

Like other foreign policy questions that cannot be easily forced into the bipolar Moscow v. Washington framework, the administration has tried to downplay the central importance of the Palestinian question in the Mideast. It appears to have few ideas about how to salvage the failing Camp David peace process, Haig's principal goal next month, when he will visit Egypt, Israel, Jordan and Saudi Arabia.

Concern that the Reagan administrat x singleminded focus on the USSR is too simplistic has become increasingly evident among Washington's European allies, who fear Reagan's hard-line stance in the Mideast and Southern Africa will jeopardize Western relations with key mineral-producing third world nations. Equally unsettling to the Western Europeans have been the conflicting U.S. statements regarding arms control negotiations with the Soviet Union.

Last week, while the allies were trying to reassure their increasingly restive publics that the U.S. had not abandoned arms talks, National Security Adviser Richard Allen blasted "pacifist sentiments" in Europe, while an aide described arms talks as pointless. Speaking at the Conservative itical Action Conference in Washington, Allen denounced the antinuclear weapons platform of the British Labor Party and their reemergence elsewhere of the "contemptible 'Better red than dead' slogan of a generation ago."

Allen's comments reportedly upset the State Department. But those of his staff member, Harvard professor Richard Pipes, went even further and drew an official disclaimer. Pipes told Reuters news agncy that "Soviet leaders would have to choose between peacefully changing their communist system in the direction followed by the West of going to war." He also said "nothing is left of detente" and expressed concern that West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher might succumb to Soviet pressure and demand the U.S. resume arms negotiations. His remarks thus undercut a pledge by Haig to Genscher a week earlier that Washington intended at some point to resume talks.

The controversy contradicted promises that the administration would "speak with one voice" on foreign policy, unlike the previous administration in which Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski were often at odds. In this case, however, the conflict seems less due to opposing viewpoint than to a contrast between the somewhat blunt language ued by certain White House advisers and the ambi doubletalk favored by Haig, who must deal with the allies.

Haig's ambition to control all aspects of U.S. foreign policy was dealt a further and more serious setback on March 24, when he was passed over as head of the administration's international "crisisqm." The White House announcement that Vice President George Bush would head the team was made shortly after Haig had publically complained that this "would pose another set of problems."

Terrorist Squads Train in U.S.

Reprinted from Guardian

by Ray Greenwood

Florida is well known as a haven for Latin American rightists and as a base for Cuban exile, terrorist groups.

But in the past weeks reports have surfaced which indicate that the state is becoming a training area for an assortment of terrorists and mercenaries hoping to launch attacks not just on Cuba, but also Nicaragua and El Salvador should the left take power. Others train for genral mercenary activities.

In response to the reports of numerous right-wing military training camps, Rep. David Bonior has called for a congressional investigation. "The purposes of these camps," Bonior told the House Inter-American Affairs Subcommittee, "is to provide shelter for rigorous and highly disciplined training by people with the declared purpose of conducting terrorist attacks against a foreign nation with which the U.S. is at peace.'

At the camps, former members of Nicaraguan dictator Anastasio Somoza's National Guard train openly alongside right-wing Cuban exiles. According to the Somocistas, they are preparing for a guerrilla attacks against the Sandinista government of Nicaragua.

A man wearing Somoza's National Guard insignia, who would identify himself to reporters as only "Frank" or "Ronald,tated that some 600 Somocistas were presently undergoing guerrilla training in the camps in Miami, Tampa and Okeechobee, Fla., as well as in New Jersey and QAngeles.

"Frank" also said the Somicistas have training camps in Honduras, Costa Rica, El Salvador and South American countries that he refused to name.

Jorge Gonzalez, who runs one of the guerrilla training camps outside Miami, defuthat his group has received support from the CIA, but says they would accept any help offered.

"The principal aid we've received," he been the declarations of the President. It's not weapons we need, but freedom of action."

Undersecretary of State Walter Stoessel, responding to questions about the camps from thencial Foreign Relations Committee, denied any U.S. complicity, or that the United States supports the activities. But Sen. Edward Zorinsky criticized hreagan administration's hypocrisy when he asked Stoessel, "How can the U.S. complain about Saorean training camps in Nicaragua when there are training camps in this country for Somicistas and Cubans*"

FBI officials said they were continuing an investigation into possible violations of the Federal Neutrality Act. The act makes it illegal to conspire from within the U.S. to injure or destroy the property of the government FNATION WITH WHICH THE U.S. is not at war. Until the terrrorists take steps to attack a foreign government no laws are being violated, according to FBI officials.

Meanwhile, two other incidents have highlighted Florida as a center for right-wing paramilitary intrigue. On March .3 men dressed in army fatigues and armed with automatic weapons were arrested while undergoing military training on a ranch bordering the Crystal River nuclear power plant near Tampa, Fla.

The men, described as straight-looking guys in their 20s and 30s", had reportedly answered an advertisement placed in Soldier of Fortune magazine by Joseph Franklin Camper of Dolomite, Als. Soldier of Fortune is a right wing, paramilitary magazine which has in the past recruited mercenaries to fight against the MPLA in Angola and the Patriotic Front in Zimbabwe.

Camper, identified by authorities as the leader of hroup, told the Citrus County sheriff's department that he had been training mercenaries since 1969, and that he had most recently trained commandos for Saudi Arabia. According to a sheriff's department spokesman, Camper had "military type" identificationivted in Arabic and Spanish.

AMMUNITION AND EXPLOSIVES

Camper said the group had no intention of attacking the nuclear power plant, but had made a "major tactical error" in picking the site, using a 1954 map printed before the plant was built.

And near Miami March 22, Dade County police arrested Desmond 21 /, WHO GAVE HIS ADDRESS AS "Shaw Air Force Base, South Carolina." Swanger was arrested after police found him camping illegally in the wooded area near the beach, and discovered a cache of arms near his campsite, including a handgun, several rifles, a crossbow, several chemicals whivight be used for making bombs, and a large amount of ammunition and explosives.

Under police questioning, Swanger said he was a member of the British neo-Nazi group the NationFront. He claimed to be in Miami to buy weapons for unspecified right-wing terrorist groups.

All Out To The Pentagon

by Roxana Bell NUMMO STAFF

The People's Anti-War Mobilization (PAM), a coalition of over 500 organizations and prominent individuals mobilizing in more than 60 cities and in almost every state, has called for a national march on the Pentagon for Sunday May 3. It is expected that more than 100,000 people will answer this call.

The Pentagon was selected as the site for the demonstration because it is the recipient of tens of billions of dollars that have been ripped out of the programs provide jobs, decent housing, and aid to both disadvantaged youth and senior citizens.

The Pentagon is pushing for new military adventures all over the world. The Pentagon is also calling for a new draft to provide the human fuel for such adventures. It is the Pentagon who has sent U.S. troops into El Salvador.

The march on May 3 has been endorsed by many union officials and locals across the country. This support will expand, and we are counting on you to expand even futher.

There is a feeling of unity in the air. People are uniting in these hard and oppressive times. People are seeing the threat of the power happy individuals like the Reagans and the Haigs. Lets show those power happy individuals that their mad war adventures in El Salvador will find them in between two strong fronts-one abroad and one at home.

March in solidarity with the struggle of the people in El Salvador, May 3, in Washington D.C..

HITO-HATA

FILM REVIEW

BY YAT MAN Nummo Staff

During the spring break while back in New York City, I was fortunate enough to be able to witness the first East Coast showing of "Hito Hata". "Hito Hata" is the first full length film produced by and about Asian-Americans and their experiences in this country. The title "Hito Hata" was a popular phrase for many Isseis (first generation Japanese-Americans) immigrating to the United States from Japan in search of the opportunities offered by America's "mountain of gold." In those days only the noble class people in Japan used the phrase but as America promised opportunities of wealth, the disillusioned classes began using the p hrase to unite themselves of their goal to return back to Japan and raise the banner.

The story of the film told in flashbacks style through the eyes of an elderly Issei named Oda (played by Mako), reveals the struggles Japanese Americans went through from the railroad days to the concentration camps and finally to present day Little Tokyo in California. It tells of the trials and tribulations Oda encountered as a young man caught in an alienating racist society and how he overcame his nativene- to the realization that America was not really the land of opportunities. From the technical aspect the film had very few flaws. Overall the lighting, sound and cinematography fitted accordingly to each scenes.

It was not so much the story but the characters portrayed which proved to be a big success. The multi-dimensional characters presented a realistic view of Asian-Americans. At last the Asian roles were not that of houseboys and waiters but of loving, emotional and proud human beings.

Finally here is a film that Asian-Americans are truely able to identify with.

The film "Hito Hata," the first of its kind and God forbid, not the last was made possible by the people behind Visual Communications, a free lance film agency which promotes films for and about Asian-Americans. I hope the piece of art work will act as a precedent for more good things to come. I gladly take off my hat to all those who contributed their time and money in making the film possible for viewing. "Hito Hata" is a film everyone should see for the story itself is a legacy of living history which cannot be seen in textbooks anywhere.

Notable Japanese products such as Toyota and Datsun has just overcome the stigma of traditional reputation of Japanese products being shoddy and cheap. Through it own quest for excellence, its products are being respected oversees. Last year through a week long showing of tv program, "Shogun", Japanese boom boosted to its peak in America.

It gives us Japanese great pleasure t hat a lot of Americans are showing favorable interest in Japan and her traditional, indigenous culture. However, we sometimes wonder if they are correctly informed about the culture and the realities of modern Japan.

The program is held all afternoon and it includes plenty of attractions and there should be something that should interest everyone. DO YOU THINK?

Do you think I'm content to pay tuition board and rent?

Do you think I'm true when I say I love you?

Do you think there will ever be any love when my life is filled with pain?

Do you think I'm happy when I smile?

Do you think I care for you when I say, stay awhile?

Do you think black minds can know peace when white thought are filled with war?

Do you think black adults are going to stop counting dead bodies every other week

Do you think we will ever trust each other - and stop treating each other like we have the mind of a beast?

Do you think we will ever stop disrespecting each other for the pleasure of the wrong folks?

Do you think we will ever stop loving White Folks?

Do you think we will ever know its later than we think?

And that its not time for nigger non-sense, its time to think ... about survival.

AGITATION

Some good friends of the cause we represent fear agitation. They say: "Do not agitate--do not make a noise; work." They add, "Agitation is destructive or at best negative--what is wanted is positive constructive work."

Such honest critics mistake the function of agitation. A toothache is agitation. Is a toothache a good thing? No. Is it therefore useless? No. It is supremely useful, for it tells the body of decay, dyspepsia and death. Without it the body would suffer unknowingly. It would think: All is well, when lo! danger lurks.

The same is true of the Social Body. Agitation is a necessary evil to tell of the ills of the suffering. Without it many a nation has been lulled to false security and preened itself with virtures it did not possess.

The function of this Association is to tell this nation the crying evil of race prejudice. It is a hard duty but a necessary one--a divine one. It is Pain; Pain is not good but Pain is necessary. Pain does not aggravate disease--Disease causes Pain. Agitation does not mean Aggravation--Aggravation calls for Agitation in order that Remedy may be found.

Condo conversion limited

By MARK L. CURELOP
and HANNAH HOSOM
Collegian Staff

Last night Amherst Special Town Meeting members approved an amendment to an article limiting condominium conversion, but requiring a special permit from the Amherst Planning Board, for such conversions.

Meeting member Andrew French opposed the first section of the article which would only allow condominium conversion if there was a five percent vacancy rate in the town of Amherst.

French proposed the amendment eliminating the 5 percent vacancy rate, and the rest of the article which stipulated regulations for condominium conversion.

The 5 percent vacancy rate would not include University of Massachusetts, Hampshire College or Amherst College dormitories.

"I do not feel the town has the right to tell someone what he should do with his property," French said.

Joanne Levenson of the Amherst Condominium Task Force, and proponent of the original article, said that presently there is no restriction on condominium conversion.

"Most likely someone will buy the condominium units, then rent them out," Levenson said.

Levenson also said that lower and moderate income families could not afford to rent the units, once they were bought by private owners.

"Housing should be the choice of the people," she said.

A town meeting member said that people over 65 would be at a disadvantage as they would be less likely to receive bank loans in order to secure housing.

In other business, Town Moderator William F. Field said that the meeting would end at midnight when the terms of the town meeting members expired.

Panel hears testimony on student bills

By KEVIN McGUIRE
Collegian Correspondent

BOSTON—The University of Massachusetts Energy Conservation Coordmator yesterday told a legislative committee that the state could expect little in the way of conservation efforts if all the money saved continues to go back to the state treasury.

"I can't compete (for funds and attention) within the university when all I have to offer is savings to the state," said Barry Simon of the UMass-Amherst campus at a hearing before the joint committee on Education at the State House.

"Until we can benefit from it, it's going to be very hard to move 30,000 people," said Simon.

Simon's testimony was in support of a student-sponsored bill that would allow UMass to keep all of the money it saves through conservation measures; a minimum of 50 percent of which would go for further conservation efforts.

"It is a bill that will not only save the state money, but will do so at no additional cost," said Student Government Association co-President Larry Kocot.

Committee Chairman Gerard D'Amico called Kocot's bill "a valid and viable concept."

Rep. Thomas C. Norton, chairman of the Energy Committee, said the big question was whether the Ways and Means Committee will allow the university to control the "08" account, which is the money allotted the university's utilities.

A second student-sponsored bill that would allow student representation on the University of Massachusetts Building Authority was also discussed.

Ken Moore, of the Students Center for Educational Research and Advocacy's Public Policy group, testified that it was important that students participate in building construction and repair decisions.

Other testimony stated that students have made significant contributions to their committees when they have been involved, and can be very valuable.

State Rep. James Collins, D-Amherst, vice chairman of the joint education committee, said the bills will now probably be scheduled for subcommittee consideration this Wednesday.

Concern for murders spurs march

By PAM VICKERY
Collegian Correspondent

A march to show concern over the recent killings of children in Atlanta is scheduled for 7 a.m. tomorrow. It will begin at the Amherst Town Common and proceed to the Wildwood Junior High and the senior high schools.

A group of approximately 25 Amherst area residents including elementary school children, are the organizers of this event.

"We particularly wanted to include young people since this is an issue that particularly concerns them," said Jan Winston, one of the organizers of the march.

The march was planned specifically to include Amherst school children, by taking place before they are in school and dropping them off at their schools at their normal time.

For this reason, Winston exmphasized that people should be on time or the students will be late to school.

Winston said she thought Amherst school children were very aware of the killings in Atlanta.

"There has been a lot of talk at Wildwood in particular. They have been talking about this in the classes in discussions of current events for five weeks now. This is not a totally new thing for them," Winston said.

About 90 percent of fourth, fifth and sixth graders will be participating in the march, said Marsha Bailey, a teacher at Wildwood school.

"They feel as though they are participating in something meaningful and they're caught up in the unity of it. They've even put pressures on their parents to be involved", Bailey said.

"We want to go to try to stop the murderer, to try to show our feelings. How would you feel if someone came up to you with a gun or a knife," Patrick Van Houtte, a sixth grader at Wildwood School, said.

"There's no reason to kill somebody because of their skin color," said Drew Hafaner, a fifth grader.

"I think the march will help. I think that guy should stop killing those children because they didn't do anything," said Anita Ting, a fifth grader.

"If we don't go nobody's going to care. They'll think it'll never happen here so why worry about it," said sixth grader Isabel Cernada.

Winston said the march will take place rain or shine.

Czech leader expands attack on Polish crisis

Associated Press

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia — Backed by a solemn Leonid I. Brezhnev, Czechoslovakia yesterday escalated the Soviet-bloc attack on Poland's leadership for failure to restore order in the crisis-racked country.

Gustav Husak, Czechoslovak Communist Party head, said in a three-hour speech to a Communist Party Congress that Polish leaders had admitted two months ago the country faced anarchy but still had not restored order.

"The fact that the political crisis is still continuing and intensifying fills us all the more with apprehension," declared Husak.

Brezhnev, the Soviet president and party leader, is the only foreign head of state at the congress and his surprise attendance has the Reagan administration paying close attention to the session.

In 1968 Brezhnev ordered the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact invasion of Czechoslovakia to halt efforts by Czechoslovak communists to promote "socialism with a human face." The Kremlin also enunciated the "Brezhnev Doctrine" in 1968, which claimed that the Soviets had the right to intervene in any bloc country to safeguard the communist system.

Warsaw Pact military exercises continued in and around Poland in what the U.S. defense secretary said was apparently an attempt to intimidate the Poles.

Husak equated demands by Poland's independent union Solidarity with the revolt in Hungary in 1956 and a liberalization drive in Czechoslovakia in 1968 — both crushed by the Red Army. He declared that Soviet bloc countries would "defend their interests and the socialist achievements of their people."

No-strike strategy needed to avert Soviet interference

Associated Press

WARSAW, Poland — An adviser to Solidarity counseled the independent labor union yesterday to follow a no-strike strategy in order to avoid provoking Soviet intervention here.

The adviser, lawyer Jan Olszewski, said only outside interference could block the move toward reform within the Polish Communist Party.

"The only thing that can rescue the hard-liners from the rebellion of the party's rank-and-file is intervention," he said in a statement published in a Solidarity newsletter.

Olszewski's statement came after days of heightened concern in the West over Soviet intentions toward Poland, where labor militants have led a movement away from Soviet-style communist orthodoxy. Warsaw Pact military maneuvers continued in and around Poland.

Polish Deputy Premier Mieczyslaw Rakowski, in France, was quoted as saying in an interview with the Paris newspaper Figaro that "the Soviet Union is the last country which would want to intervene in Poland."

U.S. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., on a four-nation Mideast tour, indicated he did not believe Soviet intervention was imminent, although he described the Soviet threat as increasingly ominous.

House Democrats unveil alternative budget package

WASHINGTON — House Democrats unveiled their long-awaited alternative to President Reagan's economic package yesterday, calling for a sharply smaller budget deficit in 1982, a smaller tax cut, less spending for defense and more for social programs.

It calls for overall spending cuts roughly $4 billion deeper than Reagan recommended, but does not assume enactment of the three-year, across-the-board tax cut of 30 percent that is the centerpiece of the administration's economic recovery program.

Rep. James Jones, D-Okla., chairman of the House Budget Committee, unveiling the package at a news conference, said it would produce a balanced budget in the 1983 fiscal year, a year earlier than the administration's own target.

Syria responsible for Lebanese fighting, bloodshed says Haig

AMMAN, Jordan — U.S. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. blamed Syria yesterday for the latest explosion of fighting in Lebanon and said it could have "most serious" consequences.

A senior U.S. official in the Haig party told reporters "great pressure" was building in Israel for Israeli forces to intervene on the side of the Lebanese Christians in their 6-day-old battle against the Syrian army.

"We are right on the brink, in my judgment, of a major outbreak in hostilities," said the State Department official, who asked not to be identified.

Haig flew to Amman yesterday and met with Jordan's King Hussein after a 14-hour visit to Israel.

The American secretary and Hussein met for more than two hours, 45 minutes longer than scheduled. A U.S. official said the Jordanian monarch presented his views of the Palestinian problem to Haig, and the two discussed the situation in Lebanon.

Reagan described as alert, in good spirits despite fever

WASHINGTON — President Reagan was described as alert and in good spirits. He was running a slight fever yesterday and doctors took the precaution of giving him additional antibiotics although they said there was no evidence of infection in his lung. A chest X-ray showed "modest clearing" of lung infiltrates — probably dried blood or damaged tissue — along the track of the bullet that entered his left lung in an assassination attempt a week ago.

Auto regulations relaxed to help troubled industry

WASHINGTON — Halting more than a decade of increased auto regulations, the Reagan administration said yesterday it will relax or eliminate 34 pollution and safety rules to help the troubled American auto industry.

The move will save manufacturers, who lost $4.3 billion last year, nearly $1.4 billion in capital investment over the next five years, the administration said. Auto and truck buyers would benefit by about $9.3 billion, an average of $150 per vehicle.

Space shuttle to be launched close to schedule on Friday

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Hundreds of technicians at Kennedy Space Center here and two nearly isolated astronauts in Houston were moving almost on schedule yesterday to a common, revolutionary, goal: launch of a rocket ship able to go into orbit again and again.

The space shuttle Columbia, due to be launched on Friday, stood gleaming white in the all night bath of powerful spotlights, as crews worked around the clock in a precision countdown.

By mid-afternoon yesterday, the countdown was about three hours behind schedule due to two problems: a leaky valve in a gas line and a short circuit in the shuttle engines.

Male roles discussed

By STEPHEN FREKER
Collegian Staff

Exploring sexuality should not focus mainly on the physical and biological side of the issue, but instead one must examine the social values which go into the formulation of a personal definition of sexuality, said author Don Sabo last night at Mahar Auditorium.

"Sex and sexuality are the central dimensions of life," Sabo told an audience of 100. "Somewhere along the line, to get a handle on life, you have to get a grip on sexuality—individually, or in a larger social context."

Sabo's presentation served as the keynote address of Valley Men's Week, a pilot project sponsored by the Male Awareness of Sexual Health (MASH) Team of the University of Massachusetts' Peer Sexuality Education Program which is affiliated with the University Health Services.

Sabo, an assistant professor of sociology at the State University of New York (SUNY), said that men's sex roles are decided early in their lives. Stereotypical roles are reinforced by a socially-conditioning scripting procedure in which men, from infancy to old-age, are expected to adhere to a socially determined behavioral context, said Sabo.

"Sexual scripts are rooted into social sectors," said Sabo. "The male is relegated to the dominant, economic sector and the woman to the domestic sector. These scripts define behavior. They grow out of the socio-economic sphere and the axis of sexual inequality."

Sabo, who played three years of football at SUNY at Buffalo in the mid-1960s, said he first began to delve into the area of male sexuality when he came into contact with the feminist movement.

"I don't like to use labels, but I'm probably best described as a male feminist. I could relate to the feminists and the way that we're attempting to examine their sexuality and I borrowed their approach to help sort out my own version."

Sabo, co-editor of Jock: Sports and Male Identity which is now in its second printing, spoke of the link between the institution of sport and its impact on male sexuality.

"Sport today is a microcosm of a dominant culture which often seeks to legitimize the ongoing inequality between the sexes. Women become trophies and pawns in the games men are playing against each other. The dominant, striving male emerges and he is too busy exploiting this dominance to engage in a meaningful relationship," he said.

Coalition against tuition hike plans rally

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

The newly formed Student Coalition, organized to fight tuition hikes and other threats to public higher education's affordability, yesterday announced a student rally, and outlined plans to combat the Board of Regents proposed $202 tuition increase.

The increases planned by the Regents call for approximately $200 annual increases until tuition reaches $1400 annually, said coalition member Ronald Keefe.

The state funding would meanwhile be reduced to the point where students pay 30 percent of the total cost of higher education.

Keefe said students currently bear about 24 percent of that cost, while the national average is about 25 percent.

Doug McCrae, coalition member, said a rally will be held Thursday at 12:30 p.m. on the south side of the Student Union Building to alert students to the planned increases and the darkening future of higher education in the commonwealth and the country.

McCrae said plans for the rally include music, skits, and speeches by students and faculty, although a definite program had not been set. Following the rally, a workshop will be held in Campus Center for students and coalition members to discuss the impact and methods of countering tuition and financial aid threats.

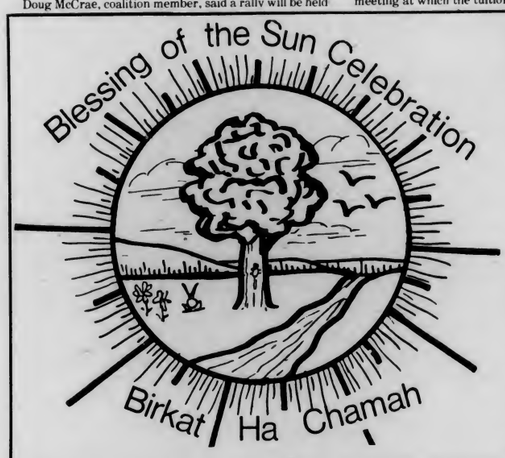
Members of the coalition will continue to sign up students at the rally for bus rides on April 14 to both Boston and Washington, D.C.

McCrae said at least two buses will go to Boston for students to stage a demonstration before the Regents meeting at which the tuition hike will be voted on. He said students have sought a chance to speak at the meeting, but have been allotted a space on the agenda following the time when the Regents vote on the increase.

In Washington students will attend the National Lobby for Education and Jobs. McCrae said members of the United States Student Association will be in Washington to speak to their local representatives about budget cuts affecting higher education.

The Coalition is comprised of students concerned with the cost of higher education, and is engaged in activities designed to ensure five students demands; full funding for public higher education, no tuition hikes, no financial aid cuts, expand affirmative action, and student representation on the Board of Regents.

McCrae summed up the goal of the coalition as making higher education accessible to any student, regardless of financial standing.



B'nai B'rith celebrates blessing of sun holiday

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts B'nai B'rith Hillel is celebrating the "blessing of the sun holiday," Birkat HaChamah, with both a traditional sunrise celebration and a program exploring solar power.

The combining of programs demonstrates religion's compatibility with the scientific, said Ron Grossman, coordinator of the celebration.

Grossman said the holiday dates back to the fourth century and is celebrated every 28 years "when the sun returns to the same position in the sky."

Grossman said the holiday this year will serve to show appreciation for the sun, and also to examine it as a non-polluting, natural resource conserving solution to our growing energy problems.

A program of alternative energy sources will begin tonight in Campus Center room 803 with two movies, "The Sun Builders," and "Energy: A Family Album," and a talk by Grossman concerning "Is there a 'Jewish' view on energy?"

A sunrise celebration will be held at 5 a.m. tomorrow by the Campus Pond, and a second service will be held at noon.

A discussion of solar energy in New England, the United States and Israel will be held tomorrow in Campus Center room 805 from 2-4 p.m. Speakers will include Connie Kruger and Debbie Katz of the Continuing Education Energy Project, and Neil Ram of the UMass civil engineering department.

Energy alternatives to oil such as wind, solar and biomass energy will be discussed tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in Campus Center rooms 803-805.

Jonathan Kessler, director of the Political Leadership Development Program of the American-Israel Public Affairs Committee in Washington, D.C., will speak Thursday night on "Mid-East Oil: Politics and Energy."

Conference to study financial aid cuts

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Correspondent

Over 20 New England colleges are expected to be represented at a spring conference reviewing federal financial aid cuts and alternative financial assistance programs at the University of Massachusetts Friday and Saturday.

The conference is co-sponsored by the Students Advocating Financial Assistance (SAFA), and the Financial Aid Office at UMass.

The conference will include several lectures as well as various workshops to discuss lobbying at the state and federal level, and organization of student groups on campuses advocating financial aid.

Joe Forte, a representative of SAFA, said that speakers would include State Rep. James Collins, Joseph Cronin, president of Massachusetts Higher Education Assistance Corporation, the organization that provides HELP loans, and Ed Apodaca and Ted Jones, financial aid directors of UMass and Amherst College.

Forte said that the objective of the conference is to "educate people as to the problems financial aid faces on the federal level."

"We are looking to form a regional group to fight (financial aid cuts) on the federal level that will support individual schools with its financial aid problems," said Forte.

Helene Leibowitz, also a member of SAFA, said that the conference would be open to any student in the Five College area, and added "the more support from students, the more aid we can lobby for."

SAFA is a registered student organization at UMass and can be reached by calling the student senate SCERA office.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Editorial

Maintaining an educated populace

This editorial seeks the answer to a hard question. But first, some familiar background.

In the United States, public higher education is intended to provide educational opportunities for people who cannot afford to attend private colleges. The logic of a nation making education available to as many of its citizens as possible rests on the idea that an educated populace makes for a stable and productive society.

Aside from common sense, history shows that a society with a large number of uneducated, unemployable and, thus, unproductive members can expect to have to feed them for the duration of their lives, or they will come burn your house down.

Federal legislation to decrease the availability of financial aid to students suggests that the Reagan administration does not appreciate this reasoning.

The Governor and legislators of Massachusetts, for their part in discounting the sanity of maintaining an educated populace, have worked diligently for years to reduce the financial accessability of higher education to larger portions of the state's citizenry.

A study by the state of Washington's Council on Post Secondary Education indicates Massachusetts has achieved stunning results from this effort. The study states Massachusetts ranks 49th in the U.S. in per capita funding of public higher education.

Also, this state offers the ninth highest undergraduate tuition costs for public higher education in the nation.

According to Governor King, the Board of Regents will increase tuition by about 30 percent on April 15. This move is in line with the 275 percent increase between academic years 1970-71 and 1980-81, during a 112 percent rise in the inflation rate.

Apparently in the spirit of inter-state rivalry, Massachusetts is not content to have only eight other states surpass in the tuition costs they put up in the face of people who would like to go to school. At least, not when the state is underranked by only one other state on the funding side.

The question, then, is if this competition persists, and all players — faculty, administrators, students and their parents — continue behaving as spectators, how long will it be before Massachusetts earns the Heisman Trophy of public higher uneducation, by giving the least support to the most expensive public educational institutions in the Union?

I might've KNOWN! Those idiots are crying for GUN CONTROL again!

A woman's life is a human life, too

Women's rights are under attack! The recent election of Ronald Reagan and his Republican Party Platform against ERA, and in support of the Human Life Amendment, makes this fact alarmingly clear. The supporters of the platform are not only anti-choice but anti-women. The "Human Life Amendment" (HLA) and the "Human Life Bill" more recently introduced to Congress, would declare the fetus a person, with a "right to life" stronger than a women's right to control her own reproduction.

Becky Lautman

Abortion rights lawyer Rhonda Copelon has called the concept "fetal supremacy," and she thinks that "it could be the most effective weapon ever designed to control women's reproduction and women's lives."

This latest bill is sponsored by Senator Jesse Helms and Representatives Henry Hyde and Roman Mazzoli. These leading "pro-life" advocates in Congress introduced the bill because they fear that at the moment they don't have enough votes to pass the "Human Life Amendment."

Both the bill and the constitutional amendment will probably be discussed in the Senate this year, when conservative Senator Orrin Hatch holds hearings on the general question of abortion before his subcommittee on the constitution.

The "fetal protection" philosophy of both proposals might open the way for the banning of certain contraceptives. "Fetal protection" might also further legitimize the exclusion of women from certain kinds of employment.

Women's rights activists are beginning to see more clearly that the Supreme Court decision in 1973 was a very limited victory since it does not say that a woman's right to control her body supercedes the "rights" of the fetus.

Declaring abortion illegal not only impinges on a woman's right to control her own body, but also limits her option to become an active member of the workforce. Who will provide childcare for all of the women who must continue working in order to support their children?

"Right to Life" proponents are not in favor of Sex Education in public schools to prevent unwanted births, nor do they support government funding for childcare.

In 1973 the Supreme Court ruled that laws preventing women from obtaining abortions (in most cases) before the first six months of pregnancy was a decision to be made between a woman and her doctor.

Over 80 members of the Congress (both House and Senate) have introduced 34 separate constitutional amendments to make abortions illegal. There are 17 different versions of these bills but they all have one thing in common, taking away a women's right to choose. There are currently two bills before Congress to re-define the word "person" in the 14th Amendment to include a fetus from the moment of conception. This would make many forms of birth control now used by women illegal; the two most widely used, the IUD and low estrogen birth control pills. More importantly, though, it would make all abortions illegal under any circumstances. Proponents of this bill believe that one life—that of the mother—cannot be favored over the other—that of the fertilized egg or fetus.

A fallacy associated with the anti-abortion movement in this country is that the majority of Americans are in agreement with it. A survey conducted in June 1978 by Clark University found that in Massachusetts 83 percent of those interviewed agreed that abortion was a private decision and should be made without government interference. 86 percent of the Protestants and 80 percent of the Catholics agreed. Other national polls show that 80 percent of the American people are pro-choice—whether or not they're personally pro-abortion. Of this definite majority, less than 1 percent are politically active.

Don't let the "Moral Minority" take away your right to birth control or your right to choose! We need your help to work on this crucial issue.

At UMass, the Committee for Equal Rights and Reproductive Freedom (CERF) can be reached at the Women's Issues Team office at room 422 in the Student Union, 545-0341. Tables are regularly set up on the Campus Center Concourse as well. Remember, "A WOMAN'S LIFE IS A HUMAN LIFE."

Give the refs a break

I have now been employed by the Intramural Department for two years. During this time I have had the opportunity to referee basketball, football and supervise other intramural events. I have met numerous people and acquired several good friends within the department. I feel that most of the officials that I have come in contact with take pride in the work they do, and do so with great enthusiasm. All in all, the sportsmanship displayed at Boyden and the fields is relatively good.

But there are always times when a few bad incidents put a sour taste in all our mouths. I ask that the intramural athletes, as a whole, recognize the professionalism portrayed by our fellow student officials. If it weren't for these dedicated few, intramurals would be obsolete.

COMING ATTRACTIONS

By STEPHEN MURPHY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

They'll notice me yet: Rita Jenrette, the former congressional wife who bared all in a recent Playboy spread, is to be starring in a proposed television drama or special. It'll rely heavily on visuals I'm sure.... Suzanne Somers has been fired from the cast of Three's Company. And no, she won't be replaced by Rita Jenrette... Two upcoming TM features sound as though they'll be ok. Omni: The World Tomorrow. It'll be in a magazine format and deal with the development of future high-technology hardware. The other show which looks alright is Private Benjamin, a series based upon the movie of the same title. hardware. The other show which looks alright it private benjamin, a series based upon the movie of the same title. Unfortunately it doesn't star Goldie Hawn. .... Walt Disney, no longer with a regular show on NBC, is negotiating with CBS for a possible series. Richard Dreyfuss will play the role of a young Albert Einstein in a film for Disney. Animation will be used to illustrate Albert's thought processes. Right.

Heaven Can Wait: Heaven's Gate, Michael (Deer Hunter) Cinimo's $40 million western epic, will be released across the country April 24. It stars Kris Kristofferson, Isabelle Huppert, John Hurt, and Christopher Walken. Its original three hours and forty minutes has been cut to a new running time of two hours and eighteen minutes.... Sometime comedian Steve Martin is starring in MGM's Pennies From Heaven, a musical.... John (The Elephant Man) Hurt will play the role of Jesus Christ in The History of the World Part I, Mel Brooks' latest project. plays the waiter in the Last Supper scene. The film also features John Cleese of Monty Python fame.

The Big Time: Robert Redford has signed to star in a Canadian movie about TV anchormen. Its' producer, Robert Cooper, says the film will be about "the Dan Rathers of the world - our gunfighters and saviors of mankind today." Where's Uncle Walter when you need him?.... Shelley Duval will star in and be associate producer of the film version of Tom Robbins' novel Even Cowgirls Get the Blues. Its set to start filming soon.... My precious, my precious: John Boorman's latest work, Excalibur, promises to be quite an exciting film It is the tale of Camelot, Merlin, King Arthur, and the Sword Within the Stone. It is supposed to be quite mythical, as Boorman explains: 'I'm trying to suggest a kind of Middle Earth, in Tolkien terms. I want it to have a primal quality, a sense that things are happening for the first time.' It sounds magical to me.

Item pricing nixed in D.C. marked on shelves instead

NEW YORK (AP) — A Washington, D.C.-area supermarket has decided to stop marking prices on cans, bottles and boxes, firing another shot in the battle between consumer groups and retailers.

The salvo came over the weekend from Giant Food Inc., which said prices would be removed from items over a period of four to eight weeks. Prices will be marked on shelves instead of on individual items.

Our fares are worth waiting for.

Do you know what a youth stand-by fare is? No? Well, it's an empty seat no one reserved at regular prices. Air New England is prepared to make those seats available to you for extraordinarily low prices if you're 21 or under. So you can fly somewhere and back on Air New England for a lot less than you ordinarily could. For example, a round-trip ticket from any of our New England cities to Boston only costs 50 bucks. (That's beans!)
Or a round-trip from cities like Cleveland to Rochester, or Burlington to New York only costs 75 bucks. (How d'ya like them apples?)
Fly stand-by with Air New England. Because if you can stand the thought of waiting a bit, you stand to save a lot of money.
Call your travel agent or us for prices and schedules.

Hawn and Gianini co-star in an Italian comic film

Film Review: Lovers and Liars
by Diane Carrier

Goldie Hawn is featured in the Italian film Lovers and Liars.

To see Lovers and Liars, an Italian-made movie boasting Goldie Hawn, is to wonder why the popular American actress traveled all the way to Italy to co-star in this mediocre film. Although Hawn has her moments of lovable nuttiness as an American visiting Italy (for a reason which is barely significant), she is not the center of the film. Rather, Italian actor Giancarlo Gianini carries the film almost exclusively, and his performance is commendable considering that he doesn't have much of a plot to work with.

Gianini portrays Guido Marducci, a married man who, when he learns that his father is dying, packs up a suitcase and an ex-mistress for the trip home to his family - only his girlfriend refuses to go. Instead he takes her roomate Anita (played by Hawn), whom he has never met and who is unaware of his marital status and his father's illness.

This is the basis for the contrived plot of a film in which almost everything is conspicuously forced, including the humor. For instance, when Guido's ex-mistress - a model - realizes that she is standing there arguing with him wearing nothing but a wide-open shirt, she covers herself with the nearest thing: a nude poster of herself.

There is no basis for the relationship between Hawn and Gianini. They rarely seem to have any motivation for their actions, outside of being self-indulgent. Hawn's character is constantly exclaiming that she wants to have fun, and Guido only wants to forget his father's death. These are the only excuses for getting these two together for a meaningless affair.

There are a few good funny scenes, however, such as a multi-car accident caused when Anita pretends to throw Guido's watch out the car window. And there are one or two well-acted touching moments. Nevertheless, the film seems to draw on endlessly at times, and just when it begins to pick up again, the movie is over, leaving you to wonder what the point of it was.

Dance workshops held

By LISA LANGONE
Collegian Staff

Ranjana Haksar began two week-long workshops on the Odissi dance style yesterday on the UMass campus. The workshops are from 12-2 p.m. for advanced and professional dancers in Cottage C dance studios, and in the Old Chapel from 7-8 p.m. for beginning and intermediate dancers. A fee of $5 is charged for each week-long workshop.

Presented by the Performing Arts Division, Haksar will perform in recital Saturday, at 8 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall, Fine Arts Center. The recital is free and open to the public.

Haksar has danced under the support of the major art organizations of India, and holds a Master's Degree in Music from Delhi University. Her performances in the Odissi dance style have been called "bewitching" by the New Delhi Statesman. Her excellent mime and pliant charm are said to be filled with color and brilliance. Other critics have called her "an absolute master," and "one of the best dancers of India...endowed with a devine gift."

Salvadoran refugee to speak on violence in that country

Tulio Mendoza Figueroa, a Salvadoran refugee seeking political asylum in the United States, will speak on the violence in El Salvador and the U.S. involvement in that country's problems tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in 102 Thompson Hall.

Mendoza was a primary school teacher in his native country. He was forced to flee when a friend was murdered and he discovered that his membership in the National Association of Salvadoran Educators and his position of leadership in the local union put him on the right wing's "death list."

Mendoza's lecture will concentrate on how people like himself who are not politically involved are victimized by the Salvadoran government. He will also speak about the distribution of wealth in El Salvador and the refugee situation that has resulted from the violence.

Author to speak on rural resistance to use of coal

Barry M. Casper will speak on "Energy Policy and Rural Americans on a Collision Course" at 8 p.m. Thursday in SBA 120. Camper co-authored Powerline: The First Battle of America's Energy War.

The theme of both the book and the speech is the contention that the national energy policy of relying on coal will be met with the same kind of violent resistance it met in rural Minnesota, said Ralph Kaplan of the University Press.

The speech is sponsored by the University's Department of Landscape Architecture and Regional Planning, the Five College Rural Seminar, the Political Science Colloquim and the UMass Press.

Candidates for honorary degrees must be men and women of great distinction. Among the factors which will be considered in the granting of honorary degrees are: (a) intellectual or other creative attainment of high order in a special field of endeavor, (b) extraordinary contribution to the University and the Commonwealth. Rally planned to show women want reproductive rights

A demonstration in support of reproductive freedom has been planned for April 11 in reaction to Governor King's recent submission of a Human Life Amendment. The rally is sponsored by the Ad Hoc Committee on Reproductive Freedom.

The rally will take place at the Springfield Civic Center where the Massachusetts Democratic Party will be holding its annual convention. The committee hopes to show the party that women are committed to reproductive freedom and to convince the state to adopt a pro-choice platform, a spokesperson said.

The Human Life Amendment states 'The paramount right to life is vested in each human being from the moment of fertilization without regard to age, health or condition of dependancy.' Committee spokespersons said the wording of this amendment threatens not only abortion rights but some forms of birth control. The I.U.D. method of birth control which prevents the implantation of a fertilized egg, may be considered illegal if the wording of the amendment is read narrowly, the spokesperson said.

Interest in sororities is on the rise

By ELIZABETH HERMANCE
Collegian Correspondent

Editor's note: In response to the series on Recognized Student Organizations printed in the Collegian last semester, the series will continue periodically this semester.

Sororities have been present on the University of Massachusetts campus for approximately 50 years, but it is only within the last five years that the Panhellenic Council, the governing body for the sororities, became a Registered Student Organization.

"Interest in sororities is on the rise," said Lesley Chambers, director of the Greek area. Reflected in that is the increasing importance of the 16 member Panhellenic Council, representing almost 360 women members of UMass sororities, totaling five percent of the student population.

"Sororities saw a peak in the fifties and sixties, but then memberships fell after that and the number of Greeks dwindled. Since the mid-seventies, however, sororities have been growing steadily again," Chambers said.

"It wasn't until about five years ago that a more organized attitude was developing towards sororities," said Erica Helfrich, past president of the Panhellenic Council.

"Since its (the council's) establishment five years ago, sororities have improved in numbers, with a 20 percent increase. Moreover, there is now greater unity and cooperation within the system, and a training program for new officers adds up to a more cohesive system for the sororities themselves," Chambers said.

Chambers also spoke of the need for "an organized body to aid in the rush program," as an important function of the Panhellenic Council.

For a sorority to survive and grow, the success of rush is an important goal, Chambers said. Rush is usually held during the first week of each semester. It is an open-house period for the student body which serves a dual purpose: for the houses it is the recruitment of new members, and for those who undergo rush, it is a chance to get a glimpse of what sorority life is like, by attending the planned meetings and talking to women in the house.

Hellfrich described sororities as being a "women's organization, not just a bunch of girls grouped together in a competitive atmosphere", she stressed this aspect of working co-operatively together.

Elections held each March determine who will serve on the Panhellenic board, Chambers said. Each house elects it own representative to discuss various relevant issues.

These issues include such topics as alcohol policies.

"The Alcohol policy for the Greek system is the same as the University policy: that is, serving to minors is illegal. Technically, fraternities and sororities are not allowed to sell alcohol because they have no liquor license. Police can enter if there is probable cause to believe liquor is being sold," Chambers said. "Police have informed the Greek system that they are going to be enforcing these rules more strictly, she said.

Among the most recent topics discussed by the Council concerns the possible expansion of the Greek system with the addition of a new sorority at UMass.

"UMass has not seen a new sorority since 1963. We are also attempting to balance out the Greek system, which at present has 14 fraternities and only eight sororities," Chambers said.

"Delta Zeta Sorority, among others, has been invited to become a member of the UMass Greek system, and if accepted, would be established this semester," Chambers said. "Most likely, the members would not live in a house to begin with, but rather operate from the dorms, using the campus center for meetings."

The new sorority would be funded by its national chapter and alumni groups, said Chambers.

King endorses fuel adjustment clause

BOSTON — A Massachusetts Senate committee heard strong views yesterday on ways to control escalating electric bills, as Gov. Edward J. King endorsed one plan criticized as a "facade of bureaucracy" by the sponsor of competing legislation.

King appeared before the Senate Ways and Means Committee to endorse legislation filed by a special task force on the state's fuel adjustment clause. He asked the Senate committee to substitute the proposal for a bill passed by the House that also seeks to control fuel adjustment charges.

Both bills would establish a fuel adjustment bureau that would review fuel surcharges that are tacked on electric bills. The surcharges pass directly to consumers the increases in the cost of oil used to generate electricity.

Steep increases in the cost of oil have hiked electric bills around the state in recent months. The state Energy Office estimates consumers could pay as much as $1.6 billion this year under the fuel adjustment clause.

In further action in the State House, SCERA consultant Evan Johnston joined in a long succession of petitioners waiting to testify on the repeal of what is commonly known as the file sub-bidding law; a law that is said by its detractors to have allowed for many of the construction problems at UMass and on other state-financed building projects.

The file sub-bidding law, operative only in Massachusetts and Connecticut, does not allow general contractors to choose their subcontrctors; they must take the lowest bidder.

Problems in cooperation and production have resulted frequently, and the debate is ongoing and is expected to heat up in the next few weeks.

Double dog day afternoon as Huskies visit UMass

By KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

There will be a hint of revenge in the air down at Lorden Field today when the University of Massachusetts baseball team takes on the Huskies of Northeastern in a doubleheader, beginning at 1 p.m.

UMass (6-7) will be looking to make up for last year's sweep at the hands of the Huskies down in Boston at Parsons Field, where NU beat the Minutemen twice by identical 3-2 scores.

More importantly for the Minutemen, who split with Maine this weekend, they'll be trying to pull their record above the .500 mark.

In Northeastern (2-4), UMass finds itself taking on a team that, until Saturday, had been having trouble at the plate. The Huskies broke out of their slump this weekend, burying a decent Fairfield team 15-8, while hitting three home runs. Leading hitters for NU include first baseman Pat Barry, junior catcher Charlie Pescarelli, and leftfielder designated hitter Jim Carr.

Northeastern head coach Tinker Connolly is expected to go with his ace Shawn Brickman in one of the two games. Brickman (0-2, 1.00 ERA) has been a hard-luck loser to Sienna and Holy Cross, allowing just one earned run in his two starts while lacking offensive support from his teammates.

UMass head coach Dick Bergquist is expected to start lefty Steve Cramer in the opener, with righthander Steve Drelick going in the second game. Cramer (1-1, 5.40) will be making his first appearance in New England after the team's spring trip to San Diego. Cramer has been bothered by a tender arm of late, but threw a bit Saturday and said he was ready.

Drelick, who has been bothered by control problems, impressed Bergquist with his composure against Maine in the 11-4 loss to the Black Bears. Drelick gave up a grand slam to Maine's Kevin Buckley in the sixth inning of that game, but came back with an impressive one-two-three inning in the seventh.

Behind the Plate -- Who would have thought that after 13 games UMass would have 14 home runs? Jim Aulenback, Wo McReddie and John Kraham are tied for the club leadership with three each... One glaring discrepancy in comparative statistics displays the biggest problem with the UMass pitching staff so far: UMass pitching has walked 77 batters, while Minutemen runners have reached base via the walk just 42 times... Centerfielder Mark Litano has already equalled his last season production of doubles. Bam-Bam pulled into second in the opener with his seventh double of the year... When Maine's Stu Lacognata held Aulenback hitless in the second game Saturday, it marked the end of an 11-game hitting streak for the catcher-leftfielder, who leads the team with a .369 batting average... UMass should hold on to their third-place ranking in the New England Coaches po \released today.

Eighth ranked Gazelles take on Dartmouth College

By RANDI J. MARCUS
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's varsity lacrosse team, second in New England behind Harvard, will host Dartmouth College today in their first home game this season on NOPE field at 3pm.

The Gazelles went to the national championship tournament last season and placed fourth and were second in 1979. UMass has won the New England Championship title the last three consecutive years.

The Gazelles, 1-1, recently ranked eighth in the nation, are facing the Big Green for the first time.

'They, (Dartmouth), move the ball well and are a big team which may have an effect on us,' coach Pam Hixon said, 'We're tiny defensively."

Hixon, third season coach, identifies junior Margie Anderson and sophomore Whitney Thayer as the strength of this season's attack.

They, (Anderson and Thayer), are good ball handlers and will get the bulk of the goals this season, Hixon predicted.

Defensively, Rita Hubner does a great job at goalie, according to Hixon, and "Kathy Hourihan, Patti Bossio and center Judy Strong are three key people".

Although the team posesses some inexperienced varsity players and some absolute beginners, Hixon said "They play well as a team which may help overcome the inexperience."

Teamwork enabled the Minutewomen to embarrass Boston University on their own field crushing the Terriers 15-3. This was practically a repeat performance of last season's 16-2 victory against BU.

UMass gave up two goals in the first half and just one in the second half, and according to Hixon, "That's really good."

The gazelles dominated the first half with goals by the Anderson and Thayer duo and expert goal tending by Hubner.

Judy Strong and co-captain Patti Bossio each scored to complement the 13 foals scored between Thayer and Anderson.

The junior varsity will open their season today immediately after the varsity game on NOPE'S upper field.

Riders finish fourth

The UMass equestrian team finished fourth out of 21 teams at the sixth annual Tufts Horse Show held at the Revere-Saugus Riding Academy in Boston Saturday.

Senior Lee Williams turned in the outstanding UMass performance of the day finishing first and second in her divisions and being named reserve High Point Rider of the day. The point riders also finished high in the standings: Kate O'Malley-first, Cindy Cloughery-second, Diane Macbeth-fourth and Vicky Fairchild-fifth in their respective divisions.

Other fine rides were given by second place finishers Laurie Usher, Mary McDonald and Karen Lynch, in third place were Ken Whelihand and Judith Willison and in the fourth place spots were Lori Palmer, Andrea Seymour and Kelly Flynn.

Oarsmen/women post wins in season openers

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Correspondent

While the women's crew team was having a fairly easy time defeating Worcester Polytechnic Institute and Amherst College on Lake Quinsigamond in Worcester, the men's team, defending division 2 national champion, turned in a good performance against Boston University and the University of New Hampshire on the Charles River in Boston this past Saturday.

Both the men's varsity and junior varsity boats defeated UNH by margins of over 10 seconds but were beaten by the BU boats.

"It wasn't a disappointing weekend since we did so well against UNH. Everybody felt they had a good race. BU is a fast division 1 school and we were able to keep right up with them," said Dave Kumlin, head coach.

In other action on the Charles, the first freshman boat was defeated by both BU and UNH, while the second boat managed a victory over UNH.

The women's races featured two UMass boats entered in the varsity four competition and an eight entered in the novice race.

The only race in the varsity fours was between the two UMass boats as they pulled away from their competition to easy wins.

The novice boat also won easily.

Coach Barbara Roche was pleased but reserved in victory.

"I feel like this is a good indication of what we'll do because we rowed well. But, we'll be facing tougher teams, so we have a lot of work to do," Roche said.

Next weekend both the men's and women's teams will face Trinity College on the Connecticut River in Hartford.

Regents to vote on tuition, hikes planned for next fall

By SAMUEL CHALFEN
Collegian Staff

The State Board of Regents will vote Tuesday on tuition increases throughout the Commonwealth's educational system, which will take effect next semester.

The tuition hikes, which will affect all 28 of the state's public universities, state colleges and community colleges, should generate $14.5 million to help offset the effects of Proposition 2½, the tax-slashing measure approved by voters in last November's election, a Board of Regents memorandum states.

Concern over the proposed hikes, which some say may force thousands out of college, has led to several student activities including planned demonstrations and a mass signature collection campaign.

A six-member student advisory committee representing students of the commonwealth's public universities, colleges and community colleges, will meet with a regents task force tomorrow to discuss the tuition hikes.

Students are urged to attend a rally at the steps of the Student Union Building tomorrow at 12:15 p.m., said Linda Geary, former speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate.

An estimated 1,000 signatures were collected by a student coalition against budget cuts, Sally Kearns, a coalition member, said.

Ronald Keefe, student advisory committee member and UMass-Amherst senior, said the tuition hikes may force 500 students out of UMass alone. Coupled with the high inflation rate, the housing situation and the cutbacks in financial aid at the federal and state level, 1,000 to 2,000 students may have to leave school, he said.

"Your stratifying out your educational structure and tying it to the economic structure," Keefe said yesterday of the overall effects.

In addition, busses will leave at 8:30 a.m. for a demonstration outside the Board of Regents meeting next Tuesday, Geary said.

The Board of Regents proposed tuition increases for the University of Massachusetts for the 1981-82 year as follows:

Undergraduate	Current semester	Fall 1981	Spring 1982
Resident	$375	$439	$513
Non-resident	$1375	$1675	$1675
Graduate
Resident	$475	$558	$652
Non-resident	$1375	$1675	$1752

Minear elected

Edith Wilkinson and University of Massachusetts history Professor Richard Minear last night emerged as winners in the Town of Amherst selectmen's race.

Wilkinson topped the field of four candidates for the two open seats with 1,647 votes followed by Minear's 1,463.

Incumbent Roger Jacque trailed with 860 votes and Betty Cramer received 830 votes.

Results for town meeting members and other races will appear tomorrow's Collegian.

Committee votes to establish $10 to $15 transit fee

By KATHLEEN HOWLEY
Collegian Staff

The Coordinating Committee of the Undergraduate Student Senate unanimously voted yesterday to charge students a yearly transit fee of $10 for on-campus students and $15 for off-campus students.

The decision was in response to the recent announcement of a $145,000 deficit in this year's Transit System budget, which represents 25 percent of their $700,000 yearly total operating budget.

The motion must be approved by the Undergraduate Student Senate, which meets tonight at 7.

"The buses are a very important part of this area," said Linda Geary, former senate speaker and chair of yesterday's committee meeting. "If the committee hadn't done something about it, next year students would have seen a 30 percent reduction in bus service," she said.

According to the motion, the $285,000 generated from the fee will be placed in a Student Senate Transit Trust Fund, which will be controlled by the student government and monitored by the senate Advisory Board.

Former student senate Treasurer Al Wallace said the transit problems were a surprise to the treasurer's office.

"We were never made aware of the seriousness of the problems with the transit system. They should have told us a long tine ago," Wallace said.

"We have to either sharply cut back services," he said, "or reorganize the way we fund it."

Wallace said plans are underway to force apartment complex owners to fund part of the transit system.

"Due to declining enrollment, the apartment situation in Amherst will not be as critical. If complex owners don't pay, we'll cut their service," Wallace said.

In other business, the committee voted to endorse the formulation of a nine member board to deal with sexual harassment cases. The board, which would include graduate and undergraduate students, faculty, employee and administrative members, would make non-binding recommendations to the vice-chancellor of student affairs.

Mediation settles conflicts without legal hassles

By JOHANNA HOSOM
Collegian Staff

Jane stayed after class one day to go over a paper with a professor. During their discussion he told her that women students who had relationships with him did better in his courses. When she refused she found that her grades dropped considerably.

Meanwhile, Bob and Rich constantly fought when they saw each other. Officials in their dorm finally threatened them with legal action.

Each of these situations is typical of those being resolved with the aid of the recently-formed Mediation Project.

The project, a free program designed to help two or more people in a conflict situation come to a satisfactory understanding, opened at the beginning of this semester. Located in Campus Center room 177 it is the brainchild of the Legal Studies Program, said Project Coordinator Eileen Stewart.

Mediation is a method of resolving disputes without resorting to formal legal settlements. Both parties must be involved voluntarily to enter mediation, Stewart said.

"A mediator is assigned to each party, matched by age, sex and race. The disputants and mediators meet together and each side tells his story," she said. "The disputants then discuss their problems individually with their mediators, who ask hypothetical questions and carry messages back and forth. They do not make any suggestions or hand down any rulings."

"When a decision is reached, the parties write up an agreement and sign it. Each disputant keeps a copy, and one is kept on file in the project office," Stewart said.

"The files are kept confidential. If the disputants seem to have solved their problem after the follow-up period, their names are taken off the agreement which is kept in our records."

Studies of mediation programs prove their effectiveness. In one study, only 69 cases out of 1375 broke down. In general, mediation is 70 to 80 percent effective, Stewart said.

Legal Studies faculty and students began to develop plans for the mediation project in the fall of 1979. The plans were then discussed with the chancellor, the dean of students and the chief judge of the local district court, as well as members of the University, she said.

A 1979 grant from the Gardnier Howland Shaw Foundation of Sturbridge and Boston helped to develop the program, and additional funding was provided by the University administration.

King proposes insurance rates for autos to be set by industry

BOSTON—With rates for this year and last still up in the air because of pending court action, Gov. Edward J. King has proposed that the insurance industry start setting its own rates for motor vehicles in April 1982.

A similar "competitive rating" plan took effect in 1977 but was quickly suspended by former Insurance Commissioner James M. Stone when rates for urban drivers skyrocketed.

The state, as it traditionally has done, now sets the rates each year. For private passenger insurance—costing Massachusetts motorists some $1.1 billion this year—the industry sought a $170 million increase for 1981 and was awarded $60 million by Insurance Commissioner Michael J. Sabbagh.

The industry appealed the decision to the state Supreme Court, where an appeal to increase the 1980 rates also still is pending. The court already ordered one increase for 1980, but the industry says that is not sufficient.

The governor's bill proposing that the industry set the rates was filed without announcement Monday. An announcement was issued by the governor's press office yesterday afternoon.

A spokesman for King said yesterday that the administration does not expect the 1977 experience repeated for several reasons:

The start-up time for the 1977 law provided only a three month transition period, but this proposal, not effective until next April, "would give motorists time to shop around and find the best buy," said spokesman Roy Lyons.

The 1977 law prohibited the industry from setting a ceiling on the insurance rates, but this bill would allow that, Lyons said. He also said the insurance commissioner could reject any company's rates if they are found to be excessive.

Fears of Soviet intervention eased with Brezhnev's speech

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia — Fears of Soviet intervention in Poland diminished significantly yesterday with Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev declaring that Poland's Communist Party could handle its own affairs and the Warsaw Pact maneuvers officially ending after three tension-filled weeks.

Walter Stoessel, undersecretary of state for political affairs and a former U.S. ambassador to the Soviet Union and Poland, said in a TV interview in Washington that Brezhnev's remarks meant the Poles "have some more time to put their house in order, according to Soviet lights."

A Western diplomat in Moscow said Brezhnev's speech and the end of the maneuvers indicated the Kremlin intended to "calm the waters." But the source, who requested anonymity, said the end of the maneuvers "doesn't close off the threat of invasion."

The Warsaw Pact carried out similar exercises in Czechoslovakia in June 1968, two months before it intervened in Prague, and the source said, "it may very well have been a pressure tactic to begin with."

The Soviets still have at least 20,000 troops stationed in Poland, and Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger told the NATO defense ministers in Bonn, West Germany, that if the Soviet Union intervened in Poland the United States would not consider future arms talks with the Kremlin.

The announcement on the end of the "Soyuz 81" maneuvers was made by the Czechoslovak news agency Ceteka, and carried by the Soviet news agency Tass and the Polish news agency PAP. It said the forces involved in the exercises in Poland and East Germany since March 18 were returning to their home bases.

Fighting in Lebanon continues despite appeals for cease-fire

BEIRUT, Lebanon—Syrian troops and Lebanese Christian militiamen expanded fighting for key highways in eastern Lebanon yesterday, ignoring international appeals for a cease-fire.

The state radio said the military hospital of Beirut received several direct rocket hits.

El Salvador's archbishop calls for end of U.S. arms shipments

CAMBRIDGE, — The Roman Catholic archbishop of San Salvador, head of the church in El Salvador, called yesterday for the end of U.S. arms shipments to that civil war-torn Central American country.

"Stop sending military aid to El Salvador," Archbishop Arturo Rivera y Damas said in a speech at Harvard University. "My position is no foreign intervention in our internal problems.

"With the same emphasis, I denounce and condemn the involvement of both Cuba and Nicaruagua. I also condemn the sending of arms to the leftists by countries of the Soviet bloc.

18-year-old pilot ran out of gas, crash-landed near Quabbin

BELCHERTOWN— An 18-year-old pilot who told police she ran out of gas was slightly injured yesterday when she crash-landed her single-engine plane in a peach orchard near the Quabbin Reservoir.

Police said the pilot, Kim Cloutman of Gloucester, was the only person aboard the plane. A spokesman at Mary Lane Hospital in Ware where Miss Cloutman was taken said her injuries appeared not to be serious, but she would be admitted for observation.

Cloutman told eyewitnesses she had taken off from Bradley Airport, in Windsor Locks, Conn., and was headed for Nashua, N.H., when she went down.

Grad senate distributes $100,000 to UM groups

By RANDI J. MARCUS
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Senate last night granted more than $100,000 to several campus groups to help continue their operations this year.

Representatives from 18 UMass organizations were allowed five minutes to state reasons for monetary requests and five minutes for answering questions from the Senators.

The entire 10 person Nummo News staff, "a weekly UMass paper that speaks for all oppressed people," according to Editor Curtis Haynes, came to support their request for a $2,000 increase to their present $2,000 budget for the 1981 fiscal year. The GSS granted the request.

Haynes said that Nummo News requires the increased funds, "Because we want to increase our paid staff to better the paper."

Haynes also said money is needed to continue to send Nummo News staffers to events pertaining to oppressed people, such as the Martin Luther King birthday celebration in Washington, D.C.

The Off-Campus Housing Office requested a $1,000 increase from the $2,500 allocated last year. Coordinator Joanne Levenson told the senate that the past four summers the office has funded children's play programs and, "It's hard to keep the staff in jobs at a set level of wages."

As of press time, no decision was available.

The Massachusetts Studies in English Organization, which was not granted money last year, requested $750 this year. The MSEO publishes essays written by UMass graduate students and faculty members in bi-annual publications at a $10 subscription rate. The group received the $750 they requested.

In addition, the Outing Club requested a $500 increase from last year's $1,000 grant.

"Inflation has hit us as much as anyone else," President Dave LaBlanc said, "We won't be able to provide canoeing trips and rentals of outdoor equipment at low rates unless our budget is expanded."

The Senate's decision was not available as of press time.

Prof. studies marijuana; seeks cure for glaucoma

By JEFF KELLY
Collegian Correspondent

Research being done by a University of Massachusetts biochemist could help develop a drug similar to marijuana that would significantly ease the discomfort of glaucoma victims.

Dr. Anthony Gawienowski, a UMass associate professor of biochemistry, is investigating the effects of marijuana's active ingredient on neural transmitters, chemicals which permit nerve endings in the eye to operate properly.

Glaucoma results when too much liquid in the eyeball causes pressure on the retina. In 1979, 178,000 new cases of interlocular pressure, which may result in glaucoma, were discovered.

Gawienowski said that research has shown that tetrahydrocanabinol (THC), marijuana's active ingredient does stimulate the neural transmitters in the eye at low levels of concentration.

"We have found that THC does have a stimulatory effect, but we don't know yet if it is beneficial," said Gawienowski.

The actual research involves extracting a small amount of calf's eye tissue, which is sent to Gawienowski in dry ice from Harvard University, and mixing it with a solution containing minute amounts of THC.

The result is then studied through the reaction of an enzyme, mono amine oxidase (MAO).

"The problem with marijuana is that it has side effects," said Gawienowski. "If we can find out exactly how it works, we can advise physicians to use a similar drug which would eliminate the euphoric effects."

Gawienowski said more women suffer from glaucoma than men, which may mean the condition is influenced by a hormone. Glaucoma affects about 1 to 2 percent of the population.

Gawienowski is conducting his research in conjunction with two Harvard professors, Dr. David Epstein and Dr. W.M. Grant, who also direct the Glaucoma Clinic at the Massachusetts Eye and Ear Infirmary.

Gawienowski's research is funded by a grant from "Fight for Sight," an organization dedicated to the prevention of blindness.

Energy center gives training to technicians and consumers

Editor's note: This story is part of a continuing series on energy issues which will appear occasionally in the paper.

By SCOTT MORITZ
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Energy Education Center (EEC), is helping people faced with the dilemma of heating or eating keep a little more food on the table.

As home heating oil prices soar each winter, EEC trains consumers in weatherization, construction, energy auditing and maintenance of energy systems.

EEC Director Susan Dalziel said the programs offered by the center are geared toward two groups, Technicians who need professional expertise, as well as builders, homeowners and residential consumers.

The center is assisting in the development of a skilled pool of energy auditors and technicians to meet the energy needs of Massachusetts and the New England region, Dalziel said.

As fuel costs soar, the job market for energy auditors has been expanding. According to a Baylor University study 7,000 auditors will be needed nationally each year.

Dalziel said the EEC has trained over 300 auditors in Massachusetts and across the country, many of whom have found employment in auditing and other energy-related fields.

Through Project SUEDE (Solar Utilization/Economic Development and Employment) the EEC has trained 13 installers to construct 29 passive solar systems on existing homes in Hampshire and Franklin counties during 1979-1980, she said.

The EEC was formerly part of the Massachusetts Cooperative Extension Service but, in December 1980 the EEC separated from the Extension Service. Dr. Miriam Williford, associate provost for Continuing Education and Public Service, said energy education services are "an important public service to the citizens of the Commonwealth."

Internships offer bit of real world

By PAUL GUEST
Collegian Correspondent

Although many students have a vague, uneasy feeling about entering the job market and the "real world," they can get a taste of both before graduation and earn up to 15 credits a semester through the University's internship program.

"A person can test what is learned in the classroom," said Carol Pinkham, assistant program coordinator at the Office of Internships.

Some major departments require internships, such as fashion marketing and hotel, restaurant and travel administration, landscape architecture, sports studies, and regional planning.

Internships are divided into three regions: eastern and western Massachusetts, and out of state. International internships are also available through Mt. Holyoke College.

To begin organizing for an internship a student can attend one of the daily introductory meetings held at the Internship Office.

A counselor will help organize a resume, a cover letter, and assist the student in choosing a faculty sponsor. The counseling staff helps on every step of the process, said Pinkham.

A staff member will also set up a meeting with the employer and will advise the student of credit options.

The university requires a 2.0 cum average, 45 credits earned towards graduation and a declared major to apply for an internship.

An intern can receive up to 15 credits toward graduation when participating in a full-time internship.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Baritone saxophonist, Hamiet Bluiett, performed this weekend in the Cape Cod Lounge. He was the first performer in the Duke Ellington Solo and Duo series.

Heath Bros. at Amherst

The Heath Brothers, a quintet steeped in the tradition of Black instrumental music (jazz or Black classical) charmed the audience at Amherst Colleges' Buckley Recital Hall on Sunday evening April 5, 1981. Led by the brother combination of Jimmy and Percy Heath (saxophone and bass respectively) and assisted by Stanley Cowell (piano), Akira Tana (drums) and Tony Purrone (guitar), the Heath Bros. performed an exquisite blend of ballads, blues, sambas, and bebop standards to a full audience, which on several occasions rewarded them with standing ovations. The Heath Bros. concert was an enormous success.

Musically, the group has strong links to the past, present and future of Black instrumental music. Bassist Percy Heath is well known for his work with the Modern Jazz Quartet, one of the pioneer groups using classical and orchestral arrangements for Black instrumental standards in a small group setting. Tenor and soprano saxophonist Jimmy Heath also has a firm place in the history and development of this music tradition.

Early in his playing career Jimmy Heath played the alto saxophone and like many of his peers, he idolized the inimitable Charlie "Yardbird" Parker. Frustrated and realizing that Bird's sound and technology would be difficult to reproduce, let alone surpass, Heath switched to the tenor saxophone, an instrument with its own legacy of profound articulators but freed from any imposing greatness like Parker.

Heath developed his own sound on the tenor and later added the soprano to his repertoire. Overcoming drug addiction and prison, Heath refined his skills and became widely respected not only as a fine musician but also as an admirable composer and teacher. He was influenced and a student of the late, great tenor saxophonist John Coltrane. Within the context of the Heath Bros. group Jimmy Heath is its main composer.

Pianist Stanley Cowell is best known for his work as a solo artist, group leader and as a stellar pianist of a mid-1960's Max Roach group. He has numerous recordings to his credit, many of them as a leader and he has worked and recorded with the likes of Marion Brown, Reggie Workman, Max Roach, Charles Tolliver and Stanley Clarke. Cowell is a pre-eminent pianist and is also widely known as a fine composer. Drummer Akira Tana and guitarist Tony Purrone are virtual newcomers to the music scene but judging from their fine play they are on their way toward making their own unique contributions to the music.

What was distinctly apparent about the Heath Bros. concert was the group's amazing versatility and its ability to produce music that appeals to the idiosyncratic tastes of a broad spectrum of music lovers. Their last album "At the Public" was nominated this year for a Grammy Award and their album "Passin' Thru" was also a musical and economic success. At their Sunday evening performance the band was "tight", laid back and strong; evoking a multitude of moods, colors and textures that warmed the audience.

Their choice of compositions and the mood they projected seemed perfect for a Sunday evening with Gingerbread Boy, A Sassy Samba (dedicated to "Sassy," Sarah Vaughn), A Time and a Place and Equipoise (a piano and guitar duo) rounding out a fine selection of music.

The Heath Bros. concert at Amherst College was undoubtedly a superb display of master musicianship and a true high point in this semester's music performances in the Pioneer Valley. If you were not there to check them out, you definitely blew!

Editor's Note: Special thanks to Michael Thomas, an Amherst College student who will be graduati and who has been responsible for most of the programming of Black instrumental and Latin music at Amherst College over the last few years.*

Breaking maternal band

BOSTON —Because she was a bad pool player, Carol Peacock began running social programs for girls, got interested in mother-daughter relationships and wrote a book about her work.

"Hand-Me-Down Dreams," to be published next month by Schocken Books, tells the stories of four mothers and daughters in a city near Boston and of Peacock's work to lead them to independence and away from welfare rolls.

The book covers about four years, 1972-1976, when Peacock worked for a private social agency in Massachusetts, but in a sense it was triggered one year earlier in New York's East Harlem.

After graduating from Cornell, Peacock, 32,studied at Columbia University for a master's degree, working one year in Brooklyn and the second year in East Harlem.

Her lack of skill at shooting pool with boys at an East Harlem settlement house was such that she was beaten by an 8- year-old. "I looked around the room," she said. "All the girls were just sitting around."

So she started working with them as a group. "They introduced me to their mothers. I realized something was going on."

She believes girls have trouble breaking away from their mothers, and "it's a step harder" for girls on welfare who generally don't have fathers, leaving mothers and daughters who "don't have anything else," but each other.

"But when you can help them separate, then you can help the daughter get to school, get a job," she said.

"What my book really tries to tell is do you separate from the person who gave you life. You love them so much, but you also hate them in a way," she said.

Miss Peacock, 32, left the program in 1977, five years after beginning it. It had grown from four teen-age girls, whom she counseled individually and, with a part-time helper, in group sessions, to 200 girls and a staff of 12

Cop suspended with pay

DANIA, Fla. — A white policeman has been suspended with pay pending an investigation into his shooting of a black teenager, but blacks in the Fort Lauderdale suburb are calling it a vacation pending a whitewash.

Ruben Rolle, 18, of nearby Hollywood, was shot in the chest Monday by police Detective Michael Schules, who was leading the youth to a police cruiser.

Police said Rolle was an armed robbery suspect trying to escape and at least four other blacks, one carrying a sawed-off rifle, were threatening to attack the detective. Two of them, one a juvenile, were arrested.

Schules, 31, was suspended with pay while the case was under investigation, but about 100 blacks who crowded into a Hollywood community center after the shooting said it amounted to a vacation for Schules and the beginning of a whitewash.

Black civic leaders organized a second rally Tuesday night at Hollywood's Modello Park.

"There will be no whitewash in this," Dania City Commissioner Chester Byrd told Monday's gathering.

Byrd, who is black, said that while the outcry focused on Schules' pay, the trouble involves a lifetime of racial tension and hate.

Charles Johnson, president of the black civic group PRIDE, said, "We're in this together. We're going to see justice is done."

The slain youth's brother, James Rolle, said at the meeting, "There ain't no hostages in Iran, they're right here. They never freed us — they just put another link in the chain."

EDITORIAL/OPINION

'I just think traditional sex roles stink'

I had interesting conversation the other day with some guy in the Blue Wall. We were just sitting there at the bar and he leaned over and tapped on my shoulder. "Nice ass on that chick over there, eh?" he said.

"I don't see any birds in here, only men and women," I replied.

He looked straight at me. "What the hell are you talking about? Are you serious, man?"

Jackson Katz

I told him that I was serious, that I referred to women as women.

"What are you, one of those pussy fem guys?" he said.

I wasn't offended, like he wanted me to be. And since I was bigger than him, I wasn't particularly worried that he'd try to pick a fight with me. I just told him that I though it was about time that we men got our acts in gear and started really rethinking traditional sex-roles and dealing with our sexism.

"I bet you're one of those male-feminist types," he said, giving me a look like he couldn't belive I was really serious.

"Call me whatever you want to," I said. "I'm a man, just like you. I even used to play football. I just think traditional sex-roles stink, and I want to do something about changing them."

"What's so bad about traditional roles?" he asked me. "Men and women are different, and that's just the way it is and has to be."

"We're different, but why does that mean we have to live our lives according to narrowly defined sex-roles? Practically no one really benefits. Have you ever thought about what women in this society must feel like?"

"What do you mean?"

"I mean how do you think women feel, being second-class citizens, always expected to be submissive, always looked at as sex objects and not people. How would you like that? Man, how would you feel if you had to worry about walking home late at night or thumbing?"

"That would suck, I guess."

"And the male stereotypical role is also pretty bad. We're always supposed to be "strong" and succeed, and always inititate sex and be the dominant ones and not express our emotions, and all kinds of other things that limit our personalities and our relationships with other men and women. Who needs all of that?"

"Yeah, but like I said, that's just the way things are."

"Why do we have to accept that? The women's movement showed us that people can fight to change traditional oppressive sex-roles. I'd say it was about time we men learned a thing or two from them and started dealing with our end of it. As a matter of fact, I think we're long overdue."

"But why would men want to change? We have it the better of the two. I like being a man."

"Hey, so do I. But there's just no way that the traditional notions of masculinity and what it means to be a man are healthy, or anywhere near as potentially rewarding as some sort of new and changing definition."

He asked me if I thought a lot of men thought like I did. I got the feeling that he really was curious.

"You really seem to believe what you're saying, and you look and sound like a regular guy."

"A lot of men are starting to think about these things, and some are starting to do something about it. It'll take time, but I'm sure that eventually most men will see how much they have to gain by confronting all this stuff."

I got up to leave. As I walked away from the bar, I handed him a leaflet for Men's Week, which is going on this week at UMass. "Here's a good example of men dealing with this stuff," I said. "You should check it out."

"Maybe I will, if I can get some of my friends to go. Thanks."

I'm dying to see if that guy shows up at one of the workshops.

Why are there so many malls?

Why are there so many malls? This is a question that many nauseated citizens have struggled with in recent years. They think it's because of the gas crisis: grouping stores together makes it possible for shoppers to waste money in a variety of ways in a single location. But there's another reason why malls are so incredibly popular: they have something for everyone.

Clif McCormick

For those with suicidal tendencies, there is a vast expanse of asphalt with virtually no recognizable pattern of traffic flow. The opportunities for risk-taking, for flirting with disaster, are many.

Ignore all stop signs (everybody else does) and see what happens. Shoot down a parking alley against the arrow, swerve to avoid an oncoming car, leap the curb, scatter the pedestrians on the sidewalk and then come to a skidding halt in the "handicapped only" parking space. Golly. The jump to super-lightspeed on the interstate is dull in comparison.

For the masochist there are unbounded opportunities for self-flagellation. Try to buy an ice cream cone at Friendly's. The Friendly's waitress has an unusual sight handicap, as you'll discover in time. Arrange to have your hair cut at one of the mall salons. Enjoy the expressions of shock and horror on the faces of the shoppers who gather outside the salon to see your head reduced to a burr or shaped to resemble a Stop and Shop pineapple.

Still interested in self-punishment? Try the daily special at the K-Mart luncheonette—solid state macaroni and cheese. And the everpresent Coca-Cola. Um, boy. Finish off the perfect wasted day by taking the free bus back to town. It won't be crowded. It's Saturday. Next joke.

Are you bent in a sadistic direction? The mall is just the place for you.

Head for a shoe store. Have the clerk measure your feet (wear you raunchiest almost-alive socks) and then ask for something three sizes too small. Insist over his protesting that you know what's best for your feet and not to worry. When he returns with the shoes, tell him you've changed your mind and would like to see something different (like the same style but three sizes too large). Do this several times while letting your Friendly's ice cream cone drip onto various parts of the floor, furniture, and shoe displays. Exhaust all the possibilities and proceed to the Wurlitzer showroom.

Having put on your most serious expression, wake up the salesman and ask him about purchasing an organ. Fabricate an outrageous story about your musical background and interests. The salesman, not having sold an organ since the mall opened, will be more than happy to listen. Make the story long. Push him to the limit. When his boredom and impatience have peaked, ask about a specific organ. Insist on playing it even though you have no more musical ability than a mature catfish. See how large a crowd you can attract. Finally, decide that you really don't like the color of the keys and leave.

You are voyeur. Fine. The mall is full of beautiful women and handsome men. Problem is, most of them can't walk, talk, or think: they're mannequins. The rest of them can only manage two out of the three. But still, there's nothing quite like a middle-aged cutie that stands five foot three and weighs 200 pounds in her lime green stretch polyester pants (the proverbial 10 pounds in the five-pound bag). A knockout. And not uncommon at malls across the country.

Perhaps you simply have a food fetish. The mall is a gourmet's paradise. Visit the bakery and buy some "fresh" cookies. Careful: the sign doesn't say when they were fresh. Try an exquisite ethnic dish like pizza or an Orange Julius. Witness the preparation of Oriental treats and come to a higher level of understanding of why there was no line. Gorge yourself on acne-producing goodies at tomorrow's prices.

You get the idea. No matter what your interests, no matter how strange your hobbies or desires, no matter how perverse your thoughts, there's something (or someone) for you at the mall.

Go out and get yourself some.

Kicking a man when he's down

On Monday, March 31, I was shocked and disgusted to hear of the attempted assassination of our President. A week later I was even more shocked when I read a letter, "Beyond the flood of pity" (Collegian, 4/6), concerning the attempted assassination of Ronald Reagan. The author, Jeffrey L. Teixeira, said in essence, that because Reagan's political beliefs were different than his own, Ronald Reagan is better dead than alive. It was stated in the letter that, "perhaps burning him at the stake is too merciful."

The reason that Mr. Teixeira gives for his wanting to burn President Reagan deeply distresses me. Teixeira feels that since Reagan is against issues like abortion he should be killed.

Think about it. A person expressing his own opinion in the form of a letter to the editor is saying that another man, with a different opinion should be killed on that basis. This type of attitude is responsible for the deaths of John Kennedy, Robert Kennedy and Martin Luther King.

Jeffrey Teixeira accused (without reference to the facts) President Reagan of being a racist war monger. Also, in the same terms he accused the Secret Service of wanting, "to slap the Collegian classified pranksters with a prison term." I do not know what inspired Teixeira to make such flagrent statements, but I can say this: I think President Reagan is worthy of our pity and not "our vigilant contempt" as Teixeira says.

Jeffrey L. Teixeira, where is your sense of dignity? I sincerely hope that you do not get a great deal of pleasure in kicking a man when he is down.

ABORTION: A 1980's revival of an age-old debate

High court decision seen as anti-abortion victory

By ANDREA ATKINS
Collegian Staff

Since the United States Supreme Court two weeks ago upheld a Utah law requiring physicians to notify the parents of minors before performing abortions, pro-choice and pro-life spokespersons have called the ruling a victory for the anti-abortion movement.

In their six to three decision, the Court stated that only notification, not parental consent, was necessary.

"Even though it's a narrow ruling," said Nancy Levin of the Massachusetts Organization for the Repeal of Abortion Law, in Boston, "it opens the way for legislators to draft similar legislation.

"It's not a victory that anti-abortionists can claim," Levin said, "but it shows us that we can't rely on the courts."

George Wilson, the Pioneer Valley director of Massachusetts Citizens for Life, agreed the ruling was narrow. But, he said, his group is "happy with the Supreme Court decision. It's just more supportive of the recently passed parental consent law in Massachusetts."

The Massachusetts law requires unmarried minors to have either the consent of their parents or a superior court judge. Although the Supreme Court has twice struck down consent laws, many say the Massachusetts statute will be constitutional because a minor has the option of getting consent outside the home.

According to Marguerite Beck-Rex, spokeswoman for the National Abortion Rights Action League (NARAL), in Washington, D.C., an attorney connected with national pro-life groups is working on model legislation to be distributed to 50 state legislatures. In view of the Court's ruling, the "door is open" for passage of such consent laws, Beck-Rex said.

The pro-life movement in Massachusetts is very strong, Wilson said. "Legislatively the state tends to be very pro-life," he said.

Supreme Court Chief Justice Warren E. Burger, in his opinion, said the ruling resulted from the Court's desire to maintain family unity. Beck-Rex of NARAL disagrees. She said the issue "has nothing to do with family unity," rather it will lead to disunity in families where minors do not want to inform their parents.

Lee Edwards, a Women's Studies professor at UMass, said the ruling would not cut back on the number of teen-aged girls getting abortions, rather, the number obtaining expensive, unsafe abortions would increase.

"Most adolescents notify their parents," Beck-Rex said. "Those who don't number about one-quarter (of all minors who get abortions)."

When does life begin; Can Congress decide?

By ANNE KIRBY
Collegian Staff

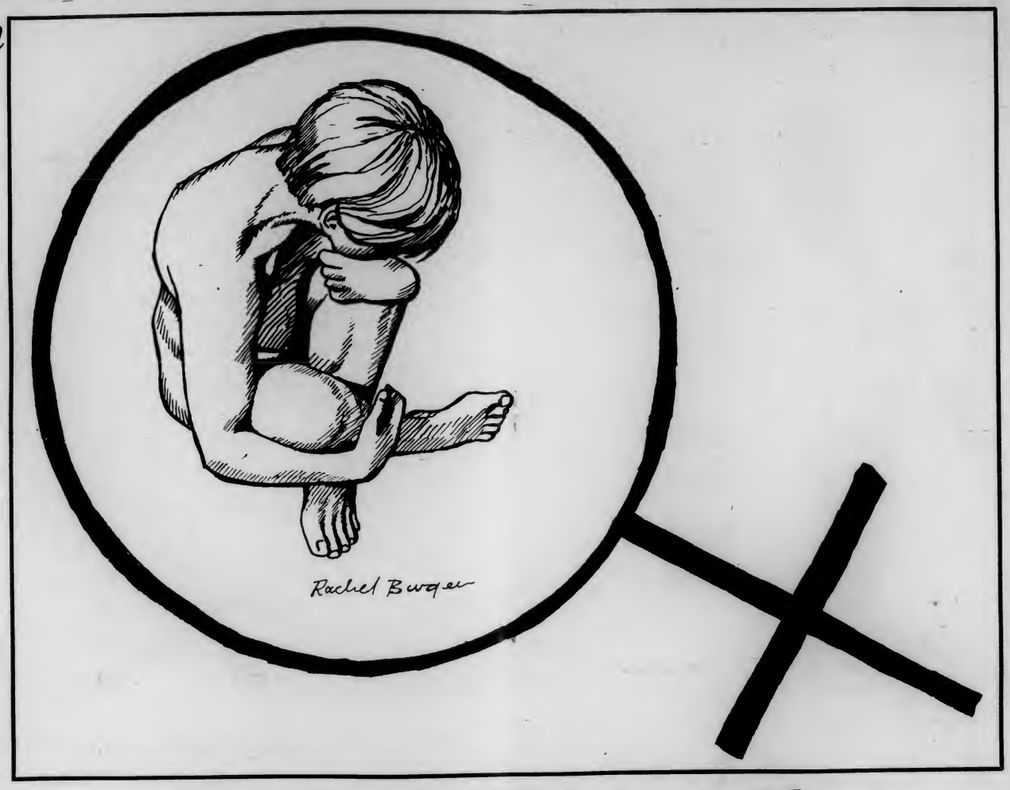
Abortion has been termed the political battle of the '80's and at its heart is defining when life begins.

In last week's issue of Time magazine, U.S. Rep. Henry Hyde, (R-Ill.) said, "Defining when life begins is the sort of question Congress is designed to answer, competent to answer, must answer." U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms, (R-N.C.) and Hyde are cosponsors of a bill known as the Human Life Statute. The bill states, "For the purpose of enforcing the obligation of the States under the 14th amendment not to deprive persons of life without due process of law, human life shall be deemed to exist from conception." A hearing on the bill is scheduled for April 23 and 24.

In this session of Congress, 27 bills on abortion have been introduced and are pending in committees. None have yet reached the floor of either House for debate.

Little by little the 1973 decision of Roe v. Wade which states that women have the constitutional right to an abortion for at least the first six months of pregnancy, is being underminded, according to Nancy Thompson of the National Organization for Women in Washington, D.C. Two weeks ago the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that individual states may require a doctor to notify parents of minors seeking abortions. This does not apply to minors that are supporting themselves of 'mature' minors. Thompson said, "They didn't define mature all that well."

In Massachusetts the right of abortion for poor women was won in a 6-1 decision by the State Supreme Judicial Court. Ellen Wade, an attorney arguing pro-choice for the Civil Liberties Union, said the decision to fund abortions for poor women was based on a woman's right to privacy. State Medicaid funds pay for poor women's pregnancies and must therefore fund abortions so women have the right to choose, Wade said.



Students oppose ruling

By LISA PEDULLA
Collegian Correspondent

About 15 University of Massachusetts students expressed their views on abortion in view of the latest Supreme Court ruling in a random telephone sample conducted Monday.

Recently the Court ruled that states may require a doctor to inform the parents of a dependent minor if their daughter seeks to obtain an abortion.

Although only half of those surveyed had prior knowledge of the ruling, most said they did not agree with it.

Sophomore Gary Smith of Dwight dormitory in Northeast residential area, said he didn't agree with the ruling and that it could, "inhibit some girls who would be afraid to tell their parents."

A few students had mixed reactions over the question. One sophomore living in Cance dormitory in Southwest, said, "Maybe they should be informed so the parents can give discipline," but he also said that each situation should be dealt with differently. Two of the women living off campus said they tended to disagree with the ruling, "unless the girl is under 15."

Adam Wlodkowski a freshman, from Dickinson in Orchard Hill Residential Area, said he is in favor of the ruling, "I think a girl's parents have a right to know." Wlodkowski also said that everyone in the family should decide.

When asked of their opinion on the overall issue of abortion, most of the students supported a woman's right to choose. While almost all of the women polled expressed their views as being pro-choice, many of the men said it depended upon the circumstances.

One woman said it should be, "up to everyone to make their own decisions." While another of Van Meter in Central residential area said, "It shouldn't be used as a form of birth control, but it should be legal."

One senior said it was a tough decision to make from a "male perspective," but that the circumstances and a number of other factors must first be taken into consideration. Although he said his view depended upon the situation, he said he considers himself to be pro-choice.

Even though a few of the students polled in this unscientific survey were against the legality of abortion, the most common view point was expressed by Smith, who said the question of abortion should be "left up to [illegible]

Amendment has two sides

The fetus has rights, pro-life forces claim

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The blaring yellow poster stood out among the hundreds of others lined up along the wall in the Campus Center. "Stop human life" was what first caught my eye but of course that wasn't it; the full statement was "Stop the 'Human Life' amendment." Basically though, the opponents of the bill will be rallying to stop one facet of life, the fetus.

At a rally in Springfield on Saturday those opposed to the bill will gather to "demonstrate in support of reproductive freedom for us all." They are simultaneously rallying to deny the rights of the most helpless beings of us all—the unborn. I think it's time opponents of the human life amendment put an end to the streak of selfishness that runs through them.

If the bill introduced by Rep. Henry Hyde passes, it seems that human life would be given its due respect.

"Me, my rights, my body" is always in the conversations of those against the bill. But what about the rights of the unborn child? The pregnant women are not the only individuals involved—there is a helpless individual inside and if this amendment is passed, it's right to life will finally be recognized and protected. When Pope John Paul II was in Washington, D.C. last year he commented that we are forgetting about that individual who cannot fight for him/herself. It is only selfishness that would cause anyone to take the life of an unborn child, selfishness because we too often put ourselves ahead of everyone else.

If the bill introduced by Henry Hyde passes, it seems that human life would be given its due respect.

The issue seems to be quite touchy, talked out and controversial. There is no bending. The fetus is an individual from the moment of conception and the scientific facts back it up. By the third week there is a beating heart, a brain and spinal cord. On the 26th day the arms and legs are beginning to form. By the third month, when abortions are still feasible, the infant has sex organs, is able to swallow, its ears are completely formed and the arms bend at the elbows and wrists.

To say that this is not a human life is selfishly denying the baby's right to life and when the "human life" amendment passes it will insure that right.

Choice: the option a woman must have

By MONICA CRONIN
Collegian Correspondent

While I applaud the fact that the supporters of the "Human Life Amendment" have strong moral convictions I do not embrace those same convictions and I deny the fact that any group has the right to inflict their morals on my life. Control over my body is the fundamental basis for control over my life; by denying me this control Right-to-Life forces, who are behind the amendment, deny me a basic human freedom.

The question of the point at which life begins is a moral one and has no universal answer. It is as indefinable as the begining of creation and necessitates an individual answer. The "Human Life Amendment" attempts to define the begining of life as the moment of fertilization. If this amendment were to become law everyone would be forced to accept this definition as a moral truth.

The supporters of the amendment assert that they do not place a greater value on the life of the woman or the fetus, but by their actions and the wording of the amendment the greater value is placed on the fetus and the rights of the woman are ignored. They proport to be "the voice of the fetus," but whether or not the fetus is a life in need of a spokesperson is an individual moral choice and no one moral theory should have any greater legal value than another theory.

The opposition to the amendment is based on the theory that women should be free to make decisions concerning their bodies and their lives. The "pro-choice" opposition does not deny anti-abortionists the right to disagree with their theories and neither does it keep them from living according to their morals.

The "pro-life" factions are willing to acknowledge a woman's choice to abort when it becomes a question of living or dying but they are not willing to acknowledge a difference between living and existing which is more often the issue when a woman chooses to abort.

Religious leaders defend women's right to choose

By KELLY BURKE
Collegian Staff

A survey of religious leaders on campus reveals Protestant and Jewish leaders defend a woman's right to choose abortion, while the Catholic leaders agreed with the official Catholic position.

Father Joseph Quigley, director of the Newman Center, said, "The official Catholic position is any kind of abortion, except therapeutic, is against natural law." However, he said, "I wouldn't want to make a sweeping statement. Each case has to be looked at individually." Adults, because they form their own conscience, are ultimately responsible for their own decisions, Quigley said. "You are the one who has to stand before God," he added.

Father Joseph Marchese of the Newman Center said, "I feel abortion is morally wrong, and yet I would not hesitate to show compassion and forgiveness that is clearly indicated in the gospel." He also said, "I believe the abortion issue has been tied to the women's issue in a way that doesn't speak to the full dimension of the abortion issue. The rights over our own body have to be seen in the context of moral order. If you believe in God, you have to believe in the life he has given as a gift."

Rabbi Saul Perlmutter of Hillel said, "I think abortion ought to remain a legal option for women. I would hate to see a constitutional amendment outlaw abortion. I think it's mixing government in an area of people's lives that it has no business in." According to Jewish law, Perlmutter said, "The mother's life takes precedent over the potential life of the as yet unborn child."

Reverend Peter Sabey, campus chaplain, said he believes abortion ought to be a legal option for women. "My position is identical with the Presbytarian and United Church of Christ, and basically the mainline Protestant position is fairly similar," Sabey said.

Reverend Paul F. Bosch of the Lutheran Campus Ministry said the principle of the Lutheran Church is, "You have to be careful of the unborn, but not at the expense of the mother of those living." Bosch said he had "grave concern about abortion as a means of birth control, or abortion after the first six months of fetal life, although, he said, "I wouldn't rule it our even then, if it were medically necessary."

Quigley said, "From all that I've read I believe that excesses in license are frowned upon today...If abortion is licensed there is a breakdown in the family." He added, "I think people are afraid of a license that will be detrimental to family life."

Concerning federally funded abortions, Quigley said, "If you're going to respect people making their own decisions, it seems to me you have to have adequate resources for them."

Perlmutter said, "I would hope the government would help provide for abortions if they are sought," Bosch said, "it seems prejudicial against the poor not to allow federally funded abortions. But the poor are not a very popular group these days; they don't have many advocates."

Bosch also said one of the consequences of the lack of federal funding for abortions would be death to the mother, because, "People will find ways to have abortions."

Perlmutter said, "I don't agree with the law that requires parental permission for a minor to obtain an abortion...In the best of worlds, I would hope that they could talk to their parents...but I would hate to see a child suffer from the parent's not giving permission." Bosch said such a law "seems to be a repressive law. I would be inclined to take the risk of erring on the side of allowing people, including minors, a good measure of freedom, than the risks of denying them that freedom, including the freedom to choose abortion. When you begin to deny people freedom, you deny them humanness," he said.

Marchese said he favors a law that requires parental permission for minors seeking to obtain an abortion, because they "need parental support."

Experts fear law's effect

By KATIE VON FLUE
Collegian Staff

An estimated 35 percent of teenagers in the western Massachusetts area who have abortions currently choose not to inform their parents, according to JoAnne Bach, supervisor at Hampden Gynecological Associates in Springfield.

These teenagers are the subject of a new law in Massachusetts which requires minors to have the consent of their parents or a superior court judge before obtaining an abortion.

"Rather than informing their parents or a judge to gain consent, I fear teenagers will carry unwanted pregnancies, obtain illegal abortions or self-abort," Bach said.

According to research by the Alan Guttmacher Institute, teenagers who account for 18 percent of sexually active women, have 46 percent of illegitimate births and 31 percent of abortions. It is predicted that 40 percent of 14 year-old girls will become pregnant by their 20th birthday.

Medically, it is safer for a teenager to have an abortion than to carry a pregnancy to full term, according to Diane Dwashek, supervisor of the Charles Circle Clinic in Boston. About 38 percent of pregnant teenage clientele at the Boston Clinic have abortions.

"Teenage pregnancies pose health risks both to the mother and to any child she bears," Dwashek said, "Problems of premature delivery, possible birth defects, fetal development and appropriate prenatal care are much greater among adolesecent mothers."

Another aspect of the U.S. Supreme court ruling says parents are in a position to provide information which a physician may use for his/her medical decision. In response, Dr. Kauff, medical director at Amherst Medical Associates said, "For abortions, or any surgery, the more a doctor knows about a patient's medical history, the better qualified he/she is to make a decision."

Other members of Amherst Medical Associates contacted refused to comment on the law.

Concerning a possible increase in teenage birth control as a result of the law, Bach said, "I don't think it will make a difference because most teenagers assume they won't get pregnant."

Cretones out for the bucks

The Cretones
Snap! Snap! (Planet)

There are two kinds of music. Artistic music is primarily for listening to. You can pay attention to it without getting bored. It has depth and value, and it's interesting.

Then, there is functional music. This is the stuff you hear in your car, at bars, in your dentist's office, in the Hampshire Mall and at work. This is also the kind which sells records and makes money.

The Cretones are one of the bands trying to make money for Planet Records. Their new record Snap! Snap! is functional, new wave-ish, sedative and safe enough for the entire family.

Once upon a time, a record company rejected a Captain Beefheart tape because an executive said "It's not safe for my daughter." Well, Mr. Record Company Executive, check this out:

You heard it from your friends
And it's really true
I'm not gonna get over you
Don't pull away
Don't withdraw your hand
I just want to understand

Now that's safe for your daughter.

I thought part of the new wave involved expansion, variety and diversification of ideas. I thought the new wave was going to make music interesting again. But the Cretones, along with the Records, the Kings, the (American, not English) Beat, and a host of others are trying to prove me wrong. There's nothing to grab your ear and nothing to make you sit up and take notice. It's all the same pabulum we've been force-fed since kindergarten.

These days, if a band is offered a lot of money to play a certain type of music, chances are they will. That used to be called "selling out." Now it's called "making a living."

I hope the Cretones are getting by on their wages.

This record, from the music to the lettering used in printing the lyrics, was designed to cash in on The Cars' fans. But The Cars gave us something we didn't have in 1978. I wish record companies would promote more bands that give us things we don't have in 1981.

Do you want to find out why a lot of people are excited about new wave music? Listen to Talking Heads, Elvis Costello, XTC, Devo, Clash, Specials, Buzzcocks, B-52's, or any other manufacturer of artistic new wave.

Want to find out how the record industry is trying to kill the new wave movement? Listen to the Cretones.

LEARN WILDERNESS
In the rugged mountains of Wyoming and Washington, NOLS is teaching the essential skills of backcountry living.
On the Alaskan artic tundra and the grasslands of Kenya, East Africa, NOLS students are learning the challenges of enjoying and preserving the wild lands of the earth.
For fifteen years THE NATIONAL OUTDOOR LEADERSHIP SCHOOL has trained wilderness leaders for most of the major outdoor programs in this country. Today, the unique non-profit educational center offers over 30 different backcountry courses which range in length from 2 weeks to 3½ months.

ATTENTION TO DETAIL

At Sound & Music we understand the value of thoroughness.
For us it means that we pre-test every system or component we sell. Cartridges are precisely aligned. Tape decks are calibrated for a specific tape. Tuners get tuned and woofers get woofed.
It also means that we think and speak about stereo components in a way that is somewhat unique. There is an honest effort to separate fact from opinion. Subjective tests are repeated under a variety of conditions and, where possible, backed-up by objective measurements. When we don't know we tell you "we don't know."
All this means we may take a little more time putting your system together, but the results will be thoroughly musical.

"I golfed it," McReddie said of his second homer. "I had a feeling they'd be going low with it (the pitch), so I went after it." For McReddie, who is in a definite power groove, it gave him the team leadership in the tater department. McReddie's last three hits have been home runs. Wo.

UMass closed within two in that same fourth inning after Dean Bennett (3-for-4, 2RBI) singled in designated hitter Tim Foster, who had reached on a walk.

Aulenback made it 5-4 when he led off the fifth with his fourth home run of the year, a line drive to dead center that missed the flag pole by a yard. After a strikeout and a walk to Kraham, exit O'Rourke. The famous George Thomas lasted all of one batter, DH Kelly McDonald, whom he walked. Kraham scored on a Keith Lovellette single, tying the game, while McDonald came in with the go-ahead run on another Dean Bennett single. Bonanno's third hit of the afternoon, a single to right, brought in Barry Bennett for a 7-5 lead after five.

UMass added three unearned runs in the sixth, as McReddie walked, McDonald doubled, and both came in when NU shortstop Gene Doucette threw away a groundball by the speedy Joe Larkin. Larkin came in with the tenth and final run when Barry Bennett laced a double to leftcenter.

NU got an unearned run off Presnal in the seventh, but it was academic.

"What really pleased me is that it (the sweep) was a total team win," said UMass head coach Dick Bergquist, whose team is now 3-1 in New England play. "We finally got some consistent pitching and we had good hitting, as usual."

And, for the third time in four games, UMass had come back for a victory.

"It's true," Tony Presnal was saying, some time after the sweep. "Dino (Bennett) was saying it just today. We're like the Cardiac Kids."

In the top of the seventh inning, lead-off batter for Keene State, Cathy Iannaconne tripled to rightfield. UMass rightfielder Mangini apparently misjudged the ball giving Keene another scoring opportunity. However, the next three batters all grounded out, ending the scoring threat and securing the shut-out.

Losing pitcher Pam Vallee allowed two walks, and eight hits. O'Connell struck-out three batters while walking two.

Mittwomen first baseman, Fran Troy, played for the first time since suffering a broken nose in a pre-season game. "Fran is still a little slow reacting," Marasco said.

"This victory gave us a little confidence," Marasco added. The squad's next game is a double header tomorrow at Rhode Island.

McReddie blasts two, Mittmen take sweep

First baseman Warren McReddie blasted his fourth and fifth homeruns of the season as UMass swept a double header from Northeastern University yesterday.

By KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

Every once in a while, it happens. Everything flows just right. You get pitching, you get hitting. You get pitching, you get power. And, comebacks—you come from behind.

Yesterday, everything flowed just right for the University of Massachusetts baseball team. They got pitching from Steve Cramer and Tony Presnal, 18 team hits, and all the power they needed from Warren McReddie and Jim Aulenback, en route to two comeback wins in a doubleheader sweep over Northeastern yesterday at Lorden Field.

UMass (8-7) took the opener 4-2 behind Cramer's three-hit performance, then blew open the nightcap 10-6, belting out 12 hits as Presnal turned in 4.1 innings of fine relief.

First baseman McReddie iced the opener with his first of two home runs, then added another in the second game, as did Aulenback, to boost the Minutemen over the .500 mark for the first time this season.

The story of the first game was simply Steve "Murray" Cramer. The junior lefthander was in control all the way, setting Huskie batters up with a neat change, then popping them up and grounding them out with fastballs. Cramer struck out seven, including four of the last five batters he faced, despite the fact he's been bothered by arm trouble of late.

"I wasn't sure how my arm would be today," said Cramer, who raised his mark to 2-1. "I was a little hesitant at first, worrying about the arm, but after the third inning, I said the hell with it and just threw the ball."

After that third inning, Cramer gave up just one hit and didn't allow a Huskie runner past second base, twice picking off runners to get himself out of jams.

Cramer's lone mistake, in fact, gave NU a 2-0 lead in the third when Huskie starter Bill O'Leary jumped on an 0-2 pitch and drove it over the left field fence with second baseman Steve Veronessi on board.

O'Leary, a freshman who last year threw three no-hitters for Boston Latin, walked in two runs in the UMass half of the fourth to tie the game at 2-2.

UMass took the lead the following inning when, with one out, Vin Bonanno tripled to right, then scored on a perfectly executed suicide squeeze bunt laid down by centerfielder Mark Litano. McReddie kissed an O'Leary fastball goodbye in the sixth, and Cramer retired the last six NU batters in order for the 4-2 final.

The second game saw the Huskies jump out to a 5-0 lead before a now-patented UMass comeback ensured the sweep. NU got to UMass starter Steve Drelick for single runs in the first two innings, one of them on a Jim Carr home run to left, and threw more in the third before UMass head coach Dick Bergquist went to the bullpen.

Enter Tony Presnal.

The freshman from Chicopee picked up his second win in three games, pitching 4.1 innings of two-hit baseball, at one point retiring nine consecutive batters.

"I didn't feel as good today as I did Saturday," said Presnal, who picked up his first varsity win this weekend against Maine. "My curveball was getting me behind batters, so (catcher) Johnnie Kraham gave me a 90 percent fastball (signs) and I just threw them."

Presnal (2-1) threw them well enough to throw 3.1 innings of hitless pitching during his relief stint. And, while Presnal was tossing zeroes, his teammates were busying themselves with the total disembowlment of four Northeastern pitchers.

UMass couldn't touch Huskie starter Brian O'Rourke over the first three innings, but then in the fourth it happened. Aulenback reached on an error, then came home when McReddie tried to hit a cow being walked by a Stockbridge student out beyond the right field fence. McReddie missed the cow, but his towering home run, second of the doubleheader, fifth of the year, made it 5-2.

Gazelles romp

By RANDI J. MARCUS
Collegian Staff

Despite a relatively choppy first period, the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team came alive and surprised Dartmouth College with a 19-4 killing yesterday at NOPE upper field.

Whitney Thayer scored twice in the first few minutes but Dartmouth came back with three quick goals. "I was a little worried at first," Coach Pam Hixon admitted, "The team was tense about their first home game."

UMass' pass and go system started out ineffectively with the Big Green defense and goalie playing heads up, but the Minutewomen were persistent and started scoring one after another.

Junior attacker Sue Caples threw in three consecutive goals, thanks to great steals by co-captain Patti Bossio on defense, who's running speed up and down the field was an asset.

Goalie Rita Hubner displayed expertise holding the Big Green to just one goal in the second half. "Rita kept us in the game, especially in the first half," Hixon said. "If not for her fantastic saves in the first half, I doubt we would have come out ahead."

The Gazelles posessed the ball for the majority of the last 35 minutes, refusing to slack off as Thayer tossed in three more goals and Lynn Herbert and Margie Anderson scored three each as well.

The game began to look like a regular UMass practice with the Gazelles working plays that proved to be uncontested by the hurting Dartmouth team including their goalie who's existence was unrecognised by the controlling UMass team.

"It was a good scoring game and I'm happy," Hixon said. The Gazelles will host The Chiefs at Springfield College tomorrow at NOPE's upper field at 3 p.m.

Mittwomen win, down Keene St.

By SHARON PANNOZZO
Collegian Staff

Rebounding from a surprising opening season loss to the University of Lowell, the University of Massachusetts softball team trounced Keene State 4-0. The Mittwomen evened their record to 1-1, while Keene State dropped to 0-3.

"I feel that this is the start of the season," winning pitcher Kathy O'Connell said. "We were a little tentative today because of our loss to Lowell, but we came together as a team, and we won."

UMass coach Elaine Marasco was pleased with her team's performance. She praised pitcher O'Connell, who shut out the Owls and allowed only 5 hits.

"We looked a little sleey in the infield," Marasco said. "We haven't had outdoor infield practice since Friday." Because of the recent cold weather the squad has been forced to practice inside.

In the first inning the Mittwomen scored three runs. Lead-off batter Allyson Roiux walked to start things off. Catcher Jacqueline Gaw bunted safely, and centerfielder Brenda Simmons singled bringing Rioux home. Christine Coughlin then singled to leftfield, scoring Gaw. Coughlin came home on designated hitter, Karen Poirer's, single up the middle.

The owls threatened to score in the fifth inning, but cool-headed O'Connel struck out first baseman Kim Miller with bases loaded and only one out.

"Our bats really started talking today," Marasco said.

UMass rightfielder Maddie Mangini hit a deep triple to left field in the sixth inning. Mary Ann Lombardi's fly ball to centerfield allowed Mangini to tag-up and come home giving the Mittwomen a 4-0 victory and their first win of the season.

Attackman Skip Vosburgh and the rest of the UMass lacrosse team will host Hobart University this afternoon at 3:00.

First ranked Hobart at UM

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

In what head coach Dick Garber calls "the start of four critical games in seven days," the seventh ranked University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team will host first ranked Hobart (division 3) this afternoon at 3 at Boyden field. By this time next week, Garber's squad will have, in addition to Hobart, faced Rutgers (eleventh ranked), Boston College (fifth in New England), and Brown in a game at Providence, RI, that ends UMass' five game home stint.

"They're a very good team," Garber said. "While a division 3 school, they play a division 1 schedule. They beat Cornell 8-6 on Saturday. They're the same caliber."

The critical week begins with today's opponent—Hobart, who, according to Garber, will be very tough.

Besides Cornell, Hobart, which sports a 5-0 record, has posted wins over Middlebury (18-8) and Brown (outshot Brown 60-35).

"They play an aggressive style of lacrosse typical in upstate New York," Garber said. "And their first midfield is as strong as any in the country."

Hobart will put their aggressiveness against a quick, fast-break UMass offense that includes leading scorer Jim Weller, a junior attackman who has tallied eight goals and five assists in two games. Skip Vosburg, a midfielder follows with four goals and five assists so far this season.

After wins over Cornell and UConn, the Gorillas have moved up considerably in the National Coaches Poll from the twelfth spot to seventh. "It's always nice to move up there," Garber said. "We have the opportunity to keep moving."

Wins over Hobart, Rutgers and Brown could move the Gorillas into the top five.

ALL AGES — Children and adults marched early yesterday morning in protest of the Atlanta murders.

Kids and adults show concern for Atlanta

By DEBORAH ASBRAND
Collegian Staff

More than 700 Amherst schoolchildren, parents and area residents took to the streets early yesterday morning in a show of concern for the recent unsolved murders of 22 children in Atlanta.

Carrying signs that read "Stop the Atlanta Killings," "Atlanta We Care," and "All Children Should be Able to Walk the Streets Freely," participants in the march formed nearly a half-mile long procession down North Pleasant Street and up Triangle Street to the Wildwood Elementary School.

"Every morning I get to school and our teacher lets us know if another person has been killed, and we...have a moment of silence for them."
—Thembi James, age 10

Organizers of the march planned the route and the 7 a.m. starting time specifically so that children could take part.

Many children wore green ribbons pinned to their coats and carried hand-written signs.

"You can't go out anymore without being afraid of being killed," said 11-year-old Isabel Cermada, a sixth grader at Wildwood Elementary School carrying a sign that read "Stop the Killings in Atlanta."

Many children said they had been talking about the unsolved murders, the victims of which have all been black children between the ages of 9-15, in their classes at school.

"Every morning I get to school and our teacher lets us know if one more person has been killed, and we talk about it and have a moment of silence for them," said fifth-grader Thembi James, 10.

The march was planned by People Concerned for Those in Atlanta, an ad hoc group of community residents representing 25 organizations.

"We are marching to area schools because these crimes particularly affect young people. We hope that students and teachers marching with us will bring the issue of Atlanta into their classrooms after the march," said a statement issued by the group.

Lisa Thompson, 21, a University of Massachusetts senior and a member of the organizing committee, said the children had expressed concern and fears about the murders and needed to be part of the march.

"They're feeling scared and they're angry as well about the murders. They want other kids to know about their fears. They don't want to be isolated," she said.

David Robinson, 17, a senior at Amherst-Pelham Regional High School, delivered a speech he had written himself to the crowd as it paused outside the high school.

"Today's march is in support of all children's right to live," said Robinson, attending school in Amherst through the A Better Chance (ABC) program. "In Atlanta, the United States and the world these atrocities will not be accepted any longer. It is our hope that this demonstration will amplify individuals' respect for life."

UMass members voted to office in town elections

By MARK L. CURELOP
Collegian Staff

Two University of Massachusetts students and two heads of residence were elected Amherst Town Meeting members and a UMass history professor was elected to the Amherst Board of Selectmen in Tuesday's Town Election.

Ken Moore and Mark Kushinsky of Precinct 3 received 52 and 44 votes respectively. Anne Bolger, a head of residence in Kennedy Tower, and Margaret Carson, head of residence in John Quincy Tower, both of Precinct 4, tallied 84 and 79 respectively.

UMass history Professor Richard Minear received 1,463 votes and Edith L. Wilkinson received 1,647 votes, both defeating incumbant Roger C. Jacque who received 860 votes and Elizabeth Cramer with 830 votes.

The only question on the ballot was passed 574 to 148.

Town officials who are appointed or elected will now be able to receive up to $1 million for compensation if they are sued in the line of their duties.

A spokesperson for the Town Clerk Office said there was an 18 percent voter turnout. Of the 14,507 registered voters in Amherst, 2,650 went to the polls.

UMass Dean of Students William F. Field was re-elected as Town Moderator in an uncontested race. Field received 1,693 votes.

Former UMass student Jon Hite was elected to the five year term of the Amherst Housing Authority and Joan Ross Logan was elected to the one year term. Both ran uncontested.

Auto theft down slightly; lighting, phones credited

By CARLA LESH
Collegian Staff

Automobile theft, long a problem at the University of Massachusetts campus, decreased by 14 percent from the 1979-1980 to the 1980-1981 academic years, according to figures compiled by the Department of Public Safety.

Thirty-three automobiles have been reported stolen so far in the 1980-81 school year as compared to the 40 reported stolen the year before. Of these cars, 33 were recovered in 1979-80 and 13 have been recovered so far this year. Lawrence G. Holmes, assistant director of administrative services, said that UMass would not have records of cars recovered by police off campus.

Holmes credits this decrease in thefts in part to the lights recently installed in lot 44 near the Sylvan Residential Area and lot 21 near the Southwest Residential Area. In addition, the recent installation of the five emergency telephones in lot 44, lot 21, on Thatcher Way, in front of Memorial Hall and at the John F. Kennedy tower in the Southwest Residential Area have also helped.

"The most effective preventive measures are when the public reports suspicious incidents and when victims report their stolen vehicles to police," Holmes said.

"This department places a high priority on crime prevention; we work with the community to prevent crime. We see prevention as helping people help themselves," Holmes said.

According to department statistics, a higher percentage of cars are reported stolen from 4-6 p.m. and 9-11 p.m.

Holmes said 80 percent of the cars stolen are left unlocked and 40 percent have the keys left in the ignition.

Rally today to protest tuition hikes

Concerns over planned tuition hikes and cuts in financial aid awards will be the topic of a rally at 12:15 this afternoon outside the Student Union Building.

The rally, organized by a coalition of several student groups, will focus on the Board of Regents proposal to increase tuition by $64 this fall and an additional $74 next spring.

In addition, the coalition members have expressed concern about cuts in financial aid funding, which may result if President Ronald Reagan's budget proposals are approved by Congress.

Following the rally, the organizers say there will be a workshop in the Campus Center to discuss the effects of the proposals and how to oppose them.

Astronauts arrive 'ready to fly' in mission tomorrow

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL — Astronauts John Young and Robert Crippen arrived here yesterday "ready to fly" an historic mission aboard the reflyable rocketship Columbia. They relaxed by doing acrobatics in trainer jets and work to prepare the shuttle was ahead of schedule.

Launch managers said all was to go for dawn— 6:50 a.m. EST to be precise—tomorrow.

After dinner with their boss, the astronauts went to bed at 6:15 p.m. EST, an early wakeup awaiting them. On the launch pad, activities were ahead of schedule after early countdown delays.

Young, who has been in space four times before, said he brought enough clothes from home in Houston to last a month—his way of making sure there would be a launch tomorrow. "Every other time," he explained, "I never brought enough and always had to stay longer."

One of the first things Crippen did after they flew in from Houston in twin T-38 jet trainers was to make sure his mother would be taken care of when she arrives to see the launch.

The countdown, rebounding from a trouble—plagued start, was ahead of schedule. The weather was predicted to be fine. And Soviet rhetoric lent an element of superpower suspicion.

A few minutes after arriving Young and Crippen got into their planes again and spent more than an hour doing aerobatics over the Cape Canaveral area.

They were met after their flights by ground crews who wore face masks to guard against passing along any infectious diseases.

"Bob and I are about ready to fly this thing," said Young of the shuttle. He had said earlier that they were eager "to give this country something to be proud of."

Soviets warn space shuttle may cause arms race

By THOMAS KENT
Associated Press

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union, which once warmly praised American space missions, has taken a hostile attitude to the U.S. space shuttle and is warning that the program may lead to a cosmic arms race.

Soviet space officials and the state-controlled news media are portraying tomorrow's maiden flight of the space shuttle Columbia as the start of a new "militarist and chauvinistic effort" by America to blackmail the world with "super-weapons."

Official commentaries indicate Moscow is determined to counter whatever military advantages the shuttle brings America. Despite official denials, there are some indications the Kremlin has already started its own shuttle program.

Lt. Gen. Vladimir Shatalov, the chief of Soviet cosmonaut training, attacked the possible military uses of the American shuttle at a Moscow news conference yesterday.

"Of course, if the United States and the Pentagon leaders take this road, it will be a great tragedy for the entire world," Shatalov said. "It will mean a new spiral in the arms race, and certainly will bring the United States nothing, no advantages, except new enormous, colossal expenditures and more international tension."

Five-star general in World War II dies of stroke at age 88

NEW YORK—Gen. Omar Bradley, who led a million U.S. soldiers in World WAR II and was the nation's last five-star general, died yesterday at the age of 88, Pentagon officers said in Washington.

Bradley died of a stroke at 7:30 p.m. EST at St. Luke's-Roosevelt Hospital Center in New York City, with his wife, Kitty, at his side, said Army Secretary John O. Marsh Jr. and Army Chief of Staff Gen. E.C. Meyer.

A hospital spokesperson said Bradley was taken to the emergency room at 7:15 p.m. in a private car with his wife and three aides. Spokesperson Anne Burton said Bradley was "essentially dead on arrival," and was pronounced dead after efforts to revive him failed. Although the Army said he died of a stroke, she said he died of a heart attack.

Bradley had remained on active and had been in the Army almost 70 years, more than any other U.S. serviceman, and spent the last 30 years as general of the Army.

House refuses to consider increases in aid to offset 2½

BOSTON—Members of the Massachusetts House, splitting straight down the middle, refused yesterday to consider endorsing a $300 million increase in local aid to partially offset Proposition 2½.

Voting 75-75, the representatives did not grant the two thirds majority needed to suspend rules and allow an immediate vote on a resolution calling for the extra money.

Instead, the lawmakers took a first step toward tightening House rules in a way that would prevent any further votes on such resolutions.

However, that preliminary vote was so close to the required two-thirds margin 99-49 that House Speaker Thomas W. McGee put off final action on the rules change until April 27, presumably to solidify his support.

Republicans hammered away at Democrats throughout, accusing them of trying to stifle debate. They warned the rules change proposed by Majority Leader George Keverian, D-Everett, could have far-reaching consequences, ultimately allowing any issue to be muffled without a recorded vote.

Reagan shows improvement May return to work next week

WASHINGTON—President Reagan, showing continued improvement with no sign of complications from his gunshot wound, probably will be ready to return to the White House as early as tomorrow and no later than Monday, a key physician said yesterday.

"He will not be chopping wood next week," but Reagan should be able to put in a couple hours of work at his desk each day, said Dr. Dennis O'Leary, dean of clinical affairs at George Washington University Hospital where Reagan is recuperating.

The president will likely be recovered 100 percent within four months, O'Leary estimated, adding: "He might do a little better."

The president signed a proclamation designating the week of April 19 as "Victims Rights Week," calling attention to the needs of victims of crime.

It made no mention of Reagan's own case.

Harvard professor triumphs in sex discrimination case

CAMBRIDGE —A woman associate professor of sociology, claiming she was denied tenure at Harvard because of her sex, has won what may be the first sex discrimination case in the 345-year history of the university, officials said.

Dr. Henry Rosovsky, dean of the faculty of arts and sciences, said Tuesday night he planned by the end of the week to act on the decision of a grievance committee which voted 2-1 that the sociology department had discriminated on the basis of sex in denying Dr. Theda R. Skocpol tenure last September.

King pushes for anti-crime bill; Seeks stiffer penalties in future

BOSTON — Gov. Edward J. King pressed for passage of his anti-crime bills yesterday, telling a legislative committee that 292 new beds soon will be available for inmates in the burgeoning prison system, and the deterrent of stiffer penalties may help keep the population down.

"I'm not certain over the long term there necessarily will be that many more people incarcerated," King said in discussing his legislation with the Judiciary Committee.

Bills before the committee would give a "legal defense" to a person who kills an intruder in his home; institute mandatory sentences for repeat offenses against the elderly; stiffen penalties for crimes committed while on bail, and make release on bail more difficult in the first place.

Another bill, announced but not yet filed by King, would establish mandatory minimum sentences for various crimes. It is this bill which is expected to have the greatest impact on space in the already overcrowded prison system.

Czech officials condemn Poles; New attacks made by Soviets

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — Czechoslovak officials yesterday accused the Polish independent labor federation Solidarity of "counter-revolution" and "anti-socialism" and the Soviet media made new attacks on the Polish union.

Despite the announcement that Warsaw Pact military exercises in and around Poland had ended, U.S. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. said in Rome that Soviet-led forces on Poland's borders remained in a state of "military readiness."

NATO defense ministers meeting in Bonn called the Warsaw Pact military exercises "menacing" and issued a new warning to the Kremlin against intervention in Poland.

The head of the Czechoslovakia's official trade unions likened continuing labor unrest in Poland to the situation in his nation in 1968, when Soviet forces invaded to supress a liberalizing trend.

A Czech spokesman said Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev — a special guest at Czechoslovakia's 16th Communist Party Congress here — would address the meeting again before it closes tomorrow.

In his speech to the Congress Tuesday, Brezhnev momentarily eased tensions surrounding Poland by expressing confidence that Polish communists were capable of putting their own house in order. But in Moscow, the Soviet media carried new attacks on the 10-million member Solidarity labor organization that grew out of last summer's Polish strikes.

Salvadoran refugee says he still lives in fear

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Correspondent

EDITOR'S NOTE: Additional interpretation was provided by UMass student Juan Carlos "Caco" Acvedo.

A refugee from El Salvador, who fled to the United States because his name was on the list of the "death squad" in that country, said he felt his life was in danger while he was in the U.S. as well.

Tulio Mendoza Figueroa, a primary school teacher and principal in El Salvador, said because of his membership in the Salvadoran National Educators Association, which alledgedly supports the revolutionary front, his name was placed on the death list.

Mendoza said he felt that even as he tours the U.S. his life is in danger. "I feel El Salvador is capable of sending someone here to kill me," Mendoza said. "It is a crime to tell the truth, and I'm telling the truth."

Mendoza, who speaks no English used Antigona Martinez, a Nicaraguan touring with him, as interpreter last night at Thompson Hall.

"Teachers are persecuted as common criminals," Mendoza said. "We don't have the opportunity to live or know whether we can sleep without fearing death."

Mendoza told the audience of about 200 people that the U.S. people are given incorrect information about the events in El Salvador.

"You are told that it is a war between extreme leftists and extreme rightists, but there are many groups united," Mendoza said.

He said that there are "14 families" in control, and the junta says that it is caught between the families and the laborers and peasants.

"I can tell you the junta and the U.S. are not in the middle, they are working to stop the movement," said Mendoza.

Mendoza said that the millions of dollars sent by the U.S. is "only contributing to the massacre of Salvadorians."

"The economic aid the U.S. gives to El Salvador is used for the military, very little goes into agrarian reform," Mendoza said.

Mendoza said the funds for the revolutionary front come from ransom collected from the junta when Salvadoran businessmen and government officials are kidnapped. He said that the money buys arms on the world market, but most guns and ammunition are captured during skirmishes.

Mendoza and his family, who fled with him, has not been granted political asylum in the U.S. yet, and face deportation hearings with the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Student Senate votes to uphold decision of transit fee

By KATHLEEN HOWLEY
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate voted last night to uphold a decision made Tuesday by Coordinating Committee to charge students a separate transit fee of $10 for on-campus students and $15 for off-campus students.

According to the motion, the $235,000 generated by the new fee would go into a Student Senate Transit Trust Fund which would be controlled by the senate.

The fee increase is in response to the recent announcement of a potential $145,000 deficit in this year's transit system budget, and will avoid a possible 30 percent cut in bus service , said Al Wallace, former senate treasurer.

Wallace said the bus system "is an important part of every graduate and undergraduate student's daily life," and said cutbacks in night and weekend service could pose a potential danger to women.

"That means if you're a woman going across campus at night there would be no bus," Wallace said.

Wallace said he sees a need for an increase in funding from local businesses and apartment complexes, but said such a request could not be enforced.

"We'd like to see the senate emphasize the need for funding from local apartment complexes," Wallace said, "but we do not have the power to force anyone into a contract like that."

In other business, the senate passed a motion establishing April 26 as Campus Beatification Day.

Student Government Association co-President Larry Kocot said the day would "begin a two week period of community awareness before Community Day."

Kocot said the campus will be divided into quadrants, with "task forces of volunteers" assigned to each section to pick up trash and clean graffitti.

Kocot said UMass Chancellor Henry Koffler will attend.

Financial aid board advisory formed to handle problems

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association has announced the formation of a Financial Aid Advisory Board, which will represent the chancellor as an advisory committee regarding changes and procedures in the administration of awards by the Financial Aid office and will serve to hear student problems concerning the office.

SGA co-President Larry Kocot yesterday said the board was created in response to decreasing availability of financial aid and student understanding of awarding procedures. He said Board members would be available to students for individual discussion and settlement of misunderstandings and grievances concerning their award.

Kocot said student complaints are now handled by the Financial Aid Office, but increases in demand added to a growing complexity in award guidelines has resulted in mounting dissatisfaction.

"Success (of the board) will be judged by the amount of grievances," Financial Aid Director Ed C. Apodaca said yesterday, adding that the job of the board will be to inform students of financial aid procedures to clear up misunderstandings before they happen.

"You have to take care of students before the fact and not after the fact," added Apodaca, who was involved in the formation of the board.

He said the board will need to find better ways of communication with students to relate to them the problems to be faced with financial aid. The board should let the students know the University is given less money to help more students, he added.

According to an amendment to the SGA by-laws, membership of the Board shall include three faculty members appointed by the Faculty Senate; five administration members representing the chancellor, the three Vice Chancellors, and the Financial Aid Office, five undergraduate students appointed by the SGA president's office; and three graduate students appointed by the Graduate Student Senate.

Three UMass students plead innocent to rape charges

By KELLY BURKE
Collegian Staff

Three University of Massachusetts students were arrested in late March and charged with aggravated rape, according to the Amherst Police. Michail Cunningham, 21, and William L. McQuaide, 22, both of 63 Pine Grove, Amherst, and Nishan Vartanian, 21, of Butterfield Terrace, have pleaded innocent to the charge of raping an eighteen-year-old Northampton woman at an apartment in the Echo Hill area of Amherst on March 25.

The rape allegedly took place when the woman, who was with some friends at Hangar One, on Rte. 9 agreed to leave the bar with two of the students who work there.

According to report in the Daily Hampshire Gazette,the men reportedly took her to an apartment, trapped her inside the bedroom, removed her clothing and raped her. The third student allegedly arrived later and raped her.

After the arrests, the three men were released on their own recognizance. Cunningham's and McQuaide's cases are continued to April 13. Vartanian, a member of the UMass football team, had his case continued until April 17.

Aggravated rape is punishable by life imprisonment in a state prison or for a term of years to be determined by the judge.

According to Massachusetts law, aggravated rape occurs when a victim is exposed to bodily injury or "joint enterprise."

Myra Hindus, coordinator of the Everywoman's Center Task Force on Violence Against Women, said, "Within the last month, beside this rape, we've had at least three other cases of rape on campus reported to the counselor · advocate program of the Everywoman's Center.

Mary Dumas, community relations officer for the UMass police said they had recieved no on campus reports of rape in the past month. Hindus said this is because the Everywoman's Center gets calls from women who do not report to the police.

"We encourage victims who contact us to use other sources, medical and legal, but they make their own decisions about using other resources," Hindus said.

"About 60 percent of reported rapes are acquaintance or date rapes, in which the victim knew the offender casually beforehand. Women have to realize that when they are in situations such as parties or bars, they must think about their safety before going off with a casual acquaintance," Hindus said.

Pay increases for non-union professional workers delayed

By CHUCK KILFOYE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts officials said yesterday that six percent pay increases for non-unionized professional employees will be delayed until administrators are able to approve the increases through proper legislative channels.

The delay was a result of a motion in the Faculty Senate to have UMass President David C. Knapp censured for approving the controversial $1 million pay raise before the money had been appropriated by the state legislature.

The censure vote was not taken after Knapp decided to review the pay increases.

"We expect the governor to act on the matter within the week," said UMass spokesperson Carol Cohen. "Nothing had been done on this matter until last week when the trustees reaffirmed that Pres. Knapp should begin the pay raises as soon as Gov. Edward J. King signs the faculty contract into effect," she said.

"No non-union employees have received any pay raises as of yet," Cohen added.

In response to criticism from members of the Massachusetts Society of Professors, who have not yet received pay increases outlined in their contract which was negotiated in January, the Board of Trustees voted to delay implementation of the staff raises for ten days awaiting Gov. King's signature on the MSP contract.

"The trustees approved the ten day delay after being assured that Gov. Edward J. King would approve the faculty-librarian contract within that period," said Mark Horan of the Office of University Relations.

English professor Joseph Frank, faculty representative to the trustees, said "we want everyone to get appropriate raises, but they must be given in correct order."

William Bonwitt, spokesman for the Union of Professional Employees, which is not yet recognized as an official bargaining unit, said UMass professional employees still have not received any pay raises.

"As far as I know the Board of Trustees has put off implementation of the pay raise," said Bonwitt.

The six percent pay raise, which would affect about 875 non-unionized professional employees, was announced in a memo released in late March from Knapp's office to all campuses, stating that pay raises had been approved for all non-faculty professional employees.

Bill to ban harassment awaits House approval

By DEBORAH SANDOCK
Collegian Correspondant

Testimony was heard on March 24 concerning a bill filed in the Massachusetts State Legislature prohibiting sexual harassment and awaits approval by the House Commerce and Labor Committee.

The bill, introduced by Rep. Barbara Gray, R-Framingham, was the creation of the Student Center For Educational Research and Advocacy's (SCERA) Public Policy Team.

Lisa Nazzaro, a member of the Women's Issues Team of SCERA, said the bill was introduced last year but died in its third reading. Gray reintroduced the bill last December, after minor revisions were made by a team of lawyers.

"Basically, it was the same bill, but some of the wording was changed," Nazzaro said.

"At this time, victims who are sexually harassed by those in a position to influence their career have virtually no recourse. The act seeks to remedy this," said Beth Benton, member of SCERA's Public Policy Team.

The bill would legally define sexual harassment as "the unwanted imposition of sexualy requirements in the context of a relationship of unequal power."

Additionally, the bill will establish sexual harassment as a civil offense and create a uniform grievance procedure to deal with complaints.

Committee approval of the bill is expected by the Public Policy Team, said Benton. She added that after the approval, the bill would go to the House floor for debate.

Benton said she is gathering support for the bill and is asking interested persons to write to their state representatives.

Seminar considers alternate energy sources

By DONNA MAGRATH
Collegian Correspondent

Energy alternatives to oil such as wind, solar and biomass energy were considered last night as part of the three-day "Blessing of the Sun" program sponsored by the University of Massachusetts B'nai B'rith Hillel.

"There are proposals to get more windmills built and working because of the large amount of wind power available off of the seashore," said James Manwell of the UMass department of mechanical engineering.

Manwell said windmills off of the seashore provide more energy than those placed on top of hills because of the wind power available out there.

Using a slide show presentation, Manwell said windmills with more blades turn slower and are not able to extract much energy from the wind.

"In Holland, they only extract about 20 pereent of the energy from wind," he said.

Windmills have been in existence since 1,000 A.D., Manwell said, but the biggest environmental impact they have is their appearance.

"People are concerned with what they look like and this brings complaints from people because they obstruct their view," he said.

The U.S. Department of Energy and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration are the two main agencies involved in setting up windmills which are used primarily for grinding grain, pumping water wells and providing heat energy, Manwell said.

He said the windmill built on top of Orchard Hill, Solar Habitat One, was specifically designed for heating and has been heating the house this winter "pretty well."

"One windmill would provide essentially all of the power for a typical four bedroom house if there is a 12 mile an hour wind," Manwell added.

Speaking on biomass energy, Dr. Richard Mudgett said the energy content of biomass is low and it "is the poorest source of fuel in regards to other sources such as coal, methane and other gases."

Biomass, the plant and animal tissues used for energy production, has "only one percent energy efficiency," Mudgett said.

It is collected, transported and dried for burning and it is best used not for energy but for food, drugs and chemical feedstocks, he said.

Israel's advanced solar energy program discussed

By MICHELLE MURRAY
Collegian Correspondent

Israel has one of the most advanced solar energy programs in the world because of its deficiency in other energy sources and its tremendous accessibility to solar radiation, a member of the civil engineering department said yesterday.

Neil Ram, an assistant professor of environmental engineering, said one of Israel's most ambitious tasks is a solar pond project.

There are four solar ponds being tested in Israel constructed by the Ormat Company, which is also helping the California Energy Commission to establish a solar pond in California, Ram said, speaking as part of the UMass B'nai B'rith Hillel Solar Energy Conference.

Ram said that the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has contributed a grant of $1 million to the project in Israel.

One of these solar ponds, located in the Dead Sea, has a 150 kilowatt capacity, covers 7,000 square miles of surface area, and it is predicted it will be able to supply all of Israel's electricity needs in five years time.

The ponds are created by blocking off parts of the Dead Sea, which is ideal for this project because it is the lowest spot on earth, and receives the greatest amount of solar radiation. The high salt content of the Dead Sea is also important to the projects.

Although the general mechanics of operating a solar pond are known, the Israeli government regards the details of the research as confidential information, Ram said, and will not release the entire plan.

One of the major problems of the project is that it requires a larger supply of fresh water than is available in the region. Consequently, the Israeli government is considering building a channel from the Mediterranean to the Dead Sea, a proposal which has caused an international uproar due to the potential impact on the environment.

Banquet fetes outstanding students

The Associate Alumni sponsored the sixth annual Alumni Scholars' Banquet last night in the Campus Center.

The alumni collects money to provide 50 $500 Merit Scholarships to 50 outstanding juniors who have a minimum of 60 graded hours and possess a minimum cumulative average of 3.50.

The students are nominated by the deans of their schools, and represent each of the ten schools of the University.

Director of Alumni Relations Douglas Cooney said the attending winners represented five states, as well as China. There were 33 women and 17 men honored, who are majoring in fields from history to education, psychology to Soviet and east European studies.

"The alumni feel very positive about their money going directly to the students. Recognizing outstanding students is the best part of the event," he said.

After the buffet dinner, Associate Alumni President William Mahoney welcomed the students and their guests.

GSS announces budget allocations

The Graduate Student Senate finalized its budget allocations for several campus organizations Tuesday night when its finance committee presented budget recommendations for fiscal year 1982.

A major difference in the new budget was a $14,950 increase for the University of Massachusetts Transit Service. Jasmine Dali, administrative coordinator for the GSS, said next year's $42,950 allocation was necessary because of federal cuts in transit funds.

Other increases were alotted to Nummo News, which received a $1,000 increase over this year's budget, and the Valley Women's Voice, which received a $500 increase.

Jack Delmond, president of the senate, said several organizations requested increases in funds, but because of the transit allocation only those groups who could show extreme need of additional funding were considered.

"The general consensus of the budget review committee was only if the organizations had a strong case could we increase the funds, otherwise they would stay at level," Delmond said.

Conference on future planned

By STEVE DALY
Collegian Staff

A day-long conference to discuss long-range planning at the University of Massachusetts as it relates to the reorganization of higher education in the state, will be held this Monday in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Sponsored by the Academic Affairs Committee of the Undergraduate Student Senate, the conference is open to the entire campus community as well as other interested parties.

Academic Affairs Committee member Candy Carlon said the conference entitled "Planning for the 1980's-a campus-wide conference," is a response to a document put out by Chancellor Henry Koffler last May, in which Koffler presented his agenda for long-range planning and his own criteria for assessing academic programs.

"We want to evaluate the assumptions made by Chancellor Koffler," Carlon said.

Edward Considine, a member of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) Academic Team, said it was Koffler's "Planning for the 1980's" document that "sparked the idea of this conference."

"Because the chancellor put this (document) out, people became more interested in the mission of the University," Considine said.

The conference will begin at 9:30 with a keynote address by Dr. Johnnetta Cole of the Anthropology Department and will feature four panels of discussion.

State Rep. James Collins, D-Amherst, will be a member of a panel on quality education.

Three of the panels will be comprised of four speakers, while the fourth will include three participants. Within each panel, different perspectives will be presented by the various faculty, student and administrative members.

Robert Cleary, co-chairperson of the Undergraduate Student Senate Rents and Fees Committee, will moderate an open forum on possible steps to take in the future, following the panel discussion.

Country and bluegrass musicians will perform this Sunday at Hangar One Route 9, Hadley, at 12 p.m. in a benefit concert for WMUA's "Country, Blues and Bluegrass" programs.

WMUA is the student run radio station at the University of Massachusetts.

"This music and its cultural history is kept alive by the strong and often unheralded efforts of artists like those who will appear at the benefit concert," said Alan Flanagan, coordinator of "Country, Blues and Bluegrass."

The Concert will feature Andy May, western swing band Cowboy Jazz, and Amherst group Ambrosia Blues All Stars.

Country vocalist Hazel Dickens, who was described by the Baltimore Sun as "an angry voice from the coalfields," will also be performing.

Dickens said she is trying to keep the country music pure.

"I'm trying to keep the faith with the people who started it," she said.

Tickets can be purchased for $6 at Platterpus Records, Northampton; Backroom Records, Amherst; and Goodbodies in South Hadley.

Cowboy Jazz will perform Sunday April 12 in Hangar One, Route 9, Hadley, for WMUA's benefit concert of "Country, Blues and Bluegrass."

Spring is here, and so is lots of live music. This weekend has something for everyone.

Things start hopping this very evening with Al Dimeola, John McLaughlin, and Paco DeLucia over in the Fine Arts Center. There are still tickets left, and it promises to be an impressive show.

If you're not into the acoustic guitar music, however, there's still plenty to choose from.

Human Sexual Response makes their first appearance of the semester at Hangar One tonight, and Beaver Brown returns once again to the area at the Rusty Nail, and that's only Thursday.

Tomorrow night there's a wide choice, too. The Rusty Nail welcomes Liv Taylor (James' brother), and at the Hangar it's Orleans. (They had a big hit a couple of summers ago, "You're Still the One.")

Also on Friday, The Scientific Americans will be conducting a live recording session at Rahar's. It could be quite interesting.

On campus at the Wall it's the Elevators. They should get some kind of prize for the most performances in one area in one semester. Seriously they do have a pretty good album out called "Front Line," and if you haven't seen them you might want to check them out.

Saturday the Duke Ellington Solos and Duos Series welcomes Marion Brown and Hilton Ruiz to the Cape Cod Lounge for a piano and saxophone duet. This is a superb opportunity to see Jazz in an intimate atmosphere.

If you don't want to be mellow, though, there's still more. The Student Union Ballroom will be the scene of the annual Cosmic Wimpout contest. There will be prizes, as well as live music by Max Creek and Martian Highway.

In the Wall Saturday, fans of reggae can hear Loose Cabose.

I bet you think that's it, but no, there is still more. On Sunday the Hangar holds the annual Country, Blues, and Bluegrass Festival. This is an all day affair and offers you the chance to listen to a whole bunch of good music.

There is still no word on spring concert, but time is running short, so an announcement can be expected in the very near future.

Lastly, if you're not in the mood to go to a club, Jesus Christ Superstar is being performed Thursday, Friday and Saturday in Bowker Auditorium. There are still tickets for all performances.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Ashes to ashes, dust to dust; ape from ape, man from man

Gary Burger

The recent trial in California has brought new publicity to the creation-evolution controversy. While the public looks on, creationists urge changes, introduce legislation to get equal time in schools, and argue for credibility. Meanwhile, evolutionists organize local resistance groups in the form of Committees of Correspondence, fight the legislation, and argue that creationism isn't credible science. It is ironic that, 50 years after the Scopes trial, evolutionists are bent on denying creationists what they themselves fought for in that famous trial: a fair hearing, and equal time in the schools.

Creationists charge that evolutionism is atheistic secular humanism, and as such is a religion from which the state should separate itself. Creationists argue that creationism is as scientifically tenable as evolution, and that both are rooted in an act of faith: either theism or atheism.

Evolutionists argue that evolution is a proven fact, and is well founded in science, and that creationism is a religion and an anti-intellectual, grass-roots movement that would throw us back into the Dark Ages (see for example Science 209 p. 1214, Time magazine, March 16, 1981, or Contact, Feb. 6, 1981).

While the evolutionists' rhetoric receives much attention and publicity, few are willing to hear the arguments of a sober creationist. Often, when the position of creationists is discussed, it is from the point of view of an evolutionist — Gould in his column in Natural History and our own Laurie Godfrey's soon to appear article in the same publication. Evolutionists often set up a straw-man creationist and then knock him down. What does this show? Anyone can knock down a straw-man. For example, in Time (March 16, 1981) we read that the creationists believe "...the different species of plants and animals were created, they did not evolve from any other species." The creationists with advanced degrees in science, to whom this article also refers, do not believe this any more than does a dyed-in-the-wool evolutionist. This is a misrepresentation of creationists, intended to discredit them. But what are the creationists saying? Is there any credibility to their position? Do the facts of science speak to their position in any way?

Many scientists who are creationists subscribe to the following model of origins which they feel is tenable in the light of what science can reveal about our universe. The universe is about 10,000 years old. In the beginning a Creator created the universe: matter and energy; stars and planets; ocean and dry land. This Creator also created life: kinds of animals and plants, and mankind. Most of the geologic record (sedimentary rocks and the fossils they bear) is the result of a universal flood which innundated the earth and changed it drastically.

These creationists do not believe in the immutability of species, as so many evolutionists charge. Rather, they believe that the original created kinds have changed, through microevolutionary processes, adapted to new environments, and diversified into many species, within limits. Thus, they acknowledge that Darwin's finches probably did evolve from one species of finch that made it to the Galapagos from the mainland; but they are still finches, and will never be anything but finches. More broadly, creationists deny that fish became amphibians, then reptiles, then birds and mammals; or that a primitive tree-shrew-like insectivore eventually became man.

Let's look at just one of these controversial, and often distained, claims and examine the evidence concerning it. Creationists hold that the earth is approximately 10,000 years old. Evolutionists claim that modern radiometric dating techniques reliably date the earth at approximately 6 billion years old.

First, these radiometric dating techniques rest on several assumptions. Each of these assumptions have been examined and found to be blatantly false or highly questionable for each of the most commonly used dating techniques by both creationist and evolutionist scientists. This leaves room to doubt the authority with which it is boldly asserted that these techniques reliably show the earth to be 6 billion years old.

Second, we have over 140 years of real measurements of the earth's magnetic field, which indicate that the field is decaying. Evolutionists argue that this apparent decay is a portion of one cycle of many, in which the earth's magnetic dipole reverses. Their model requires a dynamo to generate the field, and evidence in the orientation of magnetically sensitive particles in rocks to demonstrate when in the earth's history these "reversals" occurred.

The earth's magnetic field is probably produced by currents in the molten core of the earth. No theory or model has been proposed outlining how a dynamo could exist to drive the field. Some, in fact, argue that a dynamo is impossible. Furthermore, at least six other processes can change the orientation of magnetically sensitive particles in the rock relative to the earth's field, and the results of these local processes are indistinguishable from "reversals", except by arbitrary deductions based on evolutionary expectations.

Alternatively, the decay of the 140 years of real measurements may simply be explained by a model of a freely decaying magnetic field. All this model requires is currents in a good conductor at the core of the earth, which is what in fact exists by our best estimates. The data on the magnetic field fit an exponential decay curve very well. If we extrapolate back in time, past 10,000 years, we reach a magnetic field intensity which is impossible, because the currents necessary to generate that field would rip the earth apart.

Third, under the evolutionary model, the solar system is very old, including the moon. The theory predicted that the cosmic dust which falls on all worlds, and has also been falling on the moon over these many billions of years, should have accumulated on our natural satellite by now to a depth of approximately 50 feet. When we went to the moon, the lunar lander was equipped with large, dish-shaped feet to bouy it up on this vast depth of dust. In fact, when we landed, we found less than ¼" of dust, suggesting a very young moon.

Some evolutionists will point out that we can see stars that are so far away that it requires millions or billions of years for the light to reach us, therefore demonstating the great age of the universe.[3] But if a Creator created these stars, intending for them to be visible from the earth, could He not also create the light in transit, so that we could indeed see them?

When you think about these "reliable" radiometric dating techniques, the evidence from the earth's magnetic field, and the cosmic dust on the moon, do you believe that creationists are irrational and anti-intellectual to think that this earth is young? A mere 10,000 years old? And of course, if the earth is that young, the eons of time postulated as necessary for evolution to work its wonders are not available and the idea becomes incredible.

The scientific credibility could be demonstrated for each of these other points mentioned, but this one will have to suffice for the sake of brevity. The point is, creationism is not as irrational, anti-intellectual, or unscientific as the evolutionists claim it to be. In fact, it has some points distinctly in its favor. Perhaps it's time to cool hot emotions and consider the two sides of this controversy in an unprejudiced light before either is condemned.

Eric Janszen

Along with wondering if life is worth all the trouble, thinking about what other people think of you is a natural amusement of the human mind.

Consider the guy living in the room next to yours, for instance. He's friendly enough. He talks to you about this and that when you run into each other in the hallway, converses casually through a mouthful of toothpaste foam in the bathroom, and veal cutlet in the dining commons.

But people don't always say what they think.

From hearing Elvis Costello blare from your room through the adjoining wall many nights, accompanied by breaking furniture and other clamor you and your boyfriend make when you get it on (in the biblical sense), what does he really think about you?

He's seen you carry two cases of Moosehead beer into your room every Friday night, and three cases every Saturday night, since the semester began. He's caught glimpses of your floor, matted with pizza crusts, twigs, seeds and burnt matches; soaked with wine, bong water and orange juice.

And the smell that fills the hall when you open your door: a weird gas, a vile, torrid mixture of odors reminiscent of city taxicabs, cheap brothels and bus station restrooms; inside your room, it's like a Mexican bus come in from the countryside, with chickens and goats, and people short on bathwater, stalled on a bridge near Mexico City where the rubber factories churn hydrogen sulfide out into the thick, red summer air.

And what does he make of your endless sniffling, your wretching cough, your red-and-yellow eyes and dilated pupils? And does it matter?

In the room the cockroaches come and go, talking of Michelangelo.

Does your next door neighbor have a nice car, good drugs or a lot of money? Does he work at the radio station and can he get you free tickets to Bruce Springsteen? No. So what do you care what he thinks?

You have more important people to worry about. Like your parents, for instance.

It is pitifully simple and, like most pitifully simple things, dearly rewarding to present the proper impression of yourself to mom and dad.

Lucky for you your folks don't have much to go on. In fact, the folks have read so much about UMass in the Boston Globe they somehow are always tied up during parents' visiting weekends, and have never graced the campus.

They decline to see their dearest daughter living among people who smoke "pot," blast street repair noises over megawatt stereos, and engage in social relations associated with the reproductive function.

They know their precious little girl wouldn't do anything like that.

This tenacious misconception eases your job of drawing a moose-wide line between the folks' idea and the reality of how you live.

The telephone lightens the task yet further.

(Phone rings at bedside, 8:30 a.m. Sunday. Daughter answers.)

Daughter: Whuzzafug. (Gasps.) Who died?

Father: Oh, I hope I didn't wake you, dear.

Daugher: Oh, dad! Hi! Geez, no, you didn't wake me up. I've been up for hours. I just got back from...ah...running!

Father: Running? That's wonderful! When did you start running, honey?

Daughter: Um, about three weeks ago. I found myself running back and forth from the library so much I figured, hey, what the heck, I'll make a routine out of it. (Covers receiver, hacks convulsively, waking boyfriend.)

> He's caught glimpses of your floor, matted with pizza crusts, twigs, seeds and burnt matches; soaked with wine, bong water and orange juice.

Father: That's great. And you're at the library a lot...

Boyfriend: Ugh. Jesus, what the hell time is it?

Daughter: Shut up, it's my father.

Father: Who's that, honey?

Daughter: Ah, nobody. I have the radio on.

Boyfriend: Hang up. I wanna go back to sleep.

Father: Is that the radio?

Daughter: Ya, dad. It's the radio. Just a sec, I'll shut it off. (Stuffs underwear into boyfriend's mouth, jabs elbow into his back.) The library? Sure, I'm always there. When I'm not at work or in class.

Boyfriend: Hmuughmph. (Writhes.)

Father: You shouldn't work yourself so hard, sweety. You ought to take time off sometimes to be with your friends. After all, that's a big part of your education, too.

Daughter: Gee, I try, dad. But there's so little time...

(Boyfriend flails arms, knocks beer bottles off nightstand onto floor. Sound of glass shattering. Next door neighbor, Carol, screams.)

Father: What was that!?

Daughter: I dunno. Carol next door must have had an accident with her mirror, or something. (Punches boyfriend.)

Boyfriend: Huuuuuugh! (Knocks more bottles onto floor.)

Carol: Cut the crap, you animals! I'm really sick of this! (Pounds on wall.)

Father: Gosh! Maybe you should go see if she's all right.

Daughter: Good idea. I'll call you back later, okay?

Father: Fine dear.

Daughter: Bye, daddy. (Hangs up, embraces boyfriend, and they are soon fast asleep.)

Stockmania in suburbia

Bob Conte

"The latest fashion fad for men in Washington D.C. is the David Stockman hairstyle. Local salons report hundreds of requests in the past month for the neat, part on the right, just over the ear look sported by the program-slashing O.M.B. Director, considered one of the city's most eligible bachelors..."

New Haven Register

"Honey, I'm home."

"You didn't forget to bring in the garbage cans, did you?...Oh Dick, you got a Stockman!"

"Ah hah! They had a $19.95 special down at the mall. I just couldn't resist, Marge! What do you think?"

"Oh Dick, you look so...so bureaucratic!"

"Thank you. The grey flecks were $2.50 extra but I decided to shoot the works."

"So authentic!"

"I can't wait until the eyeglasses come in. Only $79 extra."

"Dick, you don't need glasses."

"It's not a matter of need, Marge. It's the look! Stockmania is the biggest thing to hit this town since Jackie O!"

"Wait till your boss sees it. He'll name you Junior Head Inventory Accountant for sure! Listen Honey, the kids are out with my mother and I haven't made the bed yet anyway..."

"Ive been meaning to talk to you about the kids. We've got to get them out of that private school. I don't think it's our role to subsidize their education like that. It's draining bloody hell out of our cash reserves."

"What do you mean it's not our role?"

"I mean if they want to go to that school then they're going to have to pay for it themselves. Let 'em go to work for a year."

"Dick, they're in the second grade."

"You ever hear of a paper route? These are tough times, Marge. We can't afford to educate every little pug who passes through our front door."

"For God sake, they're our children!"

"Doesn't matter. We'll negotiate a reasonable room and board for the summer when they get back. I think that's more than fair. But I want your mother out of here by tomorrow night."

"What?"

"It's alright. I called this afternoon to reserve her a bed at the Y. She'll be fine there."

"I don't believe this!"

"Listen, she's old, she doesn't bring in any income, and she eats like a horse. What do you want me to do? The Welfare State is dead in this house, Marge. It's gonna be Supply Side Economics around here from now on."

"What the hell is that?"

"Part of the Stockman folklore. Basically, the rich are kept well-supplied while the poor are left to rot by the wayside."

"Hah?"

"Well, it goes something like this. The government cuts spending for social programs, such as public transportation. This drives the cost of a subway token up past the range of your average poor person, but it doesn't matter because poor people are out of work anyway and therefore have no reason to ride the subway. It's flawless logic."

"What the hell does that have to do with the kids and my mother? God, I need a Valium."

"Don't you see? Education. The elderly. They're not our problem anymore. It's the American Dream! The only people that we have to take care of is ourselves!"

"So where's all the leftover money going to go?"

"Defense spending is where it's at now, Marge. The new big thing. Take a look out the back window!"

"Oh my God."

"That's right. That's gonna be a ten-foot high steel and barbed wire fence when those workmen get through. Around the whole yard. You can be damn sure those sleazeball neighbors won't be coming around to ask to borrow any more cups of sugar!"

"Oh, Dick..."

"And I got a shiny new .22 on order for when that emaciated mutt across the street starts yapping when I'm trying to sleep..."

Anti-abortion bills pose real threat

In less than a year, you could see the following headlines:

Illicit Abortions Cause 35 Deaths in Bay State
College Student Faces Murder Charges for Abortion; Mother, Husband, Doctor Indicted Law Takes Effect Banning Forms of Birth Control
Miscarriage Investigated: Tampering Suspected

The "Human Life Amendment" (HLA) or the "Human Life Bill" (HLB), which would embody these principles, stand a very good chance of becoming law unless we act now.

The "Human Life Amendment" changes the context of discussion. The passage of this legislation would set a precedent for a new wave of attacks on women's rights. Many of the same legislators involved with the "Human Life Amendment" have introduced the "Family Protection Act" (FPA) which would —deny funds to programs that help battered women and children, rape crisis centers and day care centers —cut off access to birth control and sex education

—legalize discrimination against lesbians and gay men

On April 11, Democrats from Massachusetts will meet at an annual convention at the Civic Center in Springfield. This event is an occasion to inform the Democrat party that we will not give up a women's right to control her own body.

Beginning at 8:30 a.m. we will leaflet the arriving delegates and the townspeople. At noon there will be a rally with speakers including Nancy Gertner, the Civil Liberties lawyer that successfully defended poor women's right to choose, in the February 1981 Doyle Flynn litigation.

Active organization is required to stop the passage of this legislation. Join repesentatives from all around the state to make a statement that cannot be ignored. Call 545-0341 for more information. Bus will be leaving CC circle 7:30 a.m. Saturday — $2 round trip.

Addendum to editorial

I am writing in response to the editorial "Maintaining an Educated Populace" (Collegian, 4/7). My principle criticism is the following.

The increased mobility of the U.S. population, and in particular of the college-graduate labor force (e.g., an increasing percentage of professionals taking up jobs outside of their home state), makes the argument presented in the editorial, which spends undue attention on the rank of Massachusetts among the other states in (1) per capita funding of public higher education, and (2) undergraduate tuition costs for public higher education, of limited interest to the out-of-state readers of the Collegian.

In my opinion, the question that should be posed is, "What kind of citizens are today's college graduates likely to produce?" Two trends are distinctly visible in the area of public higher education in the U.S. at present.

One is the shift in what young people are studying in college: the percentage of students in career-oriented, narrow undergraduate specializations (e.g., accounting, business, engineering, pre-law, pre-med, pre-vet) is increasing. These curricula are followed at the expense of a well-rounded education, which should ideally place approximately equal emphasis on the liberal arts, the physical sciences, and the social sciences. I think it is fair to claim that the first is closer to a "four-year training program" than what we might call an "education."

The second trend is the increasingly deeper financial indebtedness to banks with which college graduates are starting "life." This is of course a predictable development, once one observes that parents, summer earnings, or part-time jobs can no longer meet ever-growing education costs.

So, what do we have at hand: a college graduate with a career-oriented Bachelor's degree, and a (often disturbingly sizeable) bank loan awaiting repayment. Housing is expensive, good jobs are hard to get, and Cold War hysteria is in the air...Will I be unjustified if I claim that the population of the "land of the free" is day by day becoming a faceless multitude of docile, worried employees at the service of the corporations, which are often multinational?

Computer testing delayed

Testing of the new Dining Commons Computer System has been delayed for about two weeks but there are no permanent problems with the system, John Rufo of Auxiliary Services said yesterday.

The system, designed to read a student's identification number from the identification card's magnetic strip for the purpose of admittance to the D.C.s, was scheduled to be tested in all D.C.s this week.

Rufo said the system ran fine when tested Sunday in Franklin and Berkshire D.Cs, but would not function when implemented Monday morning in Worcester and Hampden D.C.s.

He said the problem was a break in the lines connecting the D.C.s to the computer in Worcester D.C., and was not related to prvious problems with chipping magnetic strips.

Rufo also said cards with a new magnetic strip have been received from the manufacturer and their testing will begin soon, but that only time would tell if they will resist chipping off in the machine.

Riding program to serve handicapped students

Handicapped students at the University of Massachusetts will have the opportunity to participate in the horseback riding for the handicapped program beginning this month. An introductory meeting will be held tomorrow night at 8 p.m. in the Brett House lounge.

Jennifer Urban, one of the coordinators of the program, said, "all handicapped students are welcome to participate in the program."

The program has been active for a few years off-campus. Urban added that students from the UMass Campus are invited to attend.

Those who wish to partake in horseback riding will need the written consent of a physician, she said.

Candy Dixon and Lisle Hilsop from the Belchertown State School and Lisa DeSalvo, a senior at UMass, are the riding instructors.

Interested students should attend the meeting. For further information, contact Jennifer Willison at 543-3227, Jennifer Urban at 546-6418, or Lisa DeSalvio at 253-7172.

Effects of nuclear war to be discussed

"The Medical Effects of Nuclear War" will be the topic of a talk by Dr. Katherine Kahn at Mahar Auditorium this Monday at 7:30 p.m.

The talk, to be followed by a panel of community members discussing local actions to prevent nuclear war, is sponsored by the UMass department of public health, the American Friends Service Committee, and the Traprock Peace Center.

All-women bands to perform

Two women's bands will be stopping in the Pioneer Valley this weekend. Alive!, a jazz quintet and rock singer/songwriter Terry Garthwaite will both be in concert Saturday at Chapin Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke College.

The Music of Alive! is a blend of jazz, classical, bebop, swing, blues, gospel and Afro-Latin rhythms, while Garthwaite belts a throaty rock that makes her unique among women singers.

Tickets for the event, available in Northampton at Downtown Sounds, The Common Woman and Womonfyre Books; in Amherst at For the Record, Food for Thought and Amherst Audio; and at the Mary Wooley Ticket Office at Mt. Holyoke, are $6.50. For those under 16 and those over 60, tickets are $4.00. Childcare is available.

Space still available for overseas study

The opportunity still exists for qualified students to apply for overseas study through the newly-established International Student Exchange Program (ISEP). Over 80 US colleges and universities, including UMass, are affiliated with this program which provides numerous opportunities for undergraduates to be directly enrolled in many foreign universities. ISEP students are able to take the same courses as other students at their host institutions abroad. Presently, placements are still possible in Latin America and Africa. All exchanges are for the full academic year, and students pay the normal cost of tuition, room, board and fees at UMass on behalf of an exchange candidate from abroad. Their exchange counterpart does the same for them. Demonstrable working fluency in the language of the host country is a prerequisite, as is a solid academic background. For more details, contact Sterling or Maryelise Lamet, International Program Office, 239 Whitmore.

Evolution topic discussed

"Scientific Creationism vs. Evolution," will be the topic of a discussion and slide presentation sponsored by the Campus Crusade for Christ tonight at 7 in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Dr. Al Beeber, a UMass graduate currently on the staff of the Campus Crusade for Christ, will speak about the growing debate on the origin of human beings.

"The talk will focus on the problems of evolution and what evolutionists say with respect to their lack of evidence to back it up. They become dogmatic, but I believe there is evidence for both sides," said Mark Wade, 21, a junior chemistry major and a member of the sponsoring group.

"Quite a bit of interest has been generated on campus and we expect the auditorium to be overflowing," Wade said.

is still very much alive. UMass provides a top-notch education and you are examples of what UMass can produce," Mahoney said.

"Students are the future of Massachusetts, and UMass is the best public university in New England, bar none, as well as being a top research university," he said.

"This evening is the best of all for me. The designation of scholar is the highest honor I know. You make me proud of being here, and you are a pride to the University," said Provost Loren Baritz.

"The University of Massachusetts is one of 50 leading institutions in the country," Baritz said. "It's a widely known fact in every state but this one. Our undergraduates have incredible opportunities because of our graduate programs and research. They learn from people in their own disciplines. That feels different and better because it is better."

Coffee and donuts will be served during the viewing event, sponsored by the future studies department and the L-5 Society.

key would have a definite impact on the decrease in auto theft," he said.

Holmes stressed the importance of locking the car doors and keeping the windows rolled up when the car is parked.

"The idea is to take away the easy opportunity for the thief to steal your car. The longer the perspective thief has to take to break into the car, the greater the chances of his being caught. Parking in well lit areas is very important," Holmes said.

On campus, it is particularly important to check the car and not leave it parked in the same spot for long periods of time, he said. Moving the car every few days, even if it is only moved a few rows, will help to prevent a possible theft, Holmes said, as thieves tend to watch for cars that are left in parking lots for a long time without being moved.

Holmes also said there are many types of alarms and lock equipment available for sale including tapered door locks, special locks to secure the car hood and trunk and locks that secure the gas pedal and steering wheel.

Students charged with larceny

Frank R. Kozikowski, 19, and Robert A. Brady, Jr., 20, both of John F. Kennedy Tower in Southwest, pleaded not guilty to charges of larceny under $100 and breaking and entering in Hampshire District Court Tuesday. The two were arrested at 1 a.m. Tuesday after allegedly taking various medical supplies from the University Health Services and two music stands from the Fine Arts Center. Their case has been continued to April 27.

Stephen T. Moore, 25, of Amherst, pleaded not guilty to a charge of assault with a dangerous weapon in Hampshire District Court on Monday. Moore was arrested at 2:13 Saturday morning when he allegedly endangered the lives of a Smith College security guard and a Northampton police officer with his car. A pre-trial hearing will be held in the case on April 22.

Aquatic dance at Mt. Holyoke

The Mount Holyoke Lorelyons, a synchronized swimming group, will present its annual spring show tomorrow at 8 p.m. and Sunday at 2 p.m. The exhibition, this year entitled "The Lorelyons Follies," will take place at the Mildred Howard Pool in Kendall Hall on the Mount Holyoke campus.

Highly stylized aquatic dance movements will be set to a wide variety of music, including jazz, classical and swing. Complementing the "Follies" will be costumes, hoola hoops, and other props not often seen in synchronized swimming exhibitions.

"The Lorelyons Follies" is free and open to the public.

★Gorillas

Massachusetts' "D" was exceptional in holding Hobart to a single shot in the final eight minutes of play in the quarter. Still, Garber's charges were not able to get within striking distance of the Division III giant-killers.

"What was really difficult (in the second quarter), was that the things we were doing well were not winding down the score," Garber said. "I kept telling them to just keep working to try and turn it around."

UMass started generating momentum in the second quarter and it snowballed in the third and fourth. Hobart was held to one goal in each of the final three periods while the Gorillas did most of their scoring.

Mass controlled the ball for much of the second half including the final critical minutes when they twice tied the game. Attacker Jeff Knaus scored the sole Bartman goal in the third quarter sandwiched between two Chris Corin tallies. Corin took a perfect feed from Weller early in the third, and brought the Gorillas to within one with his second goal of the day. Corin showed why the Gorillas jumped from twelfth to seventh in the Coaches Poll when he dodged two Hobart defenders and leaped over a third to score his third goal of the day unassisted, once again bringing UMass to within one.

Junior attackman Morgan Mohrman gave UMass its first twinge of victory when at 3:43 in the fourth quarter he brought the game to the first tie. After a Corin attempt bounced off Van Arsdale, Mohrman, perfectly positioned in front of the net, rebounded the ball and slammed it right back at the net and in.

The Bartmen pulled ahead but two minutes later at 8:33, Weller took a pass from middie Ernie Shapiro and tied the score once again. UMass had possession for all but 50 seconds in the remaining six minutes but could not break the tie.

It took only 14 seconds in the sudden death overtime for the Gorillas to do just that. Before the stretching fans could sit back down, Tom Walters had scooped the faceoff and passed to Weller who fed Vosburgh the game-winning goal.

"I was just glad to put it away for everyone," Vosburgh said. "Jimmy's a good shooter, but he's always looking to feed the inside man."

UMass is now 3-0 while giving the Bartmen the first blemish on their now 3-1 record. The Gorillas will face the seocnd in a line of four critical games in one week saturday against Rutgers.

Bruins lose game one

BOSTON (AP) — Tim Young scored with 3:34 gone in overtime to give the Minnesota North Stars a 5-4 victory over the Boston Bruins Wednesday night in the opener of their best-of-five National Hockey League playoff series.

It was the North Stars first win ever in Boston, where they had lost 28 games and tied seven.

Steve Payne, who scored two goals, set up the winning play by digging the puck out of the corner. Boston goalie Rogie Vachon made a skate save of Payne's shot and scrambled to corral the rebound.

But, Young, standing just outside the crease, got control of the puck and slid a backhander into the net.

Minnesota's Jack Carlson sent the game into overtime with a goal at 11:55 of the third period on assists from Bobby Smith and Greg Smith. Vachon stopped one shot, but Carlson pounced on the rebound and lifted the puck over Vachon from about 10 feet out.

That offset Peter McNab's second goal of the game, which had given the Bruins a 4-3 lead at 7:14 of the period. He took a pass from Terry O'Reilly, and his shot was stopped by goalie Gilles Meloche. But, the puck came back out to McNab, and, shooting with almost no angle, he shoveled a backhander unto the net.

Minnesota had charged into a 2-1 lead in the first period on a power play goal by Payne and a goal by Dino Ciccarelli. Don Marcotte got Boston's goal midway through the period.

Netwomen take on PC

The UMass women's tennis team will travel to Providence College Saturday for their third match of the season. It will be the first time that UMass has played Providence.

"This is a very important match for us," coach John Beal said. "We need a good record in our division (II) to be invited to the Easterns in May. Losing to Yale doesn't hurt our chances because they are in division I but winning against a division I team like BC really helps."

UMass started the season off with a 5-4 win over Boston College and a 9-0 loss to Yale University, the number one ranked team in the east. Both were away matches.

"Everyone really put out," Beal said when summming up how the team played against BC. Three of the six singles players won their matches. Number three Chris Carson won in two sets over BC's Linda Ingrazzia 6-2, 7-5. Number four and five singles, Helen Najarian and Paula Natale, defeated their opponents with identical scores of 6-4, 6-1.

"The doubles pulled it through for us," senior captain Joanne Vennochi said. Two of the three doubles matches played were won with the third going to a tie breaker in the third set. Patricia Sullivan and Natale, playing number two doubles for UMass, rolled over their opponents for a 6-1, 6-1 win while Lynn O'Sullivan and Didi Courtright won handily 7-6, 6-1.

"This match was exciting to win," senior Jane Carson said. "We haven't won one against BC in a long time."

Noticeably absent from the lineup is number one singles Barbara Mills. She injured her ankle last fall in a game against BC when she tripped on a ball. As it turned out the ankle was broken and although she allowed it to heal, the ankle was never able to support her properly when she played this winter. So last March Mills had her ankle operated on to remove a piece of dead bone which prevented the ligaments from attaching to the bone. The ankle should be healed in six weeks.

"We dedicated this game to her (Mills)," Beal said. "I think it really made people play harder."

Yale dominated UMass as it was able to win all nine matches. The matches were stopped in the middle due to rain but were continued indoors.

The closest match was turned in by number three doubles Courtright and O'Sullivan against Yale's Janice Dubano and Dede Fox. The match score after the first set was in Yale's favor 6-2 but the second set saw the UMass pair tie at 5-5 only to lose the match 7-5.

"They were playing singles and we were playing doubles," Courtright said. Yale uses only six women for singles and doubles while UMass has 11 women playing. The only exception is Paula Natale who plays number five singles and number two doubles.

In preparing for the two opening season matches the women's tennis team travelled to South Carolina during spring break.

Gorillas edge Hobart in OT

HAT TRICK — Jim Weller flings the second of his three goals, along with three assists, into the Hobart net yesterday. Weller helped the Gorillas beat the Division III Hobart team 10-9 in overtime yesterday on Boyden Field.

Game decided at 0:14

By STEPHEN FRECKER and DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Early in this interdivisional encounter with Hobart College yesterday afternoon, the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team was playing as if it was engaged in a meaningless exercise, not unlike a game in major league baseball's preseason Grapefruit League.

But, as the game wore on, Garber's Gorillas gradually shook themselves out of their sleepwalk. They rallied to tie the score and eventually emerged as victors, 10-9, when attacker Skip Vosburgh stuck one past Hobart cage minder Guy Van Arsdale, 14 seconds into sudden-death overtime, prompting a flood of exuberant Massachusetts fans to swarm the field in a scene reminiscent of many World Series championship game finales.

It didn't take long for Hobart to give a convincing demonstration of why they are currently ranked first in the country in Division III in the National Coaches Poll. Last Saturday, they upset Cornell University, 8-6, and were eager to add a Minuteman scalp to their belts.

Massachusetts' defense proved to be quite porous at the outset as the Bartmen attackers and midfielders scored five unanswered goals, two by junior Bill Sipperly, in a span of seven and a half minutes, to put the Gorillas in a hole early.

"They came out hard in the first quarter and we were having tough luck on our shots," Massachusetts head coach Dick Garber said. "We were tentative at first, going after loose balls, on defense and in shooting.

"I told them all we could do was keep on plugging."

While Massachusetts was attempting to plug up its defense, goalie Jon Benedict (the Bartmen backstops switched at halftime) and the Hobart defense were doing a fine job of keeping the Gorillas at bay. While each team had 14 shots in the quarter, Hobart's attempts were much better placed than the Massachusetts efforts.

A big reason for Hobart's exceptional defensive play was the hustle of its defensemen, the Beef Brigade. Junior Kevin Martin (6'4", 190 lbs), senior Pat Plunkett (6'2", 185 lbs) and Kyle Lydecker (6'1", 200 lbs) combined to effectively turn back the Gorilla offensive attack and forced many bad shots by Massachusetts gunners.

If there was ever a lacrosse coach who wanted an instructional film for his players which showcased the physical side of the game, he should have been at midfield with his movie camera yesterday as bodily contact dominated the action from start to finish.

Pileups and skirmishes for loose balls around the front of each opponent's cage were commonplace occurrences all afternoon. Hobart sophomore defenseman John Ednie effectively shadowed Gorilla leading scorer Jim Weller for much of the first half, bringing to mind the steve Kasper-Wayne Gretsky matchup in the National Hockey League. On two separate occasions in the first half, Ednie sent Weller sprawling in front of the Hobart cage, breaking up golden scoring opportunities.

Play was fairly even in the second quarter, with each defense tightening up considerably. The Gorilla offense flowed much better and Massachusetts outshot the Bartmen 17-7 in the quarter.

Top ranked Chiefs down Spikers

By RANDI J. MARCUS

They had numerous chances in all three games but the UMass men's volleyball team, (third in New England), just couldn't overcome the number one in New England Springfield College team last night losing 16-14, 15-13, 15-13, in the last home game of the season at NOPE gymnasium.

Springfield started out with three quick points but UMass' captain Pat Ryan, who was voted best collegiate volleyball player in New England last month, spiked four in a row to take the lead.

UMass displayed an immense amount of teamwork with a number of set ups by setter Ryan and Steve Geryk, who scored four more to a 7-3 lead.

The Chiefs refused to sit back and allow themselves to be intimidated by the Minutemen and their stand full of roaring fans. The game took a good 50-55 minutes resulting in the Springfield favor.

"We held them through nine rotations," Coach Al Morel said, "but they put the ball down when they wanted to and they really wanted the game."

Springfield took another early lead in the second game, but the Minutemen started humming — they were losing 10-4 one minute and winning 13-10 the next.

Geryk was at his best with killer spikes that literally knocked over a few Chiefs, and Mark Ferrante was sliding all over the floor to save the ball.

UMass hung in there all through the third game as the score went from 4-3 to 8-7, with the Chiefs finally pulling ahead by two.

"Springfield is a five year New England championship winner and you can't take anything away from a team like that," concluded Morel.

Morel and his team are seeded first in the Northeast Collegiate Volleyball League tournament that they will attend Sunday at Bryant College.

Netmen host MIT today

By CLAY BORGLUND
Collegian Staff

UMass men's tennis prepares for action today as the engineers of MIT roll into Amherst. It is the third match of the season for the team and they'll be looking for their first win.

On one hand, there is the netmen's 0-2 record, coming at the expense of Boston College and Tufts University. But on the other side of the coin, these two opponents are the toughest on the Minutemen's schedule this spring. The players seem confident that things will improve, and they hope to sweep their remaining matches, before the New Englands in May.

"Hey, we're going to go 4-0 for the rest of the season," sophomore Paul Jaffe said.

"The hardest part of our schedule is over. We should be able to beat everyone else we face (M.I.T., Central Conneticut, Holy Cross, and Springfield)," senior Mark Huetteman said.

Today's line-up should look something like this: singles, Neil Mackertich, Sergio Streptman and Mark Huetteman will represent the first three seeds. 4-6 will be filled by Matt Modlish, Niek Julian and Paul Jaffe, Mackertich, Modlish, Huetteman, Julian, and Jaffe will also compete in the doubles competition.

The match starts at 3 p.m. on the Boyden tennis courts.

Tuition: Students say 'hikes have to go'

Collegian Staff

More than 200 University of Massachusetts students rallied outside the Student Union Building yesterday afternoon to express concern over impending tuition increases and cuts in financial aid awards.

Greg Tarpinian, a spokesperson for a coalition of several campus organizations which sponsored the rally, said the students' goals are full state funding for state public higher education, no tuition increases, no financial aid cuts, an expansion of the University's affirmative action program, and the establishment of a student representative to the newly-formed state Board of Regents.

"The whole concept of liberty is being attacked...life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," student Mimi Turchinetz said in a speech. "Low cost, high quality education, if they had their way, would be cut. Reagan says only the truly needy need apply. It seems like middle-income students are needy — we're all needy."

Following a series of speeches and short skits representing various characters in Boston and Washington, the students staged a mock funeral for Massachusetts public higher education, complete with a mock coffin and minister.

Todd Clark, the "minister," a 20-year-old junior from Dover, delivered a eulogy, while the students in attendance ceremoniously chanted, "Regents, have mercy on us."

"Save us from the irrationality, the ignorance, the savagery, the utter disregard from the executive offices of the governorship...save us from the business minds who run education as they would run an insurance company; mechanically, without passion, as if a cost-benefit figure can be put on training minds," Clark said.

"Let us pray for the souls of those who know not the death they inflict upon the institutions of public higher education," Clark said to cheerful applause.

Tarpinian said the organization is also planning a rally in Boston Tuesday, when the Board of Regents is expected to vote on a proposed 20 percent tuition increase.

In addition, Tarpinian said, a bus-load of UMass students will be travelling to Washington, D.C., this Monday night to rally with about 2,000 students at the White House and lobby legislators for increased funding for financial aid programs. Students can sign up for either trip at the Undergraduate Student Senate office in the Student Union, he said.

Amidst chants of "Hey hey ho ho, tuition hikes have got to go," rally organizers also distributed the addresses and phone numbers of the individual regents and urged the students and their parents to call them and lobby for increased funding and no tuition hikes.

Knapp: 'Increase is equitable'

By KATHLEEN HOWLEY
Collegian Staff

UMass President David C. Knapp said at a Rotary Club meeting yesterday that he is "worried" about the impact rising-tuition and declining financial aid will have on the University and its students, but added that he did not believe the proposed tuition increases are excessive.

"I still think a 10 percent increase is an equitable increase at this time," he said.

"Knapp said he "understands the concern of the students."

"It's not the tuition increase alone. It's the fact that financial support will diminish," Knapp said.

"It's going to be very difficult. Two-thirds of UMass students are on some kind of financial aid...I've made a prediction that we may lose as many as 3,000 students," Knapp said.

Knapp said he saw a possibility of the void being filled by students who would normally consider attending private colleges but could not afford the rising tuitions there.

"One can see that the impact might lead to more transfers from private institutions to public institutions.

"I cannot help but be worried about the net loss and negative impact that would have on the young people of the commonwealth," he said.

Knapp said Gov. Edward J. King initiated the tuition increases; the Board of Regents "are just pursuing it."

"The Governor wrote into the budget an increase in tuition revenues of $12 million plus," Knapp said.

Knapp also said he approved of King's appointment to the Board of Trustees.

"I think we've got a good board. What its role will be I think will be a revolving issue," Knapp said.

Knapp said a Massachusetts Society of Professors' contract, which includes a six percent pay increase, has not yet been acted on.

"I expect...it will be through the general court by the end of this week or the beginning of next week," he said.

Knapp said there was no "union busting"

Ex-CIA deputy attacks U.S. arms policy

By TODD BUCHANAN
Special to the Collegian

Former CIA Deputy Director Herbert Scoville said the United States arms control negotiations are too slow, and the U.S. must exercise unilateral restraint in its nuclear weapons policy.

"I hate to use 'unilateral'," Scoville said at Hampshire College on Wednesday night. "I prefer to use 'national' because the other is such a dirty word in American politics."

"Even if we didn't build another nuclear weapon, we would have a good enough deterrent to last the next twenty years," said Scoville, who was with the CIA from 1955-63 before joining the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, where he worked until 1969.

Scoville, assistant director of scientific intelligence while at the CIA, criticized talk in the U.S. of fighting, surviving, and winning a nuclear war.

"There will be no winners, and very few survivors," he said. "The people who go around talking about how you can win and survive a nuclear war just don't know what they're talking about."

"Of course this is all justified by assertions that the Russians plan to fight and win a nuclear war. But a Russian general wouldn't be a Russian general if he didn't promise to win a nuclear war. I frankly do not think they talk about it as much as we do," Scoville said.

Scoville said the Mount St. Helens eruption last year was roughly equivalent to a ten-megaton blast, and if the ash that spread as far as the northeast had been a radioactive fallout, it would have been deadly. Nuclear war would involve thousands of megatons, Scoville said.

Scoville is currently preparing a book on the MX missile, which he attacked as a provocative weapon.

"The concept that te Soviets are going to have silo-killers so we must too is the ultimate in mindless military thinking," he said.

Silo-killers are missiles whose warheads have enough combined yield and accuracy to destroy a silo where enemy missiles are stored.

Scoville said targeting Soviet missiles would make the Soviets more prone to launch an attack first in a crisis. "Arms policy should try to restrain this tendency, not increase the incentives for starting war," he said.

Scoville said a freeze on nuclear weapons by the U.S. and the U.S.S.R., which students at Hampshire and Amherst Colleges as well as the University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Student Senate will vote on this month, would be verifiable.

"It is easier to verify a blanket ban on something like testing than to verify restrictions on certain types of testing, as we must do in the case of SALT," said Scoville.

Voters disappointed in enactment of Prop. 2½

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)—A Harvard University study released yesterday said that Massachusetts voters expected more efficient government - not massive service cuts - when they overwhelmingly endorsed Proposition 2½ last fall.

The poll of 1,561 state residents, conducted during a two-week period following passage of the tax-cutting measure, found only 35 percent of those who voted for Proposition 2½ thought the law would force cutbacks in municipal services used by their households.

While 61 percent of those surveyed expected an increase in higher state income taxes and 68 percent anticipated higher sales taxes, 61 percent of the supporters thought their overall tax burden would be lower under the law.

Proposition 2½ limits taxes to 2.5 percent of a property's fair market value. State officials estimate the law will cost towns and cities between $560 million and $600 million in tax revenue.

Many municipalities have responded to the tax reduction by cutting personnel and services. An Associated Press survey of the state's 351 cities and towns found that officials plan to lay off 20,000 municipal employees including 9,100 teachers.

Services such as water and sewer systems will cost homeowners more money. In some cases, snow plowing and free garbage pickup will be ended.

The half-hour telephone surveys by Lieberman Research Suburban Inc. were interpreted by Helen F. Ladd and Julie Boatright Wilson, assistant professors at the Kennedy School of Government.

They said they found the survey's sampling closely matched the vote on the ballot question, which passed 59 percent to 41 percent. Fifty-eight percent of those surveyed said they voted for the measure and 42 percent said they voted no.

The survey found that 28 percent of those who voted for the measure though police protection would be cutback, and 28 percent said they thought fire protection would suffer.

Most supporters though the cuts would come in areas like welfare, adult education, and recreation programs. Close to 90 percent of those polled said they wanted to maintain the same level of police and fire protection and other basic municipal services.

Pollsters found an unflattering opinion of public officials. Eighty-eight percent of all polled said they thought curruption is common in state government, and 63 percent said corruption existed in local government. A majority of all those believed there was room for cuts in local and state governments.

Shuttle poised for lift-off

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL and FRED C. HOFFMAN
Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — On the eve of its maiden voyage, the test shuttle Columbia was poised for flight Thursday on moon-launch pad 39A, an untried ship of the future ready to return Americans to space.

Two astronauts who will stake their lives Friday on its success went to sleep at midafternoon Thursday after a final telephone farewell to their families. Relaxed and primed to fly, they took a call from Vice President George Bush and told him they are ready to go and "skies are clear."

At the same time, the countdown went into its climactic hours.

Meanwhile, in Washington, although U.S. officials have stressed civilian aspects of the space shuttle, the launch of the winged Columbia is vitally important to America's security network.

By the mid-1980s, defense officials predict, the United States will be nearly totally dependent on the manned shuttle for placing satellites into orbit to spy on military developments inside the Soviet

Regan rejects tax proposal as 'less than half a loaf'

WASHINGTON (AP)—The chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee unveiled yesterday a tax package which jettisons President Reagan's multiyear cuts in favor of a onetime slash aimed at greater relief for low- and middle-income Americans.

The administration promptly rejected the proposal.

Treasury Secretary Donald Regan said the president looked upon the plan, advanced by Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., as "less than half a loaf." He declared also that "a one-year bill will not suffice to do the job that we want."

Boston police and fire depts. to be cut by 400 today

BOSTON (AP) — Friday is doomsday for 400 Boston police and firefighters. Proposition 2½, the state's tax-cutting law, will claim their jobs and close seven police stations and three fire stations in the first of a series of cuts that could end 5,000 city jobs.

The cuts are the latest results of a measure approved by Massachusetts voters last November that limits taxes to 2.5 percent of a property's fair market price.

Fugitive pig cornered in mall by officer and custodian

(AP)—A young pig, coated with grease, led police Sgt. Gerald Marino and two employees of a local shopping mall on a slippery 15-minute chase through sqeeling shoppers who gather to watch the roundup.

"We had three men down on the floor yelling, 'Sooee, sooee,' " Brunswick Square Mall spokesman James Scanlon said. "Everybody loved the pig but who knew how to catch it?"

Police said the animal apparently was turned loose Tuesday night in the mall by pranksters.

Marino, aided by maintenance supervisor Victor Grasso and maintenance worker Stanley Formiak, finally cornered the porker in the backroom of a store when it got stuck under a sink.

Women talk of future in publishing

By FRAN BASCHE
Collegian Staff

Women considering a career in publishing should steer clear of employment agencies and personnel offices and ignore the notion that a secretarial position is the only way to get started, a former associate editor from McCalls Magazine told about 30 women yesterday.

"You don't have to be a secretary unless you believe there are no jobs," said Lori Trager, a University of Massachusetts student who also worked for Harcourt, Brace and Jovanovich. Trager entered the New York publishing industry in 1976, after attending Mt. Holyoke College, and is finishing her undergraduate degree in journalistic studies and science.

She said many women take jobs as "editorial assistants," which are nothing more than glorified secretaries because they are told it is the only way to get in the business, she said. The discussion on "Women in Publishing was sponsored by the Honors Department.

The fascination of working in the publishing industry "will carry you through for a while," but a year as a secretary "can burn you out."

One of the "tactics" Trager suggested for entering publishing is getting a position as a copy editor. She said experience on publications and internships while in school will qualify students for positions when they graduate.

Another foot in the door is in the procurement department of a publishing firm, which solicits manuscripts and articles for books and magazines. Promotion in publishing is "dull," but will provide experience while building a portfolio, she said.

Trager also said networking among women in the industry will aid in getting a job and moving ahead. Many women in middle management positions, however, "would like to help you but they're struggling themselves," she said. Other women have been struggling against sex discrimination for so long that once they make it to a high level position, they make it harder for the people who work under them to move up, she said.

"If you do take a secretarial job, take it with a person who is going to teach you. It's a tradeoff," Trager said.

Employment agencies are an unnecessary step in getting a position, as are personnel directors. Trager advised to go directly to the firm, but said to "check them out as carefully as they check you out," before applying.

Also speaking at the lecture and discussion program was Patty McGill, who addressed advertising. "You're not talking about ethics or morality, you're talking about money," she said.

McGill, who is on the production and advertising staff of the Valley Women's Voice, said advertising offers the best money in the fields of newspaper, magazines and book publishing.

Marathon to help runaways

By JEAN ZIMMER
Collegian Correspondent

The New York City Police Department estimates that there are at least 20,000 runaway children under 16 in New York City. More than half are involved in the $1.5 billion sex industry that flourishes in the Manhattan area.

Last year over 18,000 youths, most of whom were involved in prostitution and pornography rings, received food, shelter, and protection at Father Bruce Ritter's Covenant House, located in the heart of New York City.

Currently, the Newman Club, a Catholic youth organization affiliated with the Newman Center, located on the University of Massachusetts at Amherst campus, is making final preparations for over 400 entrants who are expected to compete in the second annual Run for Ritter marathon this Saturday at 11 a.m.

The race has been advertised throughout the Five College Area as well as in national running magazines. To date, entrants have registered from as far away as Connecticut and New York, and the Newman Club has collected over $1500 from entry fees alone to benefit Father Ritter's Covenant House.

The Covenant House is a non-profit haven for runaway children and teens. It is open 24 hours a day and operates under the premise that no young person is ever turned away.

If volunteer support is any indication, the sense of community that has arisen within the past few months has been an important factor in the success of the planning for this year's marathon, said chairpersons of the event, Diane Rezendes and Barry Linehan.

People who never ran before are training to get in shape for the race, local establishments have made generous donations, and Newman Center priests have been especially supportive in helping with publicity and use of the building's facilities, Rezendes said.

"I'm really impressed with the number of people involved and their commitment," Linehan said. "A lot of people consider this generation of college students to be apathetic, but when you have something worthwhile to be involved in, people are ready. I was satisfied to see that people really care."

Peloton Sports of Northampton is joining a number of other local establishments in sponsoring the race. Peloton has donated a pair of running shoes to be awarded along with a trophy to the first finisher in the men's, women's, and master's (over 40) divisions.

Those wishing to compete should report to the Boyden side of the Alumni Stadium Track tomorrow morning and sign in.

Pedestrians may be hazardous to grass

By M.W. MULCAHY
Collegian Correspondent

Thirty years ago the University of Massachusetts consisted of acres of beautiful landscape with scattered buildings, nothing like the small asphalt city it is today.

"Now when people visit the campus, it looks like a dump," said Dr. Vincent Detheir, Chairman of the Chancellor's Commission on Civility and Human Relations.

Detheir attributes this to vandalism, trash, and destruction of grass and shrubery.

The destruction of grass and shrubery?

"People walking on the grass is a big problem on this campus," Detheir explained.

Dr. William Rosenau, who teaches UMass classes in soild fertility said that campus pedestrian traffic is killing grass, as well as hurting many trees.

"People take a short cut across the grass to save themselves some steps, and next thing you know you have a trodden path. Then Physical Plant paves the pathway and what was an oxygen-producing area is now gone," Rosenau said.

Many people scoff at the idea of taking a few extra steps just to preserve an area of grass, Rosenau said.

"A straight line is the shortest distance between two points. But I wish that their concern for biology and the aesthetic environment was as their devotion to that geometry," he said.

Dr. Seymour Shapiro, a UMass botany professor said he even laughingly tells his students that if he sees them walking on the grass he'll drop their average by half a grade.

"I also tell them that if they catch me walking on the grass I'll raise their grade," Shapiro said.

Grass is able to take some traffic, but DON'T TREAD ON ME — Pedestrian traffic quickly wears down grass planted next to paved pathways, say University officials. Campus Center steps leading to the outdoor patio are in the background.

pedestrians cannot continue to make a path day after day or it will compact the soil and destroy the plant life, Shapiro said.

"If you look at it, you don't save that much time or energy," Shapiro added.

Grass is not the only plant life effected. Many trees including the rare Japanese Elm Tree near Goodell, are suffering due to pedestrian traffic, Rosenau said.

"Of course an equally serious problem is the Physical Plant trucks driving on the lawns," Shapiro said, "and something has to be done about that too."

"What we need is a two-pronged approach to this problem," Detheir said. "First, we need Physical Plant to work on the physical beautification of the campus, and then we need an awareness campaign aimed at people who are insensitive to the cause."

"It has to be a continuous campaign that will advertise that this is our campus and we have to keep it beautiful," Detheir added.

As for the physical beautification of the campus, Detheir made three suggestions to the commission's Physical Environment Panel last April. None of the suggestions has been acted on yet.

(1) The use of empty fifty-five gallon drums from the Chemistry, Zoology, and other lab stock rooms as trash recepticals painted by some student group.

(2) Put walks where they need to go and cover other areas with grass seed or sod.

(3) Force UMass trucks to stay off the sod.

"If the Administration says they can't afford the cost then maybe they should reorganize their priorities," Detheir added. "After some complaints they found money to refinish the tennis courts. Maybe that's what it takes."

BOG proposes student survey on renovations

By GREG VOLPE
Collegian Staff

Amidst rising concern among University students over Campus Center and Student Union renovations, the Campus Center Board of Governors discussed last night a proposed student telephone survey regarding past and present administrative renovations.

The survey, still in its planning stages by Board members and Campus Center managers, will be conducted by the Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office (SAREO), and will be administered to approximately 250 students.

Board members said they hoped the survey results would be completed by the end of this month.

Brian DeLancey, BOG chairman, said he hopes the survey will solicit "reactions" that will be useful to the board in acting on future as well as past renovations.

"The survey is one way in which we can start setting the priorities in the Campus Center. It will let us act on the renovations," he said.

The survey's purpose, DeLancey said, will be to obtain student reaction on three major areas of renovations. In addition to past and presently-proposed renovations to the Campus Center and Student Union, students will be able to recommend any alternative renovations.

The concern of several board members and Campus Center managers over the wording of questions pertaining to the mini-store renovations has caused a delay in the administration of the survey.

Police arrest man in dining commons burglary

Shawn D. Britt, 18, of Amherst, was arrested at 1:08 a.m. yesterday on charges of breaking and entering, larceny in a building, and larceny under $100 by University of Massachusetts police.

Brett was arrested for allegedly stealing five packs of cigarettes and a box of tea bags from the Worcester Dining Commons. Police arrested him as he was coming out of the building. Britt entered the building through an open door police said.

Police also received a report of vandalism estimated at $700 to a 1979 Ford parked in lot 42 at 4:17 p.m. yesterday. The windshield was cracked, the passenger door dented, right headlight smashed and the antenna bent, they said.

The theft of two speakers, 10 tapes, and a gym bag containing a tennis racket, all valued at $300, from a car parked in lot 50, was reported to police at 8:39 a.m. yesterday. The window of the 1976 Triumph was smashed in the incident, they said.

A hit and run accident was reported to police at 11:23 a.m. Wednesday in lot 65. A 1972 Volvo received $275 damage in the incident, police said. The incident is under investigation.

In another incident, an opal necklace, diamond earrings, other jewelry and a down jacket, valued at $720 were reported stolen from an office in the Hills North building at 7 p.m. Wednesday, police said.

Police also received a report of vandalism to the water tower in the Orchard Hill Residential Area at 5:57 a.m. yesterday. A yellow stripe of paint was reported near the ladder. Police said a can of paint had apparently been tipped and ran down the side of the tower.

Wimpout tournament offers $500 prize

By BRIAN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

From across the nation, masters and beginners of the game Cosmic Wimpout will arrive this weekend to take part in the single most important day on a Wimpout player's calendar.

Tomorrow, starting between 11 a.m. and 2 p.m., Cosmic Wimpout Incorporated will hold the sixth annual Global Tournament, attracting players as far away as Sweden to the $500 first prize at the University of Massachusetts' Hatch cafeteria, spokesman for Cosmic Wimpout Incorporated, who would only be identified as "Undertow," said.

The day promises to be more than a tournament, however. For the admission price of $3, participants will be able to attend all of the day's activities, including a special showing of "Reefer Madness" and the music of Martian Highway and, in a premier engagement in the Valley, Max Creek, Undertow said.

"The day is planned to be a party with a tournament thrown in," "Stoney", or Neal Stone, a Wimpout spokesman, said.

Beginners are especially urged to attend this year's tournament; last year a beginner made it to the finals and the year before a novice of only a few hours took the whole day, Undertow said.

Participants and spectators will also be invited to take part in the Inverse Reality Film festival, where, instead of watching a film, the audience become part of one, Undertow said.

Movies of past tournaments, as well as future tournaments, are planned to be put together to make a feature length motion picture, Undertow said.

A special door prize of a two and a half hour ride in a hot air balloon will also be awarded to someone arriving before 5 p.m., as well as various prizes being awarded throughout the day, Undertow said.

Contestants are urged not to play their friends in the first round.

"By playing your friends you guarantee eliminating three of them," he said.

Undertow asked that all participants refrain from plastering the walls with Wimpout stickers because the Building Operations of the Campus Center finds them hard to remove.

Retire No. 24 Boob's Friends Ask

By KAREN MARIE THOMAS
Black Affairs Staff

"I remember the game at the cage," said Jim Parsons, a 1978 UMass grad. "It was against Rhode Island and it was particularly rough. I mean, guys were belting each other around out there. At one point, (former URI player) Sly Williams (now playing professionally with the New York Knicks) squared off with (former UMass player) Mark Haymore and you just knew somebody was going to get hurt.

"There was a big circle of players and conches and refs gathered in the court and everybody was just waiting for the first punch to be thrown. All of a sudden, Bobbie (Eldridge) comes creeping out of the pack, walks about 10 feet to the side of the court and holds the ball up as if to ask the crowd 'What is this bullshit? I wanna play ball.' Everybody just started clapping. He cut the tension in half. Even all the guys who were going to fight turned around and looked at Eldridge. He was unreal."

Parsons' memory strikes an unfamiliar chord with most current UMass students. There are no lines in the cold an hour before game time outside the Cage. There isn't any deafening roar as the Minutemen score or merely run out on the court to warm up. The magic of the Cage is gone, its spirit and life has left, leaving only memories of its stars: the Doctor, Skinner, Pyatt, Town, Claiborne and a man called Boob.

He use to stand in the middle of the court with a basketball tucked inside his shirt, controlling the court as his kingdom.

Alex "Boob" Eldridge loved the life of the Cage. He use to stand in the middle of the court with a basketball tucked inside his shirt, controlling the court as his kingdom. Directing the offense, yelling at the crowd and teasing opponents, he was the spirit of the game.

And then the unbelievable happened.

Last June, at the age of 24, Eldridge lost his life from a heart disorder.

But his friends remember.

Seated at a table in the Campus Center Concourse, next to a sign that reads "Retire Alex Eldridge's number", former UMass student Mary Custard said, "We are trying to honor Boob for his dedication to basketball by retiring his number. We want people to recognize what he did on the basketball court."

Custard and a group of friends are petitioning Frank McInerney, head of the Athletics/Intramurals Department to retire Eldridge's number 24.

"So far we have 1,000 signatures. We want to have 2,000 before the fashion show," said Custard.

The group has also set up a scholarship fund in Eldridge's name. The April 24 fashion show proceeds will go into this fund. The group organized a tribute to Eldridge at halftime during a February UMass game. The Miller Brewing Company donated $100 to the scholarship fund.

"Several people have donated money," Custard said. "Many didn't even know him, they're just helping out."

The scholarship will be available for any freshman exhibiting financial need this fall.

According to the 1980-81 Massachusetts Basketball, Eldridge was the only player in UMass basketball history to have been the seasonal leader in a statistical category for four straight years. From 1975-79 he led UMass in assists.

As a student bends down to sign the petition, Custard said "To me he was a good person and a good friend. You don't forget that."

Retarded man found Task Force investigating

ATLANTA (AP) — The body of a black male was found Thursday in an abandoned apartment building in Atlanta, where 22 other young blacks have been slain, and officials quickly identified the victim as a retarded man who disappeared last week.

Public Safety Commissioner Lee Brown said the body was identified Thursday afternoon as that of 20-year-old Larry Rogers.

Brown, who rushed to the northwest Atlanta apartment where the body was found, said he did not know the cause of death, but said "we will carry the case as a homicide, obviously."

An ambulance driver told reporters the victim was clad in a T-shirt, underwear and shorts. He wore no shoes, said the driver, who asked not to be identified.

Fulton County Chief Medical Examiner Robert Stivers said the body was identified shortly after it arrived at the morgue. He said the autopsy had begun but added it will "take us a while."

The body was found in a ground-floor apartment at about 11:30 a.m. by officers investigating a car abandoned nearby, Brown said. The apartment building was boarded up, and its yard was strewn with old tires and other litter.

It was the first body of a young black to have been found inside a building since the remains of 9-year-old Yusef Bell were found in an abandoned school on Nov. 8, 1979.

Asked if any evidence had been found that might help track down the killer, Brown said, "It would be premature to make any comment on evidence."

Brown would not comment on whether there were any wounds on the body or how long it had been in the abandoned apartment. He also refused to say whether Rogers might have been killed somewhere else and dumped in the apartment.

Brown said police are still anxious to learn the whereabouts of a man in a composite drawing released Tuesday.

"We are greatly concerned about the identity of the man in the composite," he said. "We again request that the person, whoever he may be, come to the task force headquarters."

In addition to the 23 slayings since July 1979, a special police task force is also investigating the disappearances of two black youths — 10-year-old Darron Glass, who vanished last September and 15-year-old Joseph Bell, last seen March 2.

Before his body was found, the task force had been seeking Rogers, last seen March 30 getting into a station wagon.

Rogers is the second adult whose case has been assigned to the task force. Both Rogers and the other adult, 21-year-old Eddie "Bubba" Duncan, whose body was found in the Chattahoochee River last week, have been described by police as small in size and mentally retarded.

Brown said the abandoned car was not linked to the body found Thursday. The car, a green 1972 sedan, had no tires.

Blue Wall keeps name after campus-wide contest

The University of Massachusetts Committee to Rename The Blue Wall announced yesterday the bar will retain its present name, as a result of the campus-wide student contest that took place last week.

The Blue Wall name, one among nine which were entered on the committee's ballot, received over 50 percent of the vote by University students. In capturing 76 out of the total 134 votes cast, the Blue Wall name considerably beat "The Wall," with 22 votes, and the "Bedrock Cafe" with 15.

Committee member Greg Dennis said that although there will be no Blue Wall "grand opening," which would have occured if a new name was selected, the vote was still important.

"The decision to retain the present name was definitely anti-climatic, but the committee felt the vote reflected the importance of students getting what they want,' he said.

The contest, which was the second one to occur within a month, invalidated the initial Blue Wall renaming contest because of alleged "overstuffing" of the ballot boxes.

Dennis said the committee prevented this in the recent contest because a UMass student identification number was required before a student could vote.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

SM columnist seeks relief from Pioneer Valley Attitude

Steve Masse

I remember the first time I read Valley Advocate personals. I was bothered, intimidated, and not at all entertained. Now, a few years later, I am quite entertained, perhaps jaded. Whoever might argue that the public is not influenced by the press is obviously ignoring good evidence that a steady diet of anything is going to make its mark.

For many years the Advocate has published its personals column, and I'd guess that column is the strongest attraction in the entire tabloid, followed closely by club and movie listings. Advertisers are wise to buy space in this free paper, aware of its wide circulation. They know their loyalty to the "Average Crowd" of western Massachusetts. It's quite doubtful advertisers would buy space out of loyalty to the Advocate's socio-political stance.

My favorite personals are not always the gay ads, for they have somehow lost their novelty for me. Even the more unusual gay ads hardly hit me any more. (GM seeks GM for SM, good times, photography, needs it bad, just like home. Blood is the ultimate rush. Fats, fems and toothless are top desirability. Marriage possible.) It is instead the sincere "straight" ads that grab me lately, personals which come from the elusive group of unfortunates who have fallen thoroughly into the Pioneer Valley Mentality. These entertaining souls, if they really exist, seem to have become Amherst Citizens by overassociation with the so-called ideals of modern "progressivism."

Take for example:

SJF (Straight Jewish Female), working-class, vegetarian feminist seeks non-sexist, SJM veggie for sounding-board, possible pot-luck dinner, and to help hand out leaflets.

SWM, I am incarcerated, serving a double sentence as political prisoner in fraud/perjury case of my boss, the former Zebulon County Clerk of Illicit Revenue, for whom I worked four years. I swallowed his rap, got six years for extortion. He was aquitted, divorced his wife and married my former lover, moved to southern Cal., where he is now making films. I would like to meet an upwardly mobile, educated but domestic young woman (20-24) who would like to marry blind for the adventure of her life. I'm out of here in just four years, which will make me 29, after which I will also move to southern Cal. and institute my new religion which I will call the Church of Forgiveness.

WANTED: Bi-couple for couple-switching. We want to learn new sex trips we haven't tried yet, if there are any.

ENGL. Major seeks ENGIN. Major for arguments and defensiveness, and all-around fun.

UM Hatch preppy seeks same for Sat. nite party hopping, hanging around and drinking beer, getting picked up, playing frisbee Sunday afternoon and "talking about it."

MY DOG has a red bandana, can beg, sit, sing, shake your dog's hand. Seeks female collie or setter for whatever.

Five-College Athletic Club sponsoring handicap ski race at Mt. Tom. All welcome. Sign up now! (This ad repeated six times under six categories, including "For Sale.")

Tuesday a friend told me about an interesting conversation he overheard. Two guys were talking about how Amherst was full of various factions and sects, and cults and minorities and brigades and fronts. One said something in complaint against Amherst progressivism, and the other answered something like, "Amherst is just that way. You don't have to stay here." It's interesting how in the 1960's, one would often hear, "America — love it or leave it," and now in the 1980's, one is so likely to hear, "Amherst, love it or leave it."

The Pioneer Valley Attitude seems all-pervasive. We can't get away from it. It's all the way down into the most intimate lives of individuals. Think about it! People are actually writing this attitude into their ads, and even the ads themselves are part of the same mentality.

I still wonder how many of the personals are really on the level. I once answered a young woman's ad, to see if she existed and to allay my prejudices about what type of people would advertise. I'm still waiting for an answer after two years. (Maybe she got a lot of replies.) Thus I must admit that even I, hardheaded freethinker that I am, have been swayed by the media. By some miracle, I never went so far as to write a personal for the Advocate. I suppose if I ever did place one, it would likely read: Male person seeks.

Steve Masse is a Collegian columnist.

Memorable or dangerous?

On the night of April 2, at 10:30 I found a young man lying on the ground tied by his wrists to the trunk of a tree outside of Hills South. The rope that linked this man's wrists was also wrapped around the back of his neck. He had no shoes or socks on even though the temperature could not have been higher than 45 degrees. Moreover, this young man was immobile except for those few moments when he would raise his head to be ill. He could not respond to my questions about who he was or why he was tied to the tree.

As the ambulance arrived at this scene, several other young men appeared and from them I learned, to my horror, that the man I found was a pledge and had been tied to the tree by members of his fraternity, Beta Kappa Phi. I do not understand how this could be done to a person who was barely conscious. I have written this letter to ask the members of Beta Kappa Phi whether they are able to distinguish between a hazing ritual that is memorable but innocuous and one that is macabre, dangerous, and perverse.

Energy event unfair

On March 14, 1981 I attended an energy symposium at Mount Holyoke College. The event disappointed me for two reasons.

One, the energy alternatives and programs presented at the event were generated from a centralized, utility-run perspective. Wide scale application of safe, decentralized, and renewable energy alternatives was not presented at the event.

Second, the event did not intend to critically discuss the positive and negative aspects of the energy alternatives. The alternatives were merely presented. Information on nuclear economics, nuclear waste disposal, hazards of uranium mining, etc., were ordered removed from the event director. The material, which presented a valid argument against the nuclear alternative, was considered to be biased information.

Yes, we need energy education. But, the type we must have should present positive and negative aspects of as many alternatives as we can think of. We need speakers and events which stimulate critical discussion of the alternatives, ensuring the alternatives we choose will be well thought out and reflect decisions which provide for the safety as well as the energy we need for a prosperous future.

Basic legal principles

The Legal Services Office has over the years filed a few lawsuits against the University to protect the rights of students. In these cases, as in all others we handle, we realize there are costs both to students and the administration if court action is necessary. This is why we pursue litigation only as a last resort. We negotiate before a suit is filed.

The fundamental role of the Legal Services Office is to protect students' constitutional right of access to the courts. In University cases, we must be sure that the constitutional and other legal rights of students are protected against illegal administrative action.

The U.S. Constitution is the most sacred law of this land. The protection of freedoms guaranteed by the Bill of Rights is a battle that has been going on for nearly 200 years. Where necessary, the obligations of lawyers to their clients may mean that this office will sue the University as a last resort to gain redress for student grievances. We will fulfill our ethical duty to advocate on behalf of our student clients in such matters as police misconduct, seeking course and teacher evaluations, fighting handicap discrimination, sexual harassment, and racial bias. We seek to get administrators to follow state and federal laws in disciplinary proceedings and administrative withdrawal cases.

Whenever this office finds it necessary to pursue court action, it is in furtherance of the basic principle that students' rights must be protected, and because our office and the parties involved have been unable to agree on an appropriate solution, making it necessary to pursue students' legal remedies.

Well done but...

First, I'd like to say I thought the March 16 issue of your arts magazine, the other voice, was exceptionally well-produced. The cover concept "about people" and the nice mixture of local versus universal themes was particularly impressive. Just one suggestion, from one formerly involved with said rag — can that pretentious lower casing style of the headlines. It doesn't carry well on newsprint.

Secondly, editor Huffman did a nice job arranging his record reviews, which were among the best I've seen him write. But tell me Rob, where do you get off calling Iam McLagan's Bump In The Night "stonier than anything Mick & Co. have done in years"? Don't tell me you're one of those silly people who thinks life came to a jammed turnstyle after "Brown Sugar"? I know Bump has a sorta "sound" to it, but I can think of nicer ways to compare it than slagging the Stones. Update your perspective about where the Glimmer Twins stand, Rob, with a clever little thinkpiece Lester Bangs wrote this summer ("The Stones Cruise on Eighth Street," The Village Voice, July 23-29, 1980).

Lastly, I've got to satisfy my pituatary gland. Tell me — is Steve Winniman the same person who used to be Steve Winniman, the Henry Wadsworth Longmeadow of the Collegian? And can you send me an 8x10 glossy of him for my pillow?

Union, for early warning against surprise missile attack, for military communications, navigation and weather forecasting.

No longer will such military satellites be sent aloft aboard rockets fired from Earth. However, as a hedge against possible further slippages in the shuttle program, the Pentagon has ordered some additional Titan III rockets to serve as backup boosters.

In a summary of the Pentagon's expectations of dividends from the space shuttle, former Defense Secretary Harold Brown told Congress last year that scientists forecast "reduced launch costs, increased reliability, increased weight and volume for our payloads," and greater flexibility.

"We are going to be able to recover our spacecraft from low orbit, and to exploit man's capabilities in space for conducting experiments, and perhaps in interacting with operational systems," Brown said.

"Eventually, we may perform on-orbit servicing of spacecraft and assemble large structures in space."

The first defense-related experiments aboard the space shuttle are not due until the fourth mission next April, according to present planning.

One key experiment will relate to American research looking toward development of laser weapons in space.

The Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency reported to Congress last month that these experiments, code-named "Talon Gold," will be pointed toward achieving significant improvements in precise direction of laser beams so that they will be effective in space.

In other business, William Harris, Campus Center director, presented to the board a planned proposal to relocate the Campus Center information desk.

The plan, which is estimated to cost around $15,000, would move the desk from its present location next to the entrance of the Blue Wall to a location across from concourse elevators.

Harris, who said the proposal is in its planning stages, said the reason for moving the desk is to "advert confusion" caused by its present location.

"We feel the move will be better for the people who need it most. People who come from the bus service or Campus Center garage will be able to see the information desk right off, instead of looking for it," he said.

Reviews: Life in the Nuclear Battery Age'

Mockingbird (Bantam)
By Walter Tevis

By DONALD J. IVAS
Collegian Correspondent

Mockingbird, the latest novel by Walter Tevis, author of The Hustler and The Man Who Fell to Earth, is set in a frighteningly familiar world of the future. When a man of Tevis's genius writes of a future world where reading, writing, and relationships are forgotten and illegal; where the guiding principles are privacy and inward fulfillment, one should take heed.

The story revolves around Mary Lou, the last unprogrammed and fertile female left on earth, and Paul Bentley, a college professor who teaches courses in "Ignoring the Rest of the World" and "Fantasizing to Orgasm," in a "Thinker Dormitory."

The scenario is the year 2467 on the east coast of what is left of North America after the "Death of Oil Age," "The Energy Wars," and currently the "Nuclear Battery Age." I am not a science-fiction aficionado, but as I read Mockingbird I realized that this future shock could very well be a logical conclusion to the age we are now surviving.

The total population on earth was about three million people according to Population Control, which was run by Spofforth, the last of a series of robots designated Make Nine. This sexless robot was the strongest and most intelligent creature devised by man, programmed to stay alive and serve mankind until humans were extinct.

For the last hundred years, sopors (Quaaludes) with a fertility-ingibiting agent were dispensed freely and openly to the remaining population by Population Control. People were being programmed for Privacy and Mandatory Politeness in either a "Thinker Dormitory" or "Worker Dormitory."

Paul Bentley, one of the heroes of the story, inadvertently learns how to read and he travels to New York and meets Mary Lou. They embark on a series of adventures and discover that love and the written word break the grip of vacancy created by programming, drugs and societal aphorisms: "Don't ask -- relax" and "Quick Sex is Best."

This might sound as if Tevis is on a moral crusade, but on the contrary, he is demonstrating the parody of humanity which technology can create. As Bentley teaches himself, through searching the ruins of New York University library he says, "The automobile prepared the way for the more profound, more inward dependencies upon television and the robots, and finally, the ultimate and predictable conclusion to all of it: the perfection of the chemistry of the mind."

Tevis has said, "I am in favor of human beings getting in touch with the world and with other people." Much of Mockingbird is autobiographical. Several years of Tevis's childhood were spent in a hospital where he was tranquilized daily for diseases never proven. This passive existence was the seed for Mockingbird.

A film adaptation of Mockingbird is now in the works for PBS. It is reportedly the most expensive PBS will have ever shown.

Burgess further asserts his literary status

Earthly Powers (Simon and Schuster)
By Anthony Burgess

By LYNN M. RZESZUT
Collegian Correspondent

To say that I was moved by Earthly Powers, Anthony Burgess's latest novel, would be an understatement. To say that I was enthralled would be a hollow representation. To say I am already re-reading this magnificent tome comes closer to the sentiments of awe and respect that this work inspires.

Touted as 10 years in the making, Power is the twenty-second piece of fiction written by Burgess, who is best known for his science-fiction chiller, A Clockwork Orange. If the book was, indeed, 10 years in the writing, I am torn between: "Why couldn't Burgess have hurried?" and "It was well worth the wait!"

Narrated by the personage of Kenneth Marchal Toomey, a famed British novelist, the novel explores the career and times of a man as seen through the hindsight of his 81 years. We are invited to explore the literary and artistic world of pre-World War I up to, presumably, the early 1970's. There are incidental celebrities, such as James Joyce, but the bottom line turns on the meeting of Toomey and his future brothers-in-law, Domenico, a musician, and Carlo, a priest who will become Pope.

Throughout the flashbacks, the question on Toomey's mind is: "Should Carlo become a saint?" There was a child in

Books

Chicago, witchcraft in Malay, exorcisms, gambler's own luck. There was religious courage and conviction, shown to both Hitler and Mussolini during World War II. And there is the question of Toomey's own uncertain religion.

All in all, the global sweep of this novel, the apparent mastery of both method and the English language (not to mention a good smattering of a number of others) and the momentum which kept me turning pages until the wee hours of more than one morning, convinced me that Anthony Burgess should take his place among the great British writers, and that Earthly Powers should be quickly elevated to its deserved status of masterpiece.

involved in the contract negotiations.

Knapp escaped a proposed vote of no-confidence from the Faculty Senate last Thursday over the inclusion of money in the University budget for a pay raise for non-union professional employees before the money was allocated by the legislature. The raise would come before new union contracts were approved by the legislature.

Faculty representative to the Board of Trustees Barney Frank decided not to introduce the censure motion after he said Knapp agreed to review the pay increase with the three UMass chancellors.

"There are 900 non-unionized employees on this campus. The Board of Trustees said they should receive parity with unionized employees," Knapp said. "There is no intention of union busting."

Knapp said he believes a shift to emphasize on private institutions will present a problem to public higher education in Massachusetts.

"There's a resurgence of attitudes from 20 years ago," he said.

"That attitude is there and we're going to have to face it in the coming months," Knapp said.

squelch the UMass threat.

It looked like UMass had a 4-0 victory sealed after six and a half innings, but Rhode Island, batting in a rainy seventh inning, scored five runs to pull of the victory. A homerun and a double two plays later game the Wrams the win.

Controversial calls behind the plate did not aid pitcher O'Connell. She had a misleading total of nine walks because of the umpire's inconsistent calls, according to Marasco. O'Connell totaled three strikeouts on the afternoon.

In a game called after six innings because of darkness, the Wrams took the nightcap 3-2. Poirier held the Wrams to five hits in the second game. It was a frustrating second game for the Minutewomen who were held to just three hits.

O'Connell, Gaw and Fran Troy (first base), connected for singles, and fine fielding by the Wrams defense robbed several Minutewomen of additional hits.

Index arrival delayed

The 1981 INDEX yearbook, originally scheduled to arrive yesterday, is expected to arrive next Monday, said June Kokturk, INDEX editor-in-chief. Kokturk said the delay is because of a mixup during shipping.

country in the '80 Olympics, placing seventh in his qualifying heat of the 10,000. Smith should be pressed in the 1500 tomorrow by former Northeastern miling standout Tom Mortimer.

The hammer throw, always a quality event in the UMass Relays, will be well represented again this year. Andy Bessette, the number one American in the world last year, and number two in '79, will lead the weightmen. Bessette leads the best in America this year with a heave of 222'. The hammer throw will begin at 10:30.

UMass men will be represented by a stacked distance medley team of seniors Rick Cady, Kyle Martin, sophomore Rick Doiron, and junior Paul Beaulieu; junior Bill Devarney in the sprints, and defending 110 meter high hurdles champion sophomore John Wright.

The Minutewomen will feature junior Judy McCrone in the two mile, senior Karen Snow in the javelin throw, and junior Micki Callahan, who will compete in the hurdles, long jump and in the 220 yard dash.

★ Mittmen

Thompson, (3-1), was Mister Calm and Collected despite being greeted with three frozen ropes in the first inning. One liner was caught by Mark Litano in center, but with two on and one out, Thompson walked Bob Foley to load the bases. Al Levakis then hit a soft roller up the middle which was barehanded by Bennett, who tagged second and tossed out Levakis at first to help Thompson breathe a little easier.

Mark Litano countered in the bottom of the first inning with a two-out homer to left field that gave the Minutemen the lead, 1-0. With two homers yesterday, UMass has ripped 19 roundtrippers in 1981, one short of the total hit all last season.

UMass built its lead to three in the second when Keith Lovellette doubled down the line in left. Steve Hennessey and Barry Bennett walked, and Dean Bennett delivered a double down the line that scored the two UMass runners.

Somebody up there must have shined on Thompson in the third. Three hits and a walk plated the Yellowjackets' only run and they threatened for more when catcher Mike Cash punched a fastball to the right side with bases loaded that was clearly headed for the hole. But Foley, the runner at first base, kicked the ball on his run to second and Thompson was spared.

UMass turned over a 6-4-3 double play in the fourth when AIC designated hitter John Sandillo tapped a one-bouncer to UMass shortstop Vin Bonanno. In the seventh, Minuteman third baseman Barry Bennett executed a double-kill when, with men on first and second, he stabbed Feff Altman's bouncer, stepped on third and threw to first to beat Altman.

The UMass defense, coupled with the four-walk, four-strikeout performance by Thompson, dearly helped the senior righthander as he tries to push his earned run average down from a lofty 7.76.

Bennett was responsible for the last two Minuteman tallies. He deposited a home run (his second of the year) just past the scoreboard in left field in the fifth inning. In the seventh, he walked, stole second and scored on an errant throw by Cash to third base.

Yellowjacket reliever Jim Van Houten, who came in for Patella after a rain delay in the fifth, set down seven of the eight batters he faced, giving up only the walk and the run scored to Bennett.

★ Gazelles

The Gazelles certainly were not "lax in their execution" as attackpersons Herbert, Thayer and Anderson continually succeeded to receive passing connections from the middleliners.

"The midfielders really did a super job on the Springfield players, keeping most of the game in the attack," Hixon said.

Defenseperson Judy Strong, who is also a field hocky olympian assisted the last goal of the day by Herbert.

The Gazelles will have the home field advantage again Saturday when they play Northeastern on NOPE's upper field starting at 1 p.m.

Mass stings 'Jackets'

Dean Bennett: HR, double, 3 RBI's

BY MIKE ESTRADA
Collegian Staff

Minuteman righthanded hurler Chuck Thompson scattered nine hits with the help of three UMass double plays, and second baseman Dean Bennett drove in three runs with a homer and a double as UMass downed American International College of Springfield, 5-1, in a game shortened because of darkness at Earl Lorden Field yesterday.

Thompson, who was racked for six runs in his last start against the University of Maine, was the beneficiary of three inning-ending double killings (once with the bases loaded); the first double plays by the Minutemen since coming east from San Diego.

The man who made the pivot on two of those double plays, steady sophomore Bennett, continued his timely hitting with a two-out double down the left field line that scored two runs in the second inning. In the fifth, he took AIC starter and losing pitcher John Patella's first pitch over the wall in left for another run, his fifth RBI in two games.

UMass (9-7) has captured wins in four of its first five games in the Northeast. The Minutemen hope to continue that trend tomorrow when they face the University of Vermont in a double header at Earl Lorden Field starting at 1 p.m. The Yellowjackets of AIC lose their second game in three contests this week, falling to 4-3-1.

Yellowjacket coach Rich Bedard, the brother of UMass assistant coach Jim Bedard, was vehement in his insistence that the game should not have been called in the middle of the eighth inning.

Recoiling in disbelief from his coaching box on the third base line, Bedard loudly questioned plate umpire Blake's decision, especially after the game endured six innings of rainy conditions which included a five minute rain delay in the fifth. Indeed, the sky was lighter at game's end than it had been at periods during the game.

"He (Blake) conceded the game for us. He didn't decide we couldn't play, he decided we couldn't win."

Gazelles not 'lax' in 19-1 victory

By RANDI J. MARCUS
Collegian Staff

Despite the soggy weather, the UMass women's varsity lacrosse team, (3-1) played as fresh as ever. Whitney Thayer and Margie Anderson combined for 14 points to trample the Springfield College Chiefs 19-1 yesterday on NOPE's upper field.

The Gazelles were in command from the first face-off when defenseperson Kathy Hourihan snagged the ball and passed off to Anderson who assisted co-captain Lynn Herbert's goal.

The ball stayed primarily at UMass' scoring end throughout the first half thanks to tough defensive playing by middleliner Patti Bossio, who refused to let up on the Chiefs, giving them no chances anywhere near their goal.

The gazelles didn't appear to possess any heroes as each goal scored was a result of pure team efforts. UMass' give and go offense allowed them to elude the Chief's man to man defense and score 12 of 18 attempted goals in the first half.

Springfield, who only got the chance at four shots on goal during the entire game, scored their lone goal late in the first half. Thayer quickly reciprocated with UMass' twelfth goal in the last two seconds of the half.

The Minutewomen entered the last half in the same manner as the first with Anderson assisting junior Sue Caples' third goal seconds into the half.

The Gazelles competed with an air of determination that would have led a newcomer to assume a close game.

"Even in a game like this, it's important not to be lax in the execution," UMass coach Pam Hixon said.

Hixon graduated from Springfield College and coached women's varsity lacrosse there before coming to UMass three years ago.

Wrams wrap mittwomen...twice

By ELIZABETH McGOWAN
Collegian Staff

KINSTON, RI—The University of Massachusetts varsity mittwomen played an impressive brand of softball yesterday but it was not enough to stop the first-ranked Rhode Island squad who swept a doubleheader from the Minutewomen, 5-4, 3-2.

Coach Elaine Marasco said she was pleased with the way her young team was pulling together, but "Today at Rhode Island I felt that we were robbed twice," she said.

UMass ace pitcher Kathy O'Connell started the first game and held the Wrams to two hits during the first three innings. After a hit batter and a base on balls put runners at second and third in the fourth inning, O'Connell got the next two batters to ground out, ending a minor scoring threat.

O'Connell aided her own cause by blasting a three-run homer to right center field in the third inning. Catcher Jackie Gaw and designated hitter Karen Poirier scored ahead of O'Connell. UMass held a 3-0 lead after two and a half innings of play.

The Minutewomen (ranked fifth in New England) added another run in the fifth inning when shortstop Allyson Rioux doubled, went to third on a fielder's choice and scored on a passed ball. The Wrams' pitcher was injured on the play and a relief pitcher came on to TURNING TWO — Dean Bennett makes the throw to first base to beat American International College's John Sandillo's slide into second and complete the double play in the fourth inning at Boyden Field yesterday.

UM hosts Relays

By KENNETH ROLT
Collegian Staff

The sixth annual University of Massachusetts Relays will be held tomorrow at the Llewellyn Derby Track, beginning at 9:45 a.m.

This years meet, which will feature approximately 800 athletes and 55 schools or clubs, is traditionally one of the best meets in New England, and attracts many fine competitors.

In the past, the UMass relays have hosted Greg Meyer, an American record holder on the roads, as well as a competitor in the 1980 Olympic Trials meet (in the 3000 meter steeplechase); Jan Merrill, who set an American record in the two mile; and John Treacy, the former Providence College star, who placed 7th in the Moscow Olympic 5000 meter while representing Ireland.

Slated for the seeded 5000 meter run, to go off at 3:20, is brother Ray Treacy, from PC. The 5000 could be one of the feature track events, with a handful of runners posting very fast qualifying times.

Also representing the PC contingent, is yet another talented Irishman Geoff Smith. Smith, who will run the 1500 meter run, to go off a 2:10, also represented his

UMass profs reflect on space shuttle Columbia

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

As the space shuttle Columbia circled the earth yesterday on its voyage, professors from the University of Massachusetts spoke with excitement and of hope for the future of the nation's shuttle and space programs.

Former UMass Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, currently a professor of geology and a senior member of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's advisory council, spoke of the reusable shuttle's potential for both scientific research and benefits to mankind.

"Projects which benefit people on earth," Bromery said, such as weather modification to combat drought, and exploration of energy sources are examples of possible long term gains from space projects.

Bromery also expressed concern that an unsuccessful shuttle could unfortunately result in decreased funding for scientific research and NASA in general.

Bromery, having been with NASA four years, is also involved in the ongoing Voyager project, which provided unprecedented views of Saturn last year.

Professor John Ritter of the mechanical engineering department spent an "exciting" summer serving as a consultant with Rockwell International in California, heading a team evaluaged the heat resistant tiles installed on the outside of the shuttle.

Ritter explained the work involved intricate heat testing of individual tiles. They were examined for their ability to remain attached and to protect the shuttle from the up to 2,700 degrees Fahrenheit heat of re-entering the atmosphere. He said one of the two significant advances of the shuttle is the inception of the re-usable heat protection system. In past flights, he explained, such problems with tiles were not encountered due to the design of disposable spacecraft in which the heat protection was made to burn off.

After watching the flight yesterday, Ritter said the shuttle looked great, but hoped it landed safely.

UMass professors Paul Goldsmith and K. Sigried Yngvesson are also involved with the shuttle, having developed one of 40 detailed Spacelab experiment proposals currently under consideration by NASA.

Their proposal, called the Spacelab Interstellar Oxygen Project, or SINTOX, consists of a short wave radio telescope which Yngvesson explains would be used to detect interstellar oxygen by characteristically emitted radio waves.

Yngvesson and Goldsmith currently have in operation a similar radio telescope at the Five College Radio Astronomy Observatory at the Quabbin Reservoir.

Goldsmith said the clouds of oxygen molecules, light years across in places, cannot be detected by land based radio observatories due to oxygen in the atmosphere. He said the clouds are often associated with forming stars, and information gained could be important to understanding stellar birth.

Goldsmith said the shuttle program has the practical value of enlarging our frontiers, and also holds a lot of interest for the people.

Yngvesson said, "Seeing all it can be, it is a justifiable expense."

Lower income student's future threatened by cuts

By BRIAN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts Chancellor Henry Koffler said Friday he is concerned about the school's ability to serve the needs of lower income students.

"An institution like ours has traditionally served people from all walks of life and must continue to do so," Koffler told about 130 students from across the state at the Students Advocating Financial Aid Conference held in the Campus Center.

The chancellor predicted that cuts in federal financial aid funding, coupled with a 20 percent tuition increase being proposed by the state Board of Regents, would drive many low income students out of school. Koffler also said that many students currently enrolled in private institutions may be forced to transfer to public schools when their financial aid is cut.

"Inflation will take its toll in the quality or the diversity of the offerings of the University," Koffler said.

Koffler suggested several solutions to the monetary squeeze including improved financial management without a sacrifice in quality. "In the future, tuition will be related to costs, and costs must be justified," he said.

Koffler also said that tuition must be equitable in public institutions so that they remain cheaper to run and have smaller increases in cost than private institutions.

"The University of Massachusetts is compared to the University of Vermont and the University of New Hampshire, which are run like private institutions. Our legislators say that compared to Vermont and New Hampshire our tuitions are not high," Koffler said.

Nationally, however, UMass is ranked ninth in cost of tuition among state universities, he said.

Koffler suggested that students seek private scholarships to finance their educations and said the University is actively pursuing scholarship contributions from alumni and businesses. He also urged students and their parents to lobby for increased aid funding.

"This has been done effectively in the past, but it must be kept going," Koffler said.

In a seperate speech, State Rep. James Collins, D-Amherst, said that students in the state were becoming "alienated" from the decision-making process since the establishment of the State Board of Regents last year.

"Everyone in this room is going to be removed and alienated from those who affect your lives," Collins said.

Collins also criticized the legislation establishing the regents, which was made part of the budget package passed last summer.

"The legislation was written in the dead of night...with not one single second of public hearing...(We) should not allow public higher education to become one big slush fund subject to political pressure.

Collins, a former UMass student, said the state should take more care in funding public higher education.

"As we plan out the future of public higher education, we plan out the future of Massachusetts...and that deserves thought," Collins said.

Anti-abortion plank downed; 5 college groups participate

By ANNE KIRBY and MONICA CRONIN
Collegian Staff

Delegates to Saturday's Democratic party Issues Convention defeated a controversial anti-abortion plank by a roll call vote of 1,333 to 869 at the Springfield Civic Center.

While delegates debated for 45 minutes on the plank supported by Gov. Edward J. King, pro-life and pro-choice forces clashed outside. In the only roll call vote of the day, 159 delegates abstained.

Early Saturday morning approximately 30 people representing both the pro-life and pro-choice forces leafleted delegates as they entered the convention. Later pro-choice forces numbered more than 500 while pro-lifers dwindled to less than 20. Although the protest was peaceful there was some jostling for space early in the day.

Pro-choice forces included several five-college groups. There were problems with the bus that had planned to transport local students to the rally, however the five-college community was well represented.

A statement to the press from pro-life advocates said, "The Democrats had deemed themselves the guardian of the people. Today, we members of the Massachusetts Citizens for Life are here to remind the delegates to this convention of their commitment to the human family, not just in part but as a whole." The pro-life group was predominantly older men with a small representation of women.

The pro-choice protest was sponsored by the mostly-female Ad-Hoc Committee for Reproductive Freedom. One committee representative said the group was there "to protest the Human Life Amendment and sterilization abuse, and in support of women's right to choose."

FREE CHOICE, Diane Lopez, from National Organization of Women, speaks in favor of abortion, Saturday at the Democratic convention in Springfield.

The group also sponsored a rally with speakers and music. Speakers at the rally included Nancy Gertner, a pro-choice attorney who won the recent Moe v. King decision which re-instated Medicaid payments for abortions.

In her speech, Gertner said, "They (the delegates) have forgotten that a woman's life is a human life too. This amendment will raise the fetus to a status that an ordinary citizen of this state does not have.

Gertner also said the amendment would put women back 100 years. "Unless we stand up and fight for this as strongly, loudly and as militantly as we have fought for anything, we will end up with the government in our bellies and the police in our bedrooms," she said.

Speaking for the pro-life forces, Sandra Hiens, Agawam High School teacher, said she felt the large pro-choice turnout was a result of "the misdirection of youth." She said young people are brought up in a pleasure seeking environment, they have to learn to take responsibility for their actions.

Inside the convention the Massachusetts Organization for the Repeal of Abortion Laws (MORAL), a pro-choice group, advocated the removal of all abortion language from the Democratic platform. Kris Hermann, MORAL delegate, said, "We feel that abortion is a personal choice and has no place in political language."

In his keynote address U.S. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Ma) said "Jesse Helms has been throwing his weight around," in reference to U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms (R-N.C.) who sponsored the Human Life Amendment in the U.S. Senate. Kennedy also told the delegates, "In Washington we have the romance of the pandas to look forward to, if the Moral Majority will ever let them get together."

Columbia: Up, up and away

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Space shuttle Columbia shot straight for the heavens on a tower of white hot flame yesterday and sailed a perfect course around earth; a spectacular beginning to an American era of making space a workplace for mankind.

Everything worked.

Flight One of the winged space freighter, piloted by John Young and Robert Crippen, got off on time, soared smoothly into orbit, and flawlessly exercised its cargo bay doors during a critical early-flight test. Some of Columbia's troublesome tiles shook off, but officials weren't alarmed.

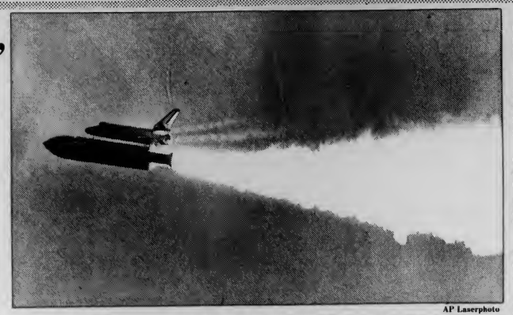
Flight director Neil Hutchinson, at the Johnson Space Center in Houston, said nine thermal protection tiles are missing on the left side of the spacecraft and four to six on the right. "I don't think that's going to bother us," he said. "We are not worried about any other tiles working loose."

He called the Columbia "a super vehicle ... a super piece of machinery up there."

At the start of their third orbit, Shuttle Control told the astronauts, "You guys did so good, we're going to let you stay up there for a couple days." That meant a dramatic wheels-down Tuesday at Edwards Air Force Base in California. Target time for the first runway landing of the space age — 1:30 p.m. EST, 10:30 a.m. California time.

Meanwhile, Columbia was circling 152 miles above the globe. Later, it would move up to 172 miles and remain there until it's time to land. For the first time since 1975, Americans were in space.

They were not alone. Two Soviet cosmonauts have been in orbit since March.



AP Laserphoto

Kennedy Space Center, Fla.—The world's first re-usable space craft, the space shuttle Colombia, takes off yesterday from launch pad 39-A.

The third decade of manned space flight began, precisely at 7:00:03.983 a.m. EST, with launch of the first ship designed to go into space again and again. It was 20 years ago Sunday that Soviet cosmonaut Yuri Gagarin became the first to orbit the planet.

"That was one fantastic ride; I highly recommend it," said Crippen, a 15-year astronaut on his first trip in space. The rookie's heart rate soared like his ship, to a beat of 130 times a minute.

"Oh, man, that is so pretty," he exclaimed, seeing Earth from space for the first time.

John Young, setting a human record with his fifth blast-off into space, maintained an even 85 beats a minute. "It sure hasn't changed any," he radioed. "It's something else out there."

"He's been telling me about it for three years," said Crippen. "When you see it it's unbelievable."

It was something else on earth, too. Even the bureaucrats were ecstatic.

Tax cut loss is not certain

By STEVEN A. COHEN
Associated Press

BOSTON — Something in the range of $300 million has become the magic number for people pressing the state to relieve cities and towns of half the burden of Proposition 2½.

But while coalitions have been pressuring the House to commit itself to $300 million in new local aid, there isn't a consensus on how much communities will be losing under the local tax-cutting law in the upcoming fiscal year.

Last week, the Congressional Research Service of the Library of Congress got into the act with a report on how much federal money Massachusetts might lose under Prop 2½.

U.S. Rep. Barney Frank requested the report because federal grants and program money are tied, in many instances, to the level of local spending.

One section of the report is entitled "mitigating factors," and one mitigating factor listed is: "the probable revaluation of all real estate to actual market value could restore an estimated one-half of the revenues lost."

The recoup estimate, it was later explained by Frank's administrative assistant, Jim Dolan, who checked with the CRS, came from "The Economist," a prestigious British journal, which ran an article in December entitled "Boston's New Tea Party."

That article stated: "Realistic assessments and continuing inflation in real estate could restore half or more of the revenues lost through Proposition 2½."

The observation is an important ingredient in deliberations preceding the brunt of Prop 2½, which will come July 1 when its property tax limits take effect.

The Massachusetts Municipal Association estimates the first year loss at some $600 million.

The report released by Frank says Prop 2½ is expected to reduce revenues by $400 million to $500 million in the first year.

The state Revenue Department says there are so many variables involved it isn't clear how much money will be lost.

Many communities are expected to impose new charges to help recoup some losses.

While the Massachusetts Municipal Association says the auto excise tax rollback will cost $225 million over one year, the Revenue Department estimated the one year loss at $150 million. The state agency later retracted that figure on grounds it may be too high, spokesman Robert Sherman said, partly because 20 percent of the excise taxes are uncollectable anyway.

Revaluation is continuing in communities across the state. And for cities and towns where it isn't completed by the new fiscal year, the Revenue Department is allowing assessments to be increased by a 13 percent inflation factor.

Bush defends Reagan's plan, rebuffs discrimination claims

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — Vice President George Bush said yesterday that critics of President Reagan's proposed budget cuts are wrong in raising doubts that the administration is insensitive to the economic problems of blacks and other minorities.

"Believe me when I say, put aside your doubts," the vice president assured a largely black audience. "In this president and in his administration black and minority Americans have a man who will act, not deal in rhetorical flim-flam, to improve the quality of life for those who have suffered from bigotry and discrimination in the past."

On his first out-of-town assignment since Reagan was shot March 30, Bush substituted for the recuperating president at Tuskegee Institute's Founders Day and Centennial Celebration. The predominantly black school was founded by renowned educator Booker T. Washington 100 years ago to educate former slaves and their children.

In route from Washington on the same plane Reagan normally flies, Bush said the president was a little tired when he saw him at the White House on Saturday. "I think he's going to be (tired). The tendency will be to push too much in on him. I think his tendency should be to resist that."

Looking back over the events of the past 13 days since this assassination attempt, Bush said, "history will record it all worked pretty darn well ... a limited degree of confusion."

Soviet warns of 'fatal' results

BERLIN — Deviation from communist theory has "fatal consequences," a key Soviet leader warned yesterday at East Germany's Communist Party Congress, a meeting marked from its start by comment on Poland.

Mikhail Suslov, a Soviet Politburo member known as the Kremlin's chief ideologist, did not refer explicitly to Poland in his speech, in which he said only "consistent implementation of Marxist-Leninist principles guarantees the triumph of our Socialist ideals."

"There is no other road," Suslov said, "and any deviation from our socialist teachings results in fatal consequences."

He appeared to concede the Poles limited freedom to tinker with the system when he noted, while discussing East Germany, that Lenin had said principles could be modified to fit national differences. That passage was the only one underlined in an official text of Suslov's speech provided by East German officials.

Suslov's comments reinforced remarks Saturday by East German party chief Erich Honecker, who said there was no alternative to Soviet-style communism for the Poles.

"Without a single deletion, Lenin's recognition that there is no third way between bourgeois and socialist ideology remains valid today," said Honecker, who has been among the Soviet bloc's most strident critics of Polish developments.

The leader of the Polish delegation, Kazimierz Barcikowski, spoke after Suslov, conceding that his party fell into crisis by "disregarding Marxist-Leninist principles."

200 injured in London riots

LONDON — Violent clashes between blacks and police erupted yesterday for the second straight night in the Brixton district of south London, hours after police sealed off the burned and looted neighborhood and angry youths jeered touring Home Secretary William Whitelaw.

A police spokesman said the rioters were attacking police "with anything they can get their hands on" and described the clashes as "very violent."

The new fighting broke out after more than 1,000 police officers cordoned off much of the working-class district following Saturday's violence, among the worst racial violence to erupt in Britain since World War II.

Scotland Yard said at least 194 people, 165 of them police, were injured by rocks, gasoline bombs and bottles hurled in running street battles and attacks on police, medics and firemen.

Angry young blacks screamed "Sieg Heil" and gave clenched-fist salutes as Whitelaw toured the smoldering and rubble-strewn streets ringed by a posse of police officers earlier in the day.

A grim-faced Whitelaw voiced "extreme distress and horror" at the six hours of fierce rioting that ripped through the rundown ghetto Saturday night.

Leaders in the community, largely populated by West Indians, had predicted the heavy police presence would provoke new violence.

Writer seeks help in animal protection fight

By KEVIN McGUIRE
Collegian Correspondent

Mixing business with pleasure, acclaimed writer and animal champion Cleveland Amory treated his Hampshire College audience yesterday to a stand-up comic's reminiscing of his early days, then urged all those interested in animal protection to get involved in the fight.

"Whether you're a writer, or can run a ship, or drive a truck, or even if you're good for nothin', we can use you," said Amory before the packed auditorium at Franklin Patterson Hall.

Amory is the founder and unpaid president of the Fund for Animals, the largest anti-cruelty to animals and wildlife conservation society in the world, with over 200,000 members. The Fund, established in 1967, operates through legislative lobbying, the media, court action and "direct activism." Amory is also a member of Hampshire College's National Advisory Council.

Commenting on how well-travelled he was a youth, Amory said, "I was familiar with the West of course. I had an uncle in Dedham, and an aunt in Needham." Amory was born in the resort town of Nahant, Massachusetts.

Amory, a Harvard University graduate and former president of the Harvard Crimson, added that "I've not done a great deal of reading, outside of my own writing."

Amory has been credited with having the largest circulation of any writer in America, being a syndicated columnist and an author.

Amory said contrary to popular belief, the re-instating of single-sex bathrooms on the University of Massachusetts-Amherst campus was not thrwoing the school back into the Victorian Age because, "as I understand it, they're not going to have any chaperones." The joke did not receive an ovation.

Amory said that witnessing a bullfight in Ogallis, Mexico, changed his life; from then on "I joined everything," he said. In his fight against cruelty to animals, Amory has recruited everyone who wanted to help. The List has included volunteers and celebrities such as Mary Tyler Moore and to highly-trained legal and legislative personnel.

Among its many projects the Fund has been involved in trying to save baby harp seals from their annual slaughter. Fund members marked the baby seals, prized for their white fur, with a red organic dye making their fur unattractive to hunters. The seals later turn a grey color as adults and are then safe from the pelt hunters.

The Fund has also received publicity for its recent helicopter airlift of 280 burros from the Grand Canyon. The National Park Service wanted to kill the burros because they claimed the animals were disrupting the Canyon's ecosystem according to Audubon Magazine.

Amory's talk, titled after his latest book, The Trouble With Nowadays, was given during Hampshire College's Career Exploration Day as part of the College's annual Parents' Weekend.

The Fund's regional office, headed by Margaret Morey, is located at 137 Walnut Street, Newtonville, Massachusetts, 02160. Telephone number: (617)964-0721.

College merger stirs debate

BOSTON — The State Board of Regents is facing protests by Roxbury college students and teachers as it nears a decision on which state campuses to close within Boston.

On Friday, nearly 300 students and faculty from Roxbury Community College walked out of a Regents hearing, angry over plans to merge their largely black school with the mostly white Bunker Hill Community College in Charlestown.

"This merger does not speak to the needs of our college or the Roxbury community," Roxbury trustee Charleen Cozier told the Statehouse hearing just before the walkout. "This merger has to do with politics, and dirty politics at that. It has to do with racism that is no longer subtle, racism in its ugliest form."

A Regents task force has proposed merging the two junior colleges to form the Boston Community College but with separate campuses in Roxbury and Charlestown "as well as other sites in the city." It also has called for merging Boston State College and the University of Massachusetts-Boston.

The full Regents panel is scheduled to vote on the issue tomorrow. Some time ago, Gov. Edward J. King, who appointed the Regents, remarked that he would like to see one of the Boston campuses closed.

Corrections

Arvid Muller, who heads the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy, was incorrectly identified as Ed Lee, speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate, in a photo in the April 10 issues of the Collegian. The name of Tildy Turchinetz was incorrectly spelled in that issue. The Collegian apologizes for these errors.

In Friday's Collegian, University of Massachusetts President David C. Knapp was incorrectly quoted as saying he endorses the Board of Regents proposed 20 percent tuition increase.

Knapp does not support the proposed tuition increases as excessive. I continue to believe that the proposal we made last fall (of a 10 percent tuition increase) is reasonable."

The following is Knapp's actual statement:

"In light of the financial aid situation at the federal level I regard the proposed tuition increases as excessive. I continue to believe that the proposal we made last fall (of a 10 percent tuition increase) is reasonable."

The April 10th edition of the Collegian incorrectly named U.S. Representative Barney Frank as the University of Massachusetts faculty representative to the Board of Trustees. The faculty representative is professor Joseph Frank.

Did Adam and Eve exist? Evolution debate continues

By ROGER ATWOOD
Collegian Correspondent

Recent scientific findings suggest that life on earth may have originated by an act of divine creation rather than by the process of evolution said Campus Crusade for Christ representative Dr. Allen Beeber.

Beeber, who received a doctorate in polymer science from the University of Massachusetts, told a largely unreceptive crowd of about 200 in the Campus Center Friday night that the theory of evolution had several "fatal flaws" and that experts had conceded that only Creation could plausible explain recent discoveries.

"The key documented evidence that the evolutionary theory needs," said Beeber, "is simply missing." He cited the presence of so-called missing links as a rebutal of the idea of evolutionary cycles, and indicating a "deterministic," or Creationist, origin of life.

Beeber and the Campus Crusade, a Boston organization, have called for "equal time for Creation" in public school science classes. A law of this sort would require high school biology teachers to teach the Biblical version of life, which includes the stories of Adam and Eve and Noah's Ark, along with Darwin's. "Creationist" laws have been introduced in eight states, and one has passed in Arkansas. Massachusetts is not one of these states.

With photos, diagrams, and passages from various texts, Beeber outlined the apparent shortcomings of Darwinian "theory," and disagreement among its followers.

While Beeber admitted he was not an expert on evolutionary studies, he cited findings from the fields of anthropology, paleontology, geology and zoology to support his claims.

Beeber showed "evidence" of a massive, pandemic flood, like the flood Noah was to have survived in his Ark. For example, dinosaurs that have been fossilized standing upright are a strong indication of some sort of massive, rapid flooding, claimed Beeber.

Polystrate fossils, like fossilized trees that pass through two or more sedimentary layers, could also only be produced by abrupt flooding of huge proportions, like that described in the Bible, said Beeber.

"The evolutionists," said Beeber, "don't tell us how life occured. They tell us with a lot of sun and a lot of water, it somehow happened. But they don't tell us how."

Beeber and Crusade members finished the slide show with some philosophy on the "implications of Darwinism." Evolution, said Beeber, implies: "One, there is no spiritual realm; two, there is no God; three, Man answers to no one but himself."

One Campus Crusade member said after the presentation, "Believing in evolution means believing that there is no purpose to life, there is no right or wrong, and that power is the ultimate virtue."

Beeber encountered a critical audience when he began taking questions after the presentation. One member of the audience said the Crusade had "distorted" facts. Others questioned the legitimacy of the Crusade's "implications" of evolution, and one termed the Crusade's general outlook as "lax on science."

Others in the audience were supportive of Beeber's contentions. At times, the question session erupted into a free-for-all debate between these supporters and critics of the Crusade's claims.

Beeber said that "people say Christians are pushy. I say society is pushing a lot of things on Christians." With that statement, and ten or more hands still in the air, Beeber stopped the question session, at around 8:30. Dozens of people remained in the room afterwards to address questions and comments to Beeber.

Index available

The 1980 INDEX will arrive on campus this morning and will be available to students with an INDEX card, June Kokturk, editor-in-chief of the yearbook said last night.

The book was scheduled to arrive on campus last week but was delayed due to problems in trucking, Kokturk said. The truck with the yearbooks will be outside the Student Union Building all day. INDEX cards will be honored until Wednesday.

The book costs $4 with an INDEX card and $5 without a card. Students who graduated during 1980 should not pick books up at the truck, Kokturk said, because a copy will be sent to their permanent address.

Valuables stolen

A door on the 9th floor of George Washington tower in the Southwest Residential Area was reported kicked in and belongings valued at $300 were reported stolen at 2:13 a.m. yesterday. A watch, turntable, and calculator were reported stolen and the room ransacked, University of Massachusetts police confirmed.

Lawrence R. Jacobs, 20, of 118 Sunset Avenue, Amherst and Barry M. Bennett, 22, of University Park Apartments, Amherst were taken into protective custody at 1:13 a.m. yesterday by UMass police after they were seen trying to enter Crampton residence hall in the Southwest Residential Area.

In another incident, Richard W. La Voie, Jr., 19, of Peabody, was taken into protective custody by police after he was stopped outside the Blue Wall trying to get in with a fake identification card, police said.

In addition, a broken window in the 4th floor stairwell of Field residence hall in the Orchard Hill Residential Area was reported to UMass police at 1:08 a.m. yesterday. The window was smashed when a bathroom stall door was thrown through it causing $75 damage. There are two suspects in the incident, authorities said.

Another theft was reported to police when a cassette player and radio were reported missing after a woman set them down near an elevator in the Coolidge tower in the Southwest Residential Area. The incident was reported at 4:49 p.m. Saturday. The woman told police she was gone for a few minutes visiting a friend. When she returned the items were gone.

Course ideas sought

Undergraduate and graduate students who want to help formulate a course for the upcoming semester on global interdependence should meet tonight a 9 in Mahar Auditorium.

UMass seeks ways to curb energy usage

By KEVIN McGUIRE
Collegian Correspondent

Editor's note: This is part of a continuing series on energy issues that will appear occasionally in the Collegian.

The University of Massachusetts-Amherst burned approximately 7,500 pounds of coal per person on campus last year—a total of 93,000 tons. But, take notice, UMass may be living with less energy in the future.

Coal, which costs about one-third as much as oil, supplies 47 percent of the energy needed to run the Amherst campus in 1979, according to UMass Utility Division reports.

Oil supplied 14 percent of the campuses' energy needs, and natural gas supplied four percent. Electricity purchased from the Western Massachusetts Electric Company provided the remaining 35 percent.

WMECO is seeking an increase of approximately 25 percent for the cost of supplying the university with electricity, and the two week old United Mine Workers union strike foreshadows future coal price increases. The cost of oil continuies to rise.

The rise in fuel costs, coupled with inflation and educational appropriation cutbacks are making energy conservation mandatory. The primary motivating force to conserve seems not so much to protect the environment but financial survival.

UMass-Amherst hired its first energy conservation coordinator last year, and Barry Simon has been working to help the University conserve energy since then.

"My purpose is to help keep the university competitive in the college market. If we don't cut consumption here, we could easily be talking about energy surcharges of $100.00 per student," Simon said.

This surcharge, he said, would become manifest in the students' tuition bill.

Simon who worked at a Boston temperature control company, is quick to point out that utility costs will probably not go down. Rather, consumption must decrease. The savings in reduced consumption will go to pay for the increased cost of the fuels.

Simon said a lack of money at UMass prohibits effective maintenance, monitoring and repair work, making conservation efforts extremely difficult. He noted that with more than 160 heated buildings on the UMass-Amherst campus, cooperation among administration, faculty, physical plant workers and students is imperative for an effective conservation effort.

To provide an incentive to save energy, there is a student-sponsored bill before the State Legislature that would allow the university to keep all the money it saves through conservation measures, and mandates that a minimum of 50 percent of the savings be spent on further conservation efforts. Presently, any utility monies not spent by the university must be sent back to the state treasury.

Simon and several UMass students worked to secure over $400,000 in federal and state grants last fall by performing energy audits on several buildings.

More than half of the money will go to replacing or repairing a fraction of the estimated 4,000 steam traps on campus, he said. Steam traps channel condensed water and steam in the heating systems.

The remaining $200,000 will go to improving the heating and cooling systems in the Fine Arts Center (F.A.C.), the Whitmore Administration Building, and repair work at Northeast Resident Area. Whitmore is an interesting case in point, he said.

According to Simon, $60,000 a year can be saved by turning off the heat (or air conditioning) when people are not in the building.

Whitmore is heated in winter and cooled in summer around the clock.

Turning off the heat is not as simple as flipping a switch in a building the size of Whitmore, Simon said. More elaborate machinery is necessary. The FAC is to have a computer control its complicated fan system, sometim in the near future.

The Office of Energy Conservation compared nine universities to UMass-Amherst for energy efficiency in its 1980 annual report. The data was adjusted according to the size of the schools and their local climates.

The University of Maine came out 44 percent more efficient than UMass, and the University of Maryland fared the worst, being 37 percent less efficient.

Why was the UMaine able to run its facilities, all things considered, on almost half the energy UMass needed? "They're Yankees. They turn stuff off," Simon said with a chuckle.

Simon admits that it is easier "to turn stuff off" at a smaller institution, but Ohio State, which is considerably larger than

Concert boasts talented trio at inspiring performance

By ROB HUFFMAN
Collegian Staff

John McLaughlin, Al DiMeola, and Paco DeLucia
FAC Concert Hall, April 9, 1981

Guitars. Everywhere, man. People who play guitar, used to play guitar, or once considered playing guitar; people who applauded everytime John or Al or Paco played chromatic lines at breakneck speed (these were especially prominent); and even people who said things like "flamingo gitah," and "Mahavishnoo" were there. There were plants on the stage.

I was hesitant. Al DiMeola had impressed me years ago with his barely controlled frenzy and full electric tone. At Mount Holyoke College in 1975 I had seen Return to Forever (which then consisted of Chick Corea, Stanley Clarke, Lenny White, and Al DiMeola), and was quite impressed. Lately, however, I had grown quite tired of DiMeola's Slendifo Motel motifs, and was anxious for Al to learn some new modes.

I had seen John McLaughlin way back in the days of The Mahavishnu Orchestra, and was becoming jaded even then. A few years later I saw McLaughlin with his One Truth Band, and was nauseated by the chanting and spiritual bullshit that dominated the show. His acoustic group Shakti had produced some intriguing sounds, though, and the acoustic guitar duet "Rene's Theme" which he recorded with Larry Coryell (from Spaces, Vanguard VSD 7558) has long been a personal favorite.

Paco DeLucia, progressive Spanish flamenco guitarist, I knew only through recordings. It was DeLucia, however, who gave Thursday's show momentum and credibility. The dominant melodic force of the trio, DeLucia played his gut-string with his thumb and fingernails, using the traditional flamenco techniques of rasgueado (rapid strumming which employs each finger and the thumb seperately) and golpe (tapping the body of the guitar in different places to get different sounds). He seemed more in control of his axe than the other two guitarists.

The show was exceptionally well paced. Each guitarist began with a solo number, then played a duet with each of the other guitarists, and finally, the second half was devoted to the trio playing as an ensemble. It was during the trio performance that the playing seemed especially inspired, and at moments the music was downright incredible. The musicians complemented each other quite well, and a playful sense of comraderie permeated the whole second half. What a relief it was, too, that John McLaughlin didn't begin chanting or anything.

"World music" is an apt description of what McLaughlin, DiMeola, and DeLucia collectively create. An Englishman, an American, and a Spaniard, respectively, the music performed ranged from the saraband of Bach's violin sonata in B minor (played rather sloppily by DiMeola) to Brazilian music by Gismonde and Bonfi, to Chick Corea's familiar "Spain" The latter tune provided ample room for soloing and trading licks.

During "Short Tales of the Black Forest," which DiMeola and McLaughlin played as a duet, the guitarists slyly transformed the tune's call and response pattern into the "Pink Panther," and then "Duelling Banjos."

The concert had an overall feeling of history-in-the-making, and it was refreshing to see such a talented and diverse trio concentrating on art, and avoiding unnecessary excesses.

Jesus Christ Superstar exhibits sheer exuberance

Mary Magdalene (Jodi Leong) comforts Jesus Christ (William Collura) in a scene from Jesus Christ Superstar.

By DAVID WILDMAN
Collegian Staff

Jesus Christ Superstar is a difficult production to pull off, partly because of problems inherent in the show itself, and partly because of the difficulty of the material. The University of Massachusetts Musical Theatre Guild's presentation, which closed this weekend, managed to overcome most of these problems through exquisite showmanship and sheer exuberance.

The original show was conceived as an opera by Andrew Lloyd Webber and Tim Rice, a musician and a lyricist. At the time, they didn't know much about creating characters and staging operas, although they wrote great music. Consequently we have characters like Judas, who operates at the top of his emotional peak throughout the entire show. We are not allowed to sit back and see him as a full person, and when he eventually hangs himself, any buildup or emotional effect is lost, simply because he has been at that level since the beginning. Also, the original was a super-flashy, overkill production, with actors in 10 foot high platform shoes, and multi million dollar costumes, which at times distracted the audience from the content of the show.

The Theatre Guild production scrapped most of the frills and allowed the show to stand on it's own. A very simple set was used, consisted of an upper level, and a ramp with a large cross on it, leading down to the stage. The cross lifted up at the end, for Jesus' crucifixion. Costumes were simple and functional. All of this justly caused the audience's attention to be focused completely on the actors, and on the music.

There was a definite common bond of love for the music between these people. It showed in the energy and vitality of their performances.

Billy Collura, who played Ozzie in last season's On the Town, was excellent as Jesus Christ. His voice and stage presence commanded the attention and respect necessary for that role.

Scott Cunningham, a veteran of six Guild shows, was plagued with the problems of the Judas role itself. That is, flat out emotion with no chance for a rounded character. He also had a bit of trouble projecting over the orchestra, and at this performance, his fine voice was a little hoarse. But Cunningham proved to be a top notch dancer, smooth and in complete control. It's too bad there wasn't better amplification for his singing.

Jodi Leong, an exchange student from the University of Hawaii, and in her first show with the Guild, was wonderful as Mary Magdelene. She has a beautiful voice, and even though the program requested that applause be held until the end of acts, she received a nice round of applause for her performance of "I Don't Know How to Love Him."

The most outstanding performance, however, was given by J.B. Wyker, as King Herod. His one song cameo as the decadent, effeminate king, was hilarious and nearly stole the show.

The supporting cast of dancers, choruses, and musicians was quite good, although the orchestra had problems staying in tune through some of the more difficult parts of the score.

The lighting and staging were extremely well thoughout, and some potentially awkward problems were solved in novel ways.

It was a classy, energetic, and convincing production, and more than deserved the standing ovation and 3 curtain calls that it received.

Art Attack succumbs; crowd not attuned

Art Attack
Blue Wall, April 9

By RICHARD ALAN
Collegian Correspondent

My thoughts are droned to the volume of keys in the molecular form
"Free" Limo by Rachelle of Art Attck.

Art Attack played the Blue Wall last Thursday night to a largely unappreciative audience. Although the group is New York City based, three of the groups six members hail from Lexington, Mass. The group's bass player, David Winston, is currently enrolled in the University of Massachusetts as an electrical engineering major. Andrea, who performs backup vocals, attended UMass last year. Art Attack's other members are David's brother, Leslie, on drums, Pierre on guitar (a classic '57 Les Paul Sunburst), Claire on keyboards and synthesizer, and Rachelle on lead vocals and flute.

Erroneously billed as a "melodic punk" band (like calling the Beatles a jazz group) many who came to hear Art Attack were not prepared for their progressive style. Thus audience expectations did not jive with Art Attack's performance and many left dissappointed.

Which is all too bad because Art Attack has a lot to offer. Easily beating the locally popular Scientific Americans at their own game, Art Attack represents a fusion of funk based avant-garde jazz with highly expressionistic melodies and lyrics.

Art Attack performed two sets, some seventeen songs. The group writes—or perhaps creates is a more appropriate term—all of their own music, lyrics by Rachelle. Their songs are rhythmically based with heavy bass lines supplying the framework over which the melodies are laced. The results are particularly interesting. Off-hand one would think that Rachelle's airy, somewhat spacy, melodies would be at odds with the band's jazz-funk rhythmic lines. But what strikes one most about Art Attack is the keen musical sensitivity the members show for each other.

Individual soloing is limited, rather the group improvises as a unit, a task that "I don't feel good, I feel great," said launch director George Page.

President Reagan watched on television from the White House after his first nights sleep at home since he was shot on March 30.

Columbia is the first spaceship designed to land back on Earth like an airplane, to be refurbished for repeated round-trips into orbit. A fleet of at least four of these revolutionary ships will form the backbone of the U.S. space program for the next two decades.

The shuttles will carry up satellites and space laboratories for military, scientific and commercial projects, with heavy emphasis on defense flights as the Pentagon moves to counter what it considers a growing Russian threat from space. The craft is the size of a jetliner and can ferry up as many as seven persons and 32 tons of cargo in its 60-foot-long bay.

While the National Aeronautics and Space Administration has been developing the shuttle—two years behind schedule because the craft incorporates so much advanced technology—the Soviets have been operating for years with essentially the same Soyuz and Salyut space vehicles.

U.S. observers say the Russians are developing a shuttle vehicle but they believe it is much smaller than Columbia and perhaps 10 years behind.

Columbia initiated the third decade of manned space flight—roaring into orbit on the 20th anniversary of the historic orbital flight of Soviet cosmonaut Yuri Gagarin, on April 12, 1961.

Moral decisions leave women in self-conflict

By LISA PEDULLA
Collegian Correspondent

Women face a conflict in making decisions "between their wish not to hurt others and not to hurt themselves," said Harvard professor Carol Gilligan in a psychology symposium at Amherst College Friday afternoon.

Citing a study on students at Radcliffe College done in 1973, Gilligan said making moral decisions leaves women "suspended between the virtue of selflessness and the integrity of their own lives." Responses to the study found that some women defined morality as a power to take responsibility for themselves and others. "Women feel an obligation to society without taking from others," Gilligan said.

Gilligan said due to the meregence of women's rights and the legalization of abortion , women are beginning to view morality as being centered on both rights and responsibilities. She said the Radcliffe students partaking in the study found the issue of rights brought them to question the "stoicism of self denial. The concept of rights change women's concepts of themselves," Gilligan said. She said women are challenging their needs. "Women now consider themselves in a universe of people for whom it is necessary to care."

Amherst professor Elizabeth Aires, who has done studies on how male and female groups approach moral dilemmas, said women never develop an autonomous sense of selves and have a greater perspective for caring because they bear children.

Aires said she has found in studies that "men's morality is mediated by rules" and "women's morality is mediated by responsibility." In a study she conducted of Amherst College students, Aires said, "A greater percentage of all male groups fell into the category of rules," and all women's groups showed "a broader concern for people than all male groups."

Aires said Amherst College students violated many of the stereotypical sex roles. "Women at Amherst are not typical of the sex stereotypes." In mixed groups, men tend to dominate, but in her study Aires found the women dominated the interactions. Aires said she found in her study of the decision-making methods of both sexes that "while some sex roles are changing these seem more deeply rooted."

★ Art attack

requires an intensity and attentiveness, not to mention a sheer musical ability, that is not often found around here. Leslie's ability to accompany the lead vocals with his drumming was especially superior in this respect.

It is unfortunate that Art Attack did not play to an audience more attune to and more ready for, their style of music. For Art Attack is a challenge much in the same way the Velvet Underground was in the 60's, Art Attack is attempting to further a style of jazz that stagnated around 1974 with Miles Davis' On The Corner, combining it with topical, emotional, lyrical, and melodic content and a desire to reach the audience in ways that the jazz of '74 had quite given up on.

UMass, reported energy savings of 20 percent by turning off heating systems and closing buildings whenever possible.

Following Ohio State's lead, the Energy Office report states UMass's "traditional open-door policy (which allows buildings to be kept open at night) would need modification."

Closing buildings during off-hours, creating an energy incentive plan, and renovating and repairing heating and cooling systems in several buildings on campus are all part of the university's preliminary efforts to save energy and money.

Tomorrow: A look at what one student group is doing to conserve energy at UMass.

James Caan and Tuesday Weld discuss the past and plan for the future in Thief.

Thief steals the show

Thief takes it

By ANDREW GORDON
Collegian Staff

Thief, a new movie starring James Caan as the title character, takes a tired old theme and pumps new life into it. It is well written, directed and acted, and may surprise audiences because it is so good.

Caan's portrayal of Frank, an ex-convict and full time thief, is strong and matches his past solid performances as Joanathan E.

FILM

in Rollerball and the title character in The Gambler.

After losing many years in jail, Frank feels he must make up for lost time by rushing into a blissful domestic life. Caan perfectly captures Frank's sense of urgency. He meets up with Tuesday Weld and quickly pursuades her to marry him. They adopt a baby and buy a house.

Frank will not let anything stand between him and his well-diagramed dream. Of course thievery does not fit into his new life, so Frank joins with an underworld boss for a last big "score" that will financially cover the rest of his straight life. The plan goes bad when the boss refuses to let Caan go when their contractual obligations have been met. Frank is a free man and values that freedom. I won't reveal the ending but I will say that it is, although slightly confusing, explosive and emotional.

Tuesday Weld co-stars and matches the fine performance of Caan. The supporting cast is also good, particularly Willie Nelson as Frank's mentor and former prison cellmate, and James Belushi (John's brother) as his partner and Robert Prosky as the criminal boss. They all have their moments. Reformed diamond thief John Santucci served as technical consultant for the film as well as playing the part of a corrupt cop who tries to shake Frank down.

The movie is almost totally the project of Michael Mann, who produced, wrote and directed the flick. Mann, who has worked almost solely in television, makes an impressive debut and shows a real feel for the medium of film. Thief has none of those superficial little qualities that have become synonymous with television. Along with editor Dov Hoenig and cinematographer Donald Thorin, Mann captures the look and feel of the criminal subculture and keeps the film running at a fast and steady pace.

The music, by Tangerine Dream, who also did the score for 1977's Sorcerer, is tense and electric. It conveys the quick, dangerous mood of the film and subject matter.

Overall, Thief is a superior film, both in content and production. It is rated R for the language and fairly graphic scenes of violence.

Thief is currently playing at the Mountain Farms 4 Cinema in the Mountain Farms Mall.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Talking to Ralph

Some things never change

Kevin Cullen

It's been more than two and a half years since Seta Rampersad was found dead in a motel room in South Deerfield, and even today her parents don't know why their daughter is dead.

When the death of Seta Rampersad is recalled by local law enforcement officials, it is invariably termed "mysterious." What is nearly as mysterious is the fact that, after two a half years, no more is known about the facts surrounding the death than on Sept. 13, 1978, when employees of the Motel 6 stumbled upon her body in room 240.

Seta Rampersad was a part-time student at the University of Massachusetts at the time of her death. Her financial aid had been cut, so she took a job as a waitress in a Northampton restaurant to help put herself through school. On the night of her death, she had been with fellow employees at the motel. In subsequent testimony, three of those present in the motel room testified that Rampersad experienced epileptic seizures during the night, but no attempt to call for medical assistance was made.

At age 20, Seta Rampersad was dead.

Following the death, one district attorney, John M. Callahan, called for a judicial inquest to determine the exact circumstances surrounding the death. An inquest is neither a civil nor criminal hearing; it's an attempt to find facts.

At Seta Rampersad's inquest, no facts were found.

The inquest, held at Greenfield District Court, consisted of five days of actual testimony and, in accordance with state law, was closed to the public. Twenty-four witnesses, including three doctors, testified and, still, the cause of death could not be determined.

The state pathologist who performed the autopsy, Dr. Ambrose Keeley, could not determine why Seta Rampersad died, though the actual pathological reason was listed as pulmonary congestion and edema—that is, the congestion of her lungs with fluid. But why, just why Seta Rampersad's lungs filled up has never been determined, so her parents sit in their Milton home, still not knowing why their daughter died before her 21st birthday.

Several efforts were made to re-open the case, but Hampshire-Franklin County District Attorney Thomas Simons consistently held that the inquest found no evidence of any unlawful acts, and further that the death was not caused by the negligence of any individual.

Try telling that to Mr. and Mrs. Sonny Rampersad. They said there were scratches and bruises around their daughter's mouth when they viewed her body the day after her death. They want an explanation, and they haven't got one.

Of course, it doesn't help that Seta Rampersad happened to be black. It doesn't help that her parents happen to be working class. And it certainly doesn't help that no one around here wants to make a big deal about some 20-year-old black woman being found dead in a South Deerfield motel.

"I'm not interested in money," her father, Sonny Rampersad, said after Simons officially closed the case Jan. 31, 1979. "A million dollars won't bring her back."

Seta Rampersad wanted to go to law school and become a lawyer, her father said.

If she had, maybe somebody could find out why black women die and nobody gives a damn.

More is less

The April 6th edition of the Collegian contained two interesting and sadly discouraging items:

1. Governor Ed King has warned that UMass students can expect a $200 per year in-state tuition hike next fall.

2. In his budget recommendations for fiscal year 1982 King has also suggested that UMass get $605,000 less than last year.

Aside from the clear message he sends to the newly appointed Board of Regents with both of these statements; King seems to be teaching the students a bitter lesson: that more (tuition) is less (education).

Why don't you join her?

The rally outside the Student Union Friday was against the proposed tuition hikes and the national cuts in financial aid. I nodded approvingly to the 100 or so demonstrators as I passed on my way into Earth Foods for lunch. "Wow," I thought, "it's a good thing I'm graduating now." I got my lunch, sat down and started to eat; I was hurried as I had a 1:00 class to get to. My mind wandered to the errands I had to do that afternoon; pay the telephone bill, pick up some groceries and pay the rent.

I dashed out the south exit of the Student Union, the same as I'd entered and strolled off in direction of Herter Hall. As I cleared the initial gathering for the demonstration, which was still in process, I heard the speaker yell to those who passed by in apathy. "This is something which will effect us all," he spoke. "Yeah," I thought, as I neared the side entrance of the library tower, "their indifference certainly won't help the situation. I stopped dead in my tracks; "their indifference...what about mine?" I turned around and glanced at the speaker who was vehemently urging all in hearing range to call the Board of Regents and voice your disapproval of the tuition hike.

Here I was, my last semester, home free, and only at this point because of the financial aid I'd received for the last four years. How easy it was for me to sail through school free from financial worry and how easy it was for me to sail by that group who were out fighting the proposed tuition hike and financial aid cut because I no longer needed it.

I'm going to Boston on Tuesday the 14th to fight the proposed tuition hike and wish I could go to Washington about financial aid. I'm going because I had my chance here and was lucky enough to have reaped the many fruits UMass has to offer. I'm going because education is the only way to pull this country out of the mess it's in. With the squeeze on public education financial aid cuts and the tuition hike will incur, education will be out of touch for many less fortunate than me. I'm going because I've survived, ate, drank, and slept only because I had financial aid. I'm going to Boston because I want everyone here at UMass to have the same chance I did. You had your chance...why don't you join me?

No sound arguments

This letter is in reaction to the attention-grabber used by the pro-choice table in the Campus Center on Wednesday. We do not wish to argue the issue of abortion itself. Nor do we wish to attack any group's right to express its opinion or to lobby for support.

The issue here is the grotesque and bigger-than-life coat-hanger that was hung over the table. Instead of relying on the strength of their arguments, the table's sponsors chose to insult our intelligence and "grab us" with their coat-hanger.

The coat-hanger appeals to our sense of physical repulsion and ignores the fact that abortion is an emotional, controversial and religious issues that questions our basic assumptions about our own sense of human life.

Whether "coat-hanger abortions" are a reality or not, the group's reliance on this grotesque display causes us to believe they have no sound arguments to present.

Can we permit the death penalty?

I doubt that, with all the national and international news happening today, many readers paid much attention to the small article at the bottom of page 3 of Thursday's Globe (4/9). Francis Hamauer of Milwaukee, Wisconsin was released from jail after serving eight years of a 60-year sentence for the abduction, rape, and attempted murder of a 15-year-old girl in 1968. The victim identified Hermauer as the man who raped her, stabbed her 30 times, and left her for dead. A new laboratory test, developed last year, performed on semen and sperm on the victim's clothing, showed that the attacker had Type B blood. Hermauer's blood type is A.

This test was not available in 1972, when Hermauer was convited. The FBI says that, had it been available, Hermauer would have been ruled out as a suspect, despite the victim's identification of him as her assailant. Many, upon hearing this story, feel sympathy for this innocent man who spent eight years in prison for a heinous crime he didn't commit. But there's another side of it, which may not be immediately obvious. If this case had taken place in California in 1960, or in any state where rape is a capital offense, Hermauer would now be dead. His wife, who has stood beside him for eight tortuous years, would now be hearing a weal apology from the government, which had mistakenly executed her husband.

Can we, as a nation, in good conscience, permit the death penalty, and accept the risk that an innocent person might die at the hands of the state? I, for one, am not willing to take that risk.

Looking back

By Carla Lesh

The Massachusetts Collegian for the week of April 12, 1933 included a column entitled "The College Spectator" which consisted of short stories concerning the world in general.

One of the stories told of the new German leader: "The origins of his anti-Jewish feeling is found in Herr Hitler's belief that the Nordic peoples of which the German peoples are a part should keep their blood from defilement by the anti-Nordic races. The German people, he thinks, are destined to become the greatest nation in the world. The irony of Hitler's belief and reason for his anti-semetic campaign lies in the fact that Herr Hitler is not of Nordic blood." The reporter could not have realized that in a few years Hitler would be the leader of the Holocaust.

An 1885 graduate of the Massachusetts State College was interviewed by the Collegian about his theory concerning better health of the American people due to the Depression of the 1930's. According to Dr. Goldthwait, people had less money to spend going out and stayed at home getting regular hours of sleep and eating simpler meals. "Businessmen," he said, "necessarily employ themselves in honest work. They are no longer able to dissipate and live that kind of life which is ruinious to the physical well being of men."

Due to the massive unemployment of the 1930's, the 1933 college graduates did not have much hope of getting a job after graduation according to a Collegian article. Graduates were advised to "hang around campus taking graduate courses, since it will do him no good to hunt a job."

Concerning what was called "the present fad of women wearing pants" a Boston University student was quoted, "I would rather be a good woman than a poor form of a man. Women are good enough in their own right without aping man in any way."

Society should encourage youth

CINCINNATI (AP) — Modern society focuses mainly on the negative aspects of life which adversely affects young people, according to an associate professor from the University of Massachusetts.

"Instead of always zeroing in on problems, we should be more encouraging," suggested Warren Schumacher, director of the university's Center for the Family. "Teachers tend to lay guilt trips on kids when they should be more sensitive. They'll stereotype kids when we need to see them as individuals."

Schumacher, speaking Saturday at Xavier University during a seminar on the past, present and future of the American family, said the country must retrain its teachers to create a "curriculum for caring" if society is to progress in the future.

"We need to involve kids in more creative experiences as part of education," Schumacher said. "Talking at or with them is no good unless we provide experiences for caring. We have to involve the whole comunity in the process."

Efforts by some interest groups to place all education in the home do not reflect poorly on the quality of today's teachers.

"Those groups are walking on thin ice and grabbing at logs," he said. "They feel everything's up for grabs in a society where we shoot our heroes. The people feel nothing stable anymore, but in reality the majority want responsible education in the schools."

Schumacher said that recent changes in society, primarily dealing with children left alone by working mothers, have led to an impersonal approach to education.

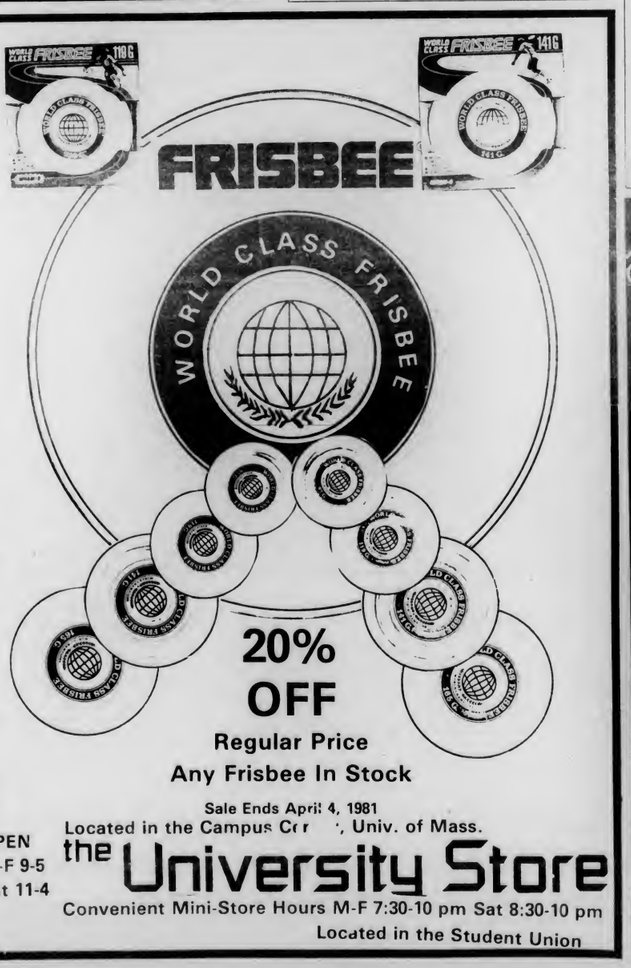
"Families on the whole are in good shape, but our society tends to do them in," Schumacher said. "What's needed are natural support networks through communities."

There are such program available in Massachusetts, he said, explaining that community members rotate afternoons spent at home to assist neighborhood children.

"That person puts a sign up in his window saying there's someone around who cares and can help if a problem comes up, or if the kid needs a 'big person' to talk to," Schumacher said. "But it requires a total commitment, since occasionallly people have to take time off from work."

Families in the future will be smaller and there will be fewer households with children, he predicted, adding, "There'll be more elderly and more 'yuppies — young people moving into inner cities to revitalize them.

"This will cause some new family forms, which are fine.



with all best wishes

Imagery used to battle cancer

BLUE HILL, Maine (AP) — Five years have gone by since Erik Esselstyn recruited armies of polar bears to help in his fight against a rare form of cancer.

The battle, it appears, has been won. But polar bears, a steadfast ally and a dangerous enemy, remain a source of strength in the life of the 44-year-old former college dean.

Although he's never come in contact with a real polar bear, Esselstyn sees countless imaginary ones every day. He visualizes them coursing through his bloodstream and lymphatic system, always on the lookout for cancer cells, always ready to devour them.

"There's a warm fuzziness about polar bears," says Esselstyn. "And at the same time, they're incredible hunters. They're brave. They're resolute. They're survivors. Persistent survivors."

Visualization, a biofeedback related technique pioneered by Carol and Stephanie Simonton at their cancer research center in Fort Worth, Texas, uses the mind as a weapon against cancer. By a process similar to meditation, it seeks to activate the body's natural defenses — its white blood cells — so that the cancer cells are destroyed.

Not surprisingly, the technique and the philosophy behind it have generated controversy within the medical profession. But at the same time, Esselstyn and other students of the Simontons have won a growing number of adherents throughout the country.

At its spring meeting in Seattle, the board of directors of the American Cancer Society will examine the Simonton technique "This is a very controversial subject," said Dr. G. Congdon Wood, the society's assistant vice president for professional education. While acknowledging that visualization has provided psychological support for some cancer patients, he said the lack of adequately documented research makes it difficult to evaluate its effectiveness.

Visualization is used in conjunction with surgery, radiation or drugs, not as a replacement for them. The Simontons contend that their technique can help ease some of the painful side effects of the conventional therapies.

Space race is on

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — The United States has rejoined the space race.

The last time Americans were in space, it was a joint mission with the Soviet Union. Since then, 43 cosmonauts have been launched into orbit. Two have been afloat in space since last March.

Now, the Soviets are not alone.

Columbia's successful launch ends a six-year drought in the U.S. man-in-space program and signals this nation's intention to regain eminence in a domain it once dominated with the man-on-the-moon missions.

Since the dawn of the space age, the world's two superpowers have used that arena as a symbol of national power. The renewed race will focus heavily on military superiority.

With American astronauts on the sidelines since 1975, the Soviets have wrested away every endurance record once held by the Americans. The latest pair has been aloft in a small station for a month and they may stay up more than half a year.

The flight of John Young and Robert Crippen, slated for just over two days, seems slight in comparison. The big edge for the U.S. is Columbia.

Columbia, says Young, is light years ahead of the Soviet spaceships.

AND GENERALLY, SENATOR, I FEEL THERE'S BEEN AN OVERREACT RESPONSE TO THE DEAD NUN SITUATION IN EL SALVADOR, ESPECIALLY IN LIGHT OF EVIDENCE THAT THE VICTIMS MIGHT HAVE BEEN TERMINATED WHILE RUNNING A ROADBLOCK.
SECRETARY HAIG, APART FROM YOUR SICKENING IMPLICATION THAT THE NUNS WERE SOMEHOW RESPONSIBLE FOR THEIR OWN DEATHS, PERHAPS YOU CAN EXPLAIN HOW RUNNING A ROADBLOCK WOULD RESULT IN THEIR BEING FOUND RAPED AND SHOT IN THE HEAD.

Saturday's losses also marked the end of a nine-game home run streak for UMass. The Minutemen had hit at least one home run in every game since March 27, when the team was playing in the Sun-Lite Classic in San Diego. But Mssrs. Ziegler and McCaskill had something to say about that.

In the opener, Vermont second baseman Mike Pash broke a scoreless deadlock in the fifth inning, with a line drive two-run homer to left, scoring leftfielder Jim Farrell in front of him. Farrell, who turned out to be the winning run, reached base after an apparent double play ball was thrown away.

UMass came back with one in their half of the sixth, when second baseman Dean Bennett singled, moved to second on a walk to shortstop Vin Bonanno, then scored on a single up the middle by centerfielder Mark Litano.

But Ziegler, who last year shut out the Minutemen 1-0, got out of the seventh with a double play ball and a fine running catch by centerfielder John Bartlett to end the game.

For Todd, who gave perhaps his most impressive performance this season, it was nothing short of hand-wringing frustration. The junior righthander walked just three, his lone strikeout coming in the second, when he got out of a second-and-third, none out situation.

Cramer could share in Todd's frustration after the second game.

After being kept off balance by Ziegler's breaking pitches in the opener, UMass tried for seven innings to catch up with McCaskill's fastball. The hard-throwing McCaskill kept UMass at bay until the bottom of the third, when singles by the Bennett brothers, Dean and Barry, and Bonanno gave the Minutemen a short-lived 1-0 lead.

For the second consecutive outing, Cramer was impressive, retiring ten of the first 11 men he faced, but Vermont got the three they needed in their half of the fourth.

After Pash singled, he scored when catcher Dan Gasparino hit a towering double to center. Bill Currier's single to right brought home Gasparino, making it 2-1. On the play, Currier moved to second on the attempt to get Gasparino at the plate, and to third when the throw skidded out of play. Currier came in with the gamewinner on a perfectly executed suicide squeeze bunt laid down by first baseman Bob Boucher.

UMass got within one in the sixth, when first baseman Warren McReddie singled to center, moved to second on a balk, then scored when rightfielder Keith Lovellette delivered a bounding single to right.

But McCaskill saved two of his six strike outs for the seventh, and pinch-hitter Bruce Emerson, who singled, was stranded at first with the potential tying run.

"Those two (Ziegler and McCaskill) gave us the best performances we've seen in a long time," said Vermont head coach Jack Leggett. "They just stayed ahead of everybody and made some tough pitches."

Besides dropping UMass to the .500 mark, Saturday's losses will hurt its second-place ranking in New England. And, as Bergquist observed, with its third loss in New England Div. 1, UMass can afford to lose perhaps just two or three more games in their region, while winning the Eastern Eight title, next month, to be even considered for post-season play.

UMass now takes to the road for seven away games, including three doubleheaders, beginning with a single game at Boston College, tomorrow at 3 p.m.

★ Gorillas

day, when at 2:40 in the first quarter he took a pass from goalie Chris Benedetto, who had run upfield after a save, and slammed the ball past Rutgers' John Nuzzi. Two minutes later Weller passed to attacker Morgan Mohrman who put the Gorillas out fron to stay.

20 seconds later Mohrman and Weller did a repeat performance, capitalizing on a man-up situation.

The Knights took a try at playing UMass' fast-break style of lacrosse but capitalized on none of the attempts. Rutgers, a larger, slower team, had all of their fast-breaks broken up by Kinnane, Martino and Brown.

The Minutemen, wary of having to overcome any five-point leads, stayed one step ahead of the Knights, getting to the ground balls one step quicker, stealing the ball and staying ahead on the scoreboard.

Midfielder Mike Lavin showed the crowd some solid stickhandling and in the second quarter knocked the ball away from Rutgers' Ed Quinones, scooped the ground ball and passed to Weller who put in his third score of the day.

Senior attacker Skip Vosburgh set up two UMass scores that looked like patented dump on Rutgers deals. The first came midway through the first quarter when Vosburgh, running at full speed towards the net, hit Mohrman with a quick pass and Mohrman lopped in an over the shoulder shot past Nuzzi. Then with six seconds left on the clock in the third quarter, Vosburgh pitched to Fogarty who batted in a perfectly placed ball for UMass' tenth goal.

Top performances highlight UMass relays

Wright and relays highlights for UM

By KENNETH ROLT
Collegian Staff

A flurry of superior performances and exciting competition capped off a superb day of track and field at the sixth annual University of Massachusetts Relays meet, on Saturday at Llewellyn Derby Track.

The downpour which greeted the early part of the meet did not foreshadow what was to come. The fireworks began with a New England Outdoor Collegiate Record performance by Olympian Geoff Smith.

The Briton, running in the black and white of Providence College, opened the 1500 meter run with a scorching 57 quarter mile. The swift pace became quickly apparent, the crowd buzzing as Smith made it a solo run at the half mile, and then went by the three quarter mile mark in under 3:00.

The Englishman, winning by five seconds in 3:42.6, (equal to a 4:00 mile), broke the New England collegiate Record by 1.8 seconds.

Highlights for UMass included Sophomore John Wright successfully defended his high hurdles title, crushing a good field with a school record 14.3 performance. Chris Omeltchenko finished a close second in the steeple-chase with a time of 9:08.4 qualifying him to compete in the IC4A's.

One of the most emotion packed races of the day was the 800 meter relay, featuring UMass against arch rival UConn. John Wright, Bill Devarney, Rick Cady and Rick Trunfio went head to head against a stacked Huskies team, in a race that was a battle from start to finish. The Minutemen came out on top, but were later disqualified on a technical infraction.

The enthusiasm wasn't lost, however, and the home team came back with another superb relay performance. Senior captains Bob Pearson, Rick Trunfio, sophomore Mike Stead, and freshman Brian Osborne were just nipped by a Fitchburg State mile relay squad that owes its victory to the 47.8 anchor effort by speedster Rob White.

Not to be outdone by the events on the track, Andy Bessette whirled the ball and chain out to a 216'9" winning toss. The number one American hammer thrower was pleased with his performance: "April is a good month to be in condition, and I hope for consistency." The former University of Connecticut star noted that the meet was just another step in a ladder. With a berth on the World Cup III team being his immediate goal, "I'll go for the TAC meet in June," added Bessette.

The Minutemen, along with many schools that competed at the UMass Relays, will journey to Newton next weekend for the Boston College Relays.

McCrone and Snow top women finishers

Under cloudy skies and an early morning rain some top performances were recorded at the UMass Relays held last Saturday on UMass' outdoor track. The UMass women competed against some of the best collegiate track athletes in the Northeast in what is traditionally the first major meet of the spring season.

Junior Judy McCrone was the only UMass women's winner in the running events when she won the two-mile in 10:31.4. Cathy Petrick also ran the two-mile but failed to place.

"Judy ran a very good, tactical race, coach Ken Banda said. "She'll have to go out a little faster later in the season to compete in the big meets against the best runners," Banda said.

UMass' sole win in the field events came in the javelin from Karen Snow with a throw of 41.80 meters. "It was her best throw this year and she had to throw against the wind. She could throw better at the BC Relays latter in the week," coach Banda said.

Junior Micki Callahan proved once again to be the main strength of the UMass team by competing in four events. Callahan took second in the second heat of the 100 yard high hurdles in 16.5 and sixt in the finals in 17.5. Callahan also placed third in the long jump with a leap of 5.08 meters with Julie Horgan taking fifth with a jump of 4.77 meters.

Callahan will attempt the seven event heptathalon at the BC Relays next week. The heptathalon includes the long jump, high jump, high hurdles, 220 yard dash, javelin, shotput and half-mile run.

The 4x880 yard relay team of Caroline Gardiner, Sally Anderson, Iris McDonaugh and McCrone finished fourth with a time of 9:27.2. Gardiner ran a personal best in her leg of the relay with a 2:19.

Gardiner also ran the mile in 5:19 after the relay. It was her best time of the season. The mile was won by Judy St. Hilaire of UVM in 4:50. St. Hilaire has dominated women's collegiate distance running in New England for over a year.

The women's next meet will be this Tuesday at Springfield against Springfield College, UConn and Southern Conneticut. The team will also travel to the BC Relays next Thursday thru Saturday in Boston.

Netwomen edge PC, 6-3

The UMass women's tennis team scored it's second win of the season (2-1) at Providence College Saturday afternoon. The match score was 6-3, the Minutewomen were able to win four of the six single matches and two of the three doubles matches. Despite this solid performance by UMass, Providence proved to be a tough opponent.

"There were a lot of close matches and three setters," coach John Beal said.

UMass's number one singles player Elizabeth Sullivan defeated Vicky Govatos 7-5,3-6,7-5. "It was a very good match," Beal said. "She constantly fought back in the third set and was finally able to pull it off."

Playing in the number two spot for the Minutewomen was captain Joanne Vennochi who just got by Anne Manzini in two incredibly close sets. The first set ended in a 7-6 tie breaker, while the second went almost as long ending at 7-5. Paula Natale went three sets at the number three spot to win her match in a comeback effort against Patty Carver 3-6, 7-6, 6-4. Finishing up singles play was Patricia Sullivan at the number six spot. She won her match with one of the lower set scores of the contest, winning 6-3, 6-2.

"It was an excellent performance by the team as a whole," Beal said. "This was a very important match for us, it shows the people selecting for the Easterns where we fit in and that we're not just a fluke team." Providence finished first in the Easterns last year and 16th in the Nationals as a division II team. They have just recently moved up to division I (UMass is division II).

Thursday UMass will host the University of Connecticut at 2:30 on the upper Boyden Courts. The match should be a tough one, UMass has not beaten UConn in three years.

"It should be an excellent match as we both beat Boston College by the same score," Beal said. "If the team practices hard this week we should be able to beat them."

The UMass women's crew team came back from their Saturday race on the Connecticut River in Hartford with one victory and one loss against the boats of Trinity.

The novice-8 boat won, beating Trinity with a time of 7:38.1, making their record a neat 2-0. The varsity-8 boat came in four seconds behind the Trinity boat with a finishing time of 6:58, evening off its record for the season at 1-1.

The conditions of the water Saturday gave the Trinity rowers a definite advantage over UMass. "It wasn't because they couldn't beat them," UMass coach Barbara Roche said. "It was because they couldn't get the boat moving from too much water."

Rough water, a lot of waves and a strong current threw water into the boat, slowing the eight varsity women's pace down enough to let Trinity take the lead.

"Trinity is used to those conditions," Roche said. "If we had more experience in rough water we could have done better."

"The novice race was really good," Roche said. "They were ahead at the start, then fell behind for 500 meters. The boats were neck and neck after that and took it away in the last 250 meters."

This weekend the women will be racing against Northeastern University and Smith College. The race is scheduled for Saturday at 11 a.m. in Boston at the MIT boathouse. "This is our toughest race coming up," Roche said, "they're two really strong teams."

First time ever

Batters drop 2 to Vermont

By KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

It had to happen sooner or later, and it happened Saturday afternoon.

The comeback never came.

The University of Massachusetts baseball team dropped a doubleheader to Vermont, as the Catamounts hung on for one-run wins in both games, 2-1 in the opener, 3-2 in the nightcap, at Lorden Field.

For UMass (9-9), it ended a three-game win streak and marked only the second time in their last nine games that they had failed to come from behind to win. It also marked the first time in UMass head coach Dick Bergquist's 15 years of coaching that Vermont (9-9) had swept two from the Minutemen.

In both seven-inning games, pitching was the story as each team got complete games from their hurlers. In the opener, Vermont's Chip Ziegler (2-2) held UMass to just four hits—their (UMass) lowest total all season—as the senior lefthander fooled the Minutemen all afternoon with a collection of o.f-speed junk.

Sophomore righthander Kirk McCaskill (1-2) gave Vermont the sweep with a seven-hit, six-strike out performance in the second game.

Tough-luck losers for UMass were Vin Todd (1-2) and Steve Cramer (2-2), who gave up just seven and six hits, respectively, but did not receive the offensive help from their teammates which until recently had become taken for granted.

"Well, it was bound to happen sometime," Bergquist said, after his club had dropped to 4-3 in New England play. "We just didn't hit today. You've got to give credit to both of their (Vermont's) pitchers; they threw two really fine ball games. I was very pleased with our pitching. Our pitching was good: their's was just a bit better."

Gorillas trample Knights

Host BC today

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Whoever set up the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse schedule has a blatant streak of sadism running through him....scheduling what Mass head coach Dick Garber calls four critical games (including an aggressive Rutgers squad), in the span of seven days. But the Gorillas are holding up in that four-game stint and have added the Scarlet Knights of Rutgers to their dump-on column.

The seventh ranked Gorillas stayed one-up on the Knights Saturday afternoon at Boyden field, and in front of a crowd of 4000 plus, outplayed the eleventh ranked Knights to a convincing 12-9 win, bringing their record to 4-0.

Garber's crew hosts Boston College this afternoon at 3 p.m. at Boyden for game number three. "They're a decent lacrosse team," Garber said of a BC team that is coming off a 9-7 win over Harvard.

Mass defenseman Paul Kinnane dumped on Mark Tyree (Rutgers' leading scorer for three years,) all Saturday afternoon and held him to just two goals. Kinnane spent his time instigating broken plays, stealing the ball to set up Gorilla scores and just plain aggravating Rutgers' attack squad. Kinnane, Steve Martino and Doug Brown saw to it that the ball spent much of its time on UMass' offensive end of the field, keeping up with the Knights' aggressive, physical style of play.

Attackman Jim Weller brought his season totals to 15 goals and 13 assists with four goals and four assists against Rutgers. Weller erased the only lead the Knights had all

Mangini puts two out, mittwomen sweep

By ELIZABETH McGOWAN

The University of Massachusetts varsity softball team evened its record at 3-3 on Saturday by sweeping both ends of a doubleheader from the University of New Hampshire at Durham, 6-1 and 8-3.

UMass -starting pitcher, Kathy "K.O." O'Connell, upped her record to 2-2 while pitching a three hitter in the first game. She totaled three strike outs and walked only two batters.

The only run the Wildcats could muster off O'Connell's consistent pitching came in the third inning. After a single and an infield error put UNH runners at first and second, UMass shortstop, Allyson Rioux turned a double play. An infield error eventually let the lone Wildcat run score.

The mittwomen scored all their runs in the second and third innings. "New Hampshire was pretty good, but we just hit the heck out of them. It's about time," coach Elaine Marasco said.

Right fielder, Maddy Mangini, rapped a round-tripper, her first of two on the afternoon, for two RBI's in the second inning. UMass then held a 2-0 lead until their bats exploded in the third.

With one out, Rioux and catcher Jackie Gaw (3 for 4) singled. O'Connell then knocked Rioux to third and was safe on a fielder's choice. After Rioux scored on a UNH error, center fielder Brenda Simmons, drove in Gaw with a single. Big Stick for the afternoon, Chris Coughlin (3 for 4) slapped a triple off the UNH relief pitcher to drive in the last two runs of the inning.

The Minutewomen continued to hit at a strong clip in the second game. The squad had 23 hits on the afternoon, 10 coming in the second game which they won, 8-3.

UMass wasted no time in scoring. In the first inning, Rioux walked, advanced on an infield out by Gaw and scored the first run on a fielder's choice by Simmons. After left fielder O'Connell walked, Coughlin singled to load the bases. First baseman, Fran Troy, stroked a single down the right field line, scoring O'Connell.

Wildcat pitcher, Lu Bates, calmed the mittwomen's bats for the next three innings, retiring the nine batters she faced in order.

Mary Ann Lombardi (2 for 3) opened the fifth inning with a clean single. The bases were loaded after pitcher Karen Poirier and Rioux were issued free passes. However, the scoring threat was squelched when Bates retired the next three batters.

Mangini made her only hit of the second game count, as she belted her second home-run, scoring Coughlin in the sixth inning.

Poirier, the designated hitter in the first game, pitched her way to a six hit victory in the nightcap. She had one strike out and gave up one base on balls while raising her record to 1-1.

"We made a couple of mental defensive errors, but will just have to work harder. We are looking forward to playing Springfield tomorrow," Marasco said.

The Minutewomen will meet Springfield College today in a 2:30 doubleheader at NOPE field.

Gazelles dump NU, 13-3

By RANDI J. MARCUS

It was the same as usual. They were ahead by two in the first minute, and by three in the first five minutes, so what else is new?

Then the UMass women's varsity lacrosse team (4-1), got caught off guard by Northeastern University's three consecutive goals in the middle of the first half, gained their composure and rallied to a 13-3 win Saturday at NOPE's upper field.

"Northeastern surprised us in the first half," coach Pam Hixon said,"We had some poor errors and were lethargic, but in the second half we got together and shut them out."

Co-captain Lynn Herbert scored immediately after the face off, and Whitney Thayer followed with a goal in the same minute.

"Some of the shots in the first half were at bad angles," Hixon said.She said the girls have been practicing all week with the "Bertha dummy" a life-size mannequin that is placed in the goalie position.

Margie Anderson scored for a 3-0 UMass lead, and before long Northeastern's Chris Dion reciprocated, and two more NU goals tied the score.

Hixon said her team is prepared mentally for teams like Northeastern,(2-3), but with a better team it would have been harder to come back and win.

The Gazelles displayed no problem regaining a lead, with Anderson grabbing two unassisted goals and Herbert one.

The Minutewomen started out slowly attempting their first goal for a good 10 minutes before Thayer, Herbert and Sue Caples exploded with four goals in three minutes.

Holly Jennings' defense proved too much for Northeastern's Ann Vera as her sprint down field was interrupted by a steal that was promptley passed to Caples to Anderson and back to Caples for UMass' 11th goal. Herbert concluded the afternoon with two goals assisted by Anderson.

The Gazelles will take a short trip to face Smith College at 4 p.m. tomorrow.

Atlanta: One More Victim

Victim number 23 of the Atlanta murders was found Thursday at about 11:30 a.m. in an abandoned apartment building in Atlanta. The body of 20-year-Old Larry Rogers a black male was found slain there as officials identified him as a retarded man who disappeared last week.

Public Safety Commissioner Lee Brown who had rushed to the north west Atlanta apartment refused to describe what the victim was wearing. He said he did not know the cause of death but he said, "we will carry the case as homicide, obviously."

Fulton County Chief Medical Examiner Robert Stivers said an autopsy on the body, which was identified shortly after it arrived at the morgue, had begun, but added it will "take us awhile."

Brown would not comment on whether there were any wounds on the body or the length of time it had been left in the abandoned apartment. He also refused to comment on the possibility that Rogers might have been killed somewhere else and dumped in the apartment.

Brown said police are still very anxious to learn the whereabouts of a man in a composite drawing released Tuesday. "We are greatly concerned about the identity of the man in the composite," he said. "We again request that the person, whoever he may be, come to the task force headquarters."

Before his body was found, the task force had been looking for Rogers since March 30 as he was seen getting into a stationwagon. The last person known to have seen Rogers was quoted in the Atlanta Constitution as saying he was concerned when he saw Rogers get into a station wagon because he was "sitting so stiff and didn't wave at me."

In addition to the 23 slayings since July 1979, the police task force is also investigating the disappearances of two black youths--10-year-old Darron Glass, who vanished in September and 15-year-old Joseph Bell, last seen March 2.

7:00 a.m. Walk

"This march is in support of all the childrens right to live. The murders of innocent children today in Aaccepted.", said David Robinson, a student from the Amherst Regional High School and a member of the A.B.C. Program, in a walk which was held Wednesday the 8th at 7:00 in the morning.

The walk started at the Amherst Commons and ended in front of Wildwood Elemetary school. Along the way, the peaceful demonstrators shanted, "No more violence to our children, stop the killings in Atlanta."

In front of Amherst Regional Jr. High School, where the walk was to end, the people sang toghether,"We shall overcome.

The official head count came to 1,000 people. Aquila Ayana, the Resident Director for the A.B.C. Program stated that the turn out of the walk was good, especially at that early hour of the day. "Most important was the participation of the children. There were many children involved in the whole process of organizing and an overall interest in getting the word out to other schools in the area." stated Aquila. When asked about the outlook of the concern the people had towards the situatuion in Atlanta she said,"we had started out with the idea of educating people as to what was going on in Atlanta but, we found out that the mayority of the people already knew what was going on. They (the people) fealt frustrated not knowing what to do.The meer fact that 1,000 concerned citizens participated this morning is evidence of the solidarity and the strong support the people have".

I talked with three students form the Wildwood elementary school about the walk and what they thought about the whole situation in Atlanta.

Hamemth Swaminathan age 11 said that the experience of the walk was educational not only to him but to other people as well. "This walk showed the amount of concern people have. I think that what is going on in Atlanta is very crazy and pointless. It's like a movie. I don't see any reason why people have to kill inocent children."

"I don't think children should be dieing". Said Trey Lewis, age 9. "I think that the walk we had today might help it (the murders) stop. I think if we continue with marches like this one, the murderes will realize that what he or they are doing is wrong, and they will stop.

Zee Carpino, age 10 fealt that people shoud realize that by killing inocent children they will not accomplish anything."If I had a chance to talk with the mothers of the murdered children I would say that I was very sorry for what happend to their children and that people all over this country are greatly concerned and that we are doin all we can to stop this. Also I would tell them to never give up hope, because we care for what is happening."

Zimbabwe Economy

still going strong

Salisbury(AN)Zimbabwe's economy got a boost of $1.4 billion at an international donors conference held here between March 23 and March 27.

Attended by 267 delegates from 45 countries as well as 16 UN and 11 other international aid agencies, the Zimbabwe Reconstruction and development Conference has been hailed an overwhelming success by Prime Minister Robert Mugabe.

The pledges of aid for rural reconstruction and land distribution came from sources as unexpected as the Vatican, which promised $4.8 million, and the Isle of Jersey, which sent a check for $120,000.

Almost all of the aid came from Western countries. The United States pledged a total of $225 million over three years, dependent upon Congressional approval. Great Britain gave $283.2 million, and the World Bank agreed to $445.2 million in soft loans.

The aid is earmarked largely for land redistribution, reconstruction in the war-torn rural areas, and other projects not attractive to private, profit-oriented investment.

Zimbabwe has received over $2 billion in aid since its independence April 18,1980. The sum is impressive, yet OAU Secretary General Edem Kodjo pointed out that private investment in South Africa is 30 times greater than the total Zimbabwe aid.

Zimbabwe is seen as a strategic country insouthern Africa. A prosperous Zimbabwe can help its economically troubled neighbors. And it is a key state in the nine-member Southern Africa Development Coordinating Council's program to lessen the black-ruled states' dependence on South Africa. Four countries rely on Zimbabwe's roads and railways to get their goods to port.

Delegates at the donor's conference expressed the opinion that without a strong show of support for Zimbabwe from the West, the region could be susceptible to Soviet expansionism.

But the success of the Donor's Conference was mixed with some bad news. South Africa announced in the same week that it will end its preferential trade agreement with Zimbabwe, which will hurt the country's exports and increase its transportation problems. In addition, several economic indicators suggest that Zimbabwe may have difficulty sustaining the economic success of its first year of independence.

During the past year, Zimbabwe's economy has taken off like a rocket, according to a leading economist and head of the Dairy Marketing Board, Edward Cross. Real growth of the country's GNP is officially set at 8 percent for 1980, but Cross estimates that it might be as high as 10 percent.

The end of the ten-year bush war and the lifting of international economic sanctions have helped the country's business. In particular, a massive increase in consumption has resulted from the introduction of a minimum wage that increased labor's wages an average of 20 percent last year. The economy was also boosted by price reductions for some basic commodities, income tax cuts, and the entrance of tens of thousands of people into the cash economy, such as former guerrillas who are now paid by the government.

Mugabe can rightly claim that his government has improved the lot of the common man. Domestic consumption has increased by almost 40 percent in 1980, as people began enjoying milk, bread and meat in their daily diets. They also bought new clothes, appliances and cars.

However, many economists are asking how long this economic growth can lst and how long p;rivate industry can coexist happily with the new government's socialist aims.

Minister of Economic Planning Bernard Chidzero, who is largely reponsible for the success of the donors conference, has produced a government economic policy statement entitled "Growth with Equity," which maintains that increased social services to improve life for the country's people will be adequately financed by an economic growth rate of 8 percent per year. But my businessmen and bankers are more skeptical about growth prospects. A recent Standard Bank report forecast a growth rate of only 4 percent.

Among the restraints on the economy is a shortage of foreign currency. Many manufacturers are now running at maximum capacity but are unable to expand or modernize their plants with new imported equipment. Continued high consumption has already produced shortages in many sectors, from butter to refrigerators and carpets.

Another restraint is the drain of skilled labor. Although the flight of skilled whites has not been as high as many forecast, the loss is being felt. The key mining industry is running short of engineers and cannot train indigenous labor fast enough to meet expanding demands. While the national agriculture is booming, the country's capacity to produce fertilizer has dropped by an estimated 20 percent because of a loss of skilled labor, according to sources at the agricultura union. Another curcial constraint is transportation. the railways are already running at maximum capacity but are handling less than half of their orders. The railways are expected to be further burdened by the maize crop that is due in April. Most of the country's exports and imports go through South African railways, and the end of the preferential trade agreement means that their goods will get the same slow treatment that Zambia and Zaire currently receive from the South Africans.

Zimbabwe has an excellent road system, but the trucks are in short supply.

There are also fiscal problems the money supply has increased by about 40 percent.

There are also fiscal problems. The money supply has increased by about 40 percent and this has given the inflation rate, which has traditionally remained well below double figures, a hefty push upwards. Some sources say inflation may go as high as 15 percent next year. The current accounts balance of payments, which showed a healthy surplus last year, has now moved sharply into the deficit column, and it is likely to remain there as the level of imports continues to outstrip exports.

But perhaps the most disturbing factor in the economy is the continued large budgetary deficit. In the last budget the deficit was estimated at about $828 million, which was the equivalent of about one-third of the budgetary expediture, about the same as the previous two or three years. However, the government's plans to increase spending on education, health and social services, plus the continuing high level of defense expenditure, seems certain to increase this deficit, even though the treasury has introduced a number of measures to increase revenue, such as high duties on tobacco and alcohol and a broadened scope for the income tax.

Despite these problems, however, Zimbabwe's economic outlook seems considerably brighter than that of many other African countries. The agricultural sector in Zimbabwe is undergoing an unprecedented boom, led by a doubling of the maize output to over 200 million tons. Almost half of that will be exported.

The manufacturing sector will remain buoyant, and there should be some improvement in the value of mineral production. Observers also expect spin-offs in sales for the private sector when the reconstruction and rural development programs, which are to be financed through foreign aid, really get underway.

A party that represents the majority of the people in this country and that is willing to fight."

The Black United Front

"...Action such as this and the one in Harlem three weeks ago attended by 10,000 people is the way to send the message to the racist rulers of this country that we will not be intimidated, we will not tolerate these attacks....As the National Black Independent Political Party's charter states both parties, Democratic and Republican have betrayed us and are incapable and unwilling to defend us from racist violence and police brutality. The responsibility for the increase in racist violence rests on the Democrats and Republicans. It is they who have emboldened the right wing forces."

This rally was duplicated all across the country. Washington, D.C., Portland, Oregon, Las Angeles, California, Seattle, Washington, and Chicago, Illinois are just a few examples. The message is clear: Black people must mobilize and unite themselves even if it means buying guns to protect themsleves. The killings in Atlanta have spurred the militant forces in the Black community. After all without the children Black people will have no future and it is up to all of us to insure their physical, emotional and educational survival.

Miami Blacks Get Maximum Terms

Reprinted from Guardian

Miami Fla. Three black youths convicted of murder in connection with the deaths of three white men during the May 1980 rebellion have been sentenced to maximum prison terms.

Samuel Lightsey, Jr., 17, convicted on three counts of second-degree murder, was given three life-imprisonment terms.

Lawrence Capers, 25, and his brother Leonard, were sentenced to three consecutive 15-year terms for their convictions on three counts of third-degree murder.

In a packed courtroom Lawrence Capers appealed to the judge before the sentencing. "The crime that me and my brother were charged with we are innocent of it," he said.

"I never thought we would fall into such a situation before, and I hope that you, Judge Gaderich, will be reasonable and fair with us."

Capers' attorney, Michael von Zamft. asked the judge "not to make Lawrence and Leonard the victims of the community's feelings. Don't sentence them to satisfy the bloodlust of the county."

But the pleas were to no avail. Judge Mario Gaderich imposed the maximum sentence, calling the killings, "a crime as atrocious and heinous as any can be."

Lightsey and the Capers brothers were convicted of being in a crowd of 40 to 50 people which stopped a car driving through the heart of Liberty City late in the evening of May 17,1980, only hours after a Tampa jury had found four white police officers not guilty of murdering Black insurance executive Arthur McDuffie. The three white males in the car were dragged out and received fatal injuries at the hands of the crowd.

Nathaniel Lane, who the police and state attorney's office have said was the "ringleader" in that attack, will go on trial April 13, facing first-degree murder charges.

The Citizens Coalition for Racial Justice (CCRJ) has called for a picketline at the courthouse on April 13. "The evidence against Lane is so weak that his conviction would be impossible if racism did not exist," says a leaflet distributed by the CCRJ.

There have been no arrests and convictions in the cases of nine Black men murdered during the rebellion.

In related news, three Miami cops and a retired police officer have been charged with criminal mischief in vandalizing cars during last May's rebellion. Eyewitnesses say police went on a rampage, smashed windows, slashed tires and car seats and spraypainted the words "thief," "nigger" on cars in a department store parking lot. A conviction could bring 60 days in jail.

Capitalism Equals Third World Poverty

by Curtis Haynes Nummo Staff

Michael Moffit, an economist associated with the Institute of Policy Studies, spoke on the "Third World Debt Trap" Thursday April 2 at Amherst College.

Michael's involvement with the study f Third World economies is extensive and includes the advising of the Manely Government in Jamaica and currently the advising for the Sandiniste Government in Nicaragua.

"A power struggle between the rich and the poor" is how Moffit describes the current international monetary relationships between capitalist countries of the West and countries of the Third World. Since the early 70's Private Banks have become increasingly involved in lending large sums of money to borrowers in the Third World, particularily Third World Governments. This private lending was the result of "the petro-dollar recycling process" where countries with fantastic oil revenues would dump the bulk of their money in Western banks and these banks would use this monkey to make loans on the international market.

According to Moffit "since the 'petro-dollar' came into being the Third World Debt to Western banks has grown by 30 percent per year." In 1980 Third World countries owed approximently 500 billion dollars to Western banks and financial institution, compared to 100 billion in 1972. "... some of these countries have borrowed so much that a national default is very real, and if the defaults are big enough, and sudden enough, not only can an individual country go down the tube but it can take a bank or two or even the entire international financial system." said Moffit. In his lecture, Moffit compared this to (on a world wide scale) the 'great depression' of the 1930's, followed by World War II.

"... in the quest for profits the West has forced the Third World into a hole in which it cannot get out."said Moffit. With the internationalization of major capitalist economies thus, the internationalization of economic stagnation (since the early 70's) Third World governments are forced into a 'Debt Trap'. Because of economic stagnation in the West, Western countries have had to curtail imports from the Third World and as a result, Third World countries cannot sell their goods at a fair price,(they are forced to sell at the cheapest price)and are also forced are to 'import inflation' as they import goods form the West.

Moffit told his audience that today many banks (most large banks make most of their profit on the international market which consists of approximently 1.3 trillion dollars, one third of this banking activity deals with the Third World) are nervous because of the continuing inability of the U.S. to deal with inflation and high interest rates which poor countries cannot even attempt to pay. They also fear the new round of oil increases, and the politcial instability of many Third World naiions. Lastly, but not least important, they fear the political freezing of assests belonging to certain countries (such as what happened to Iran when they demanded their money). These banks fear that "... they may lose their shirts in Third World countries". Thus, there has been a dramatic cutback in lending to Third World countries.

Still, banks cannot cut aid, because many Third World countries are borrowing simply to pay interest on an already accumulated debt. On the other hand, Third World countries have the precarious problem of either buying food and medicine for their people or paying of their debts to CitiBank, Chase, etc..

In concluding, Michael stated that he could not see any remedy in sight, considering the political policies of Western countries, in particular the U.S.. Because of Reagan's Administrations policies of tight money controls there will continue to be slow economic growth, and probably no progress on inflation. There will be lots of unemployment, and minorities in this country will be facing a disaster. Because of conservative monotatrist economic policies "large amounts of people are simply going to die because countries will simply not have foriegn currency for basics.

Mr. Reagan's Policies in Latin America

by Gertrudis Garcia Nummo Staff

The political and economic policies that the Reagan administration is trying to implement are already affecting many countries in Latin America. The Reagan administration, while at the same time is saying to Latin America that the economic aid it receives will be cut, is trying to export the anti-Soviet propaganda that it is using.

The rupture in the relations between Colombia and Cuba, and the end of economic aid to Nicaragua by the U.S. are proof of the arm twisting policies of Mr. Reagan. In Santo Domingo and Puerto Rico things are happening that are the direct result of the propaganda and policies of Mr. Reagan.

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

The week of March 30th to April 5th, two United States naval vessels made a "good will visit" to the Dominican Republic. When students and workers learnt about the unwanted visit of the two vessels they organized protests which were ended by the police. After the police intervention, four people were dead, dozens injured and several hundred arrested.

The Dominican Republic has had other bad experiences with the U.S. Navy. In 1965, 42,000 U.S. marines landed there, repressing Dominican's rights for self determination and government. That year more than 3,000 were killed by the U.S. marines.

At this moment the Dominican Republic is suffering high inflation and workers strikes. Many people there fear that the Reagan administration could use military muscles or economic warfare to intervene there.

When questioned about the purpose of the visit, a U.S. Navy official in Santo Domingo replied that the visit was of a friendly nature. He also added that the U.S. and the Dominican Republic were faced with a common threat in the Caribbean from the Soviet Union. At the news conference, a Dominican reporter observed that the Soviet Union had never invaded the Dominican Republic but the U.S. had done so twice.

PUERTO RICO

The government of Puerto Rico announced that in order to lessen the effects of the cuts of aid received from the U.S., the extraction of the minerals resources of the island is being considered. It is know that Puerto Rico has huge reserves of copper and other minerals.

Currently, Puerto Rico doesn't have a mining industry because it doesn't have the technology and economic resources that such industry requires.

The government in Puerto Rico consists of the same individuals who in the past protested plans for the establishment of mining projects on the island. Their arguments were that the establishment of a mining industry required extensive negotiations with big conglomerates.

Today, it could be expected that negotiations between the Puerto Rican government and mining companies (which have being trying for more than 20 years to establish mining projects in Puerto Rico) will take on a different light considering Reagan's proposed budget cuts.

Still, the Puerto Rican people are skeptical because they see environmental contamination and only a few jobs created by the oil refineries and pharmaceuticals which had entered the country earlier. They don't want the strip mining, used by the mining companies, which would add more destruction to their land and contamination to their water and air. They don't want their resources to be taken away from them under the fallacies that thousands of jobs would be created.

I dont' know if the Reagan administration is conscious of the effects its policies could have in Puerto Rico. What I know is that American mining companies are planning to take advantage of the economic problems that Mr. Reagan's decisions would cause for the island. I also know that Puerto Ricans will not passively accept those with economic interests and decisional power in the government of the island to loot their natural resoucas. I know that they will not exchange their land, and resources for the crumbs that the American companies inspired by Mr. Reagan's economic policies would offer them.

Racist Violence i.e. Political Terror

by C. Zulu Nummo Staff

In part two of this series, we stated that the reason for the increased arming of the American police and their being turned loosed on the black communities was in large part due to internal and external economic and political problems that are causing the economy and the government to shake.

Generally stated the internal and external economic and political problems of the United States are;

a. Black unemployment and the political and social unrest centered around jobs and economic insecurity.

b. General unemployment.

c. The deterioration of the United States economic position as number one by competition from West Germany and Japan has shaken the the U.S. industry's confidence.

d. Former colonies are defeating their foreing oppressors and winning independance. These newly independant nations show little interest in capitalism. They are only maintaing contacts with their former exploiters out of necessity and turning to socialism at the first opportunity.

e. U.S. industries' increasing resort to advanced technology as a means to increase productivity, coupled with the wholesale transfer of entire factories to foriegn countries where wages are lower and unionization movements as well as democratic and socialist movements are constricted by military means.

Even though the U.S. and other multinational corporations are presenting profit increases, these increases are coming from smaller areas and at price more dear to the people in the corporations home again that whenever the economy starts to get shaky there is corresponding rise in racism, which is especially manifested in racist violence. The problem is that they are correct. The White middle and working class become insecure when credit is beyond their reach and they cannot get houses, cars, send their kids to college and throw unlimited beer bashes. They are very nervous now especially since they have been the section to bear the brunt of the tax burden for every major government social reform since the 1940's.

The more acute problem is that theyt are blaming their deteriorating situation on the wrong groups! They are blaming their worsening situation on Blacks and other minorities and oppressed groups because our struggle forced the system to conceed reform.

With these problems and their growing magnitude and intensity, the question faced by the Bank-Corporate-Government power structure is "how can the most profits be made with the least social and political turmoil or how can the degree of social and political turmoil be controlled to such a degree where the status quo is not threatened and business can continue as normal. To this question the Banking-Corporate-Government power structure has answered in resounding unity, "When something works, use it!"

In the science of physics there was realized a physical law which is now popularly known as "for every action there is a reaction". Taking the general aspects of this law and applying it to the history of people, we can get a better understanding of the right-wing upsurge of the present in contrast to the great progressive struggles of Blacks in the 50's, 60's and 70's for economic and political reforms.

It was inevitable that a reaction would occur. Exactly when, how and under what circumstance was not clear then but it is clear now for all to see because we are living directly in the middle of the reaction!

The media only gives extensive coverage to right-wing views that spreads only their opinion that blames the problems on the victims instead if the real source, i.e. the Bank-Corporate-Government power structure.

The white working and middle classes should not be brutalizing and waging warfare on the minorities. they should be struggling against the real source of their problem, the Bank-Corporate-Government power structure. Neverthless they have begun a war of terrorism on minority people. Why will be examined in the next edition of Nummo.

We are living in reactionary period of American history not too unlike the reconstruction period. A period of right wing upsurge. Indeed a portion of the so-called silent majority that Ex-President Nixon appealed to is speaking very loudly now. They speak not only with votes but also with guns, knives, bullets, bombs, ropes, KKK, Nazi and police uniforms.

Many black and liberal organizations that have studied racism and statistics on racist violence have concluded time and time

Higher Education Conference confronts the future

Compiled from reports by Brian Sullivan, Joseph Barret, Ken Bazinet, Stephanie Klein, and Jim Kane.

Warnings and grim forecasts for the future of pursuing a college education were given yesterday by students, and educators at a day-long conference on the state of higher education in the 1980s.

"Planning for the 1980s" was sponsored by the Academic Affairs Committee of the Undergraduate Student Senate in response to a document issued by Chancellor Henry Koffler detailing his agenda for long-range planning at the University of Massachusetts.

Four panels of students, faculty and administrators discussed maintaining the quality of education, keeping colleges and universities accessible, increasing influence of high technology on curriculum, and the implications of Koffler's long-range plans for UMass.

In the keynote address anthropology Professor Johnetta Cole warned of the dangers to education that will be brought about by current conservative trends.

Cole said that although cutbacks proposed by President Ronald-Reagan will affect many people, it is students who will suffer most in the face of financial aid cutbacks and rising tuitions.

Cole estimated that 20 percent of UMass students will not be able to return to school in the fall as a result of the cutbacks. On the national level, dozens of colleges and universities will be forced to close, she said.

"Higher education is on the brink of contraction," she said.

Board if Regents to decide on tuition increase

The Board of Regents are scheduled to vote today on a $200 tuition increase for the state's 28 public colleges and universities at their meeting in Boston. The hike is expected to raise $14.5 million to help offset the budget-cutting effects of Proposition 2½, a Regent's memorandum states. Two busloads of UMass students will stage a demonstration outside the meeting. The Board of Regents proposed tuition increases for the University of Massachusetts for the 1981-82 year as follows:

Undergraduate	Current semester	Fall 1981	Spring 1982
Resident	$375	$439	$513
Non-resident	$1375	$1675	$1675

Faculty to discuss language requirement

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

Faculty members of the College of Arts and Sciences (CAS) tomorrow plan to discuss, and possibly vote on, proporsals to either eliminate or reduce the college's four-semester foreign language requirement.

George Wardlaw, chairman of the Fine Arts Department who initiated the proposal eliminating the requirement altogether, admitted that such a solution to the requirement controversy would be "unrealistic" and not likely to pass if faculty members vote tomorrow.

He said he is hoping for a comprimise and that he favors "modification that would put less drain on the diminishing resources of the University."

Harlan Sturm, chairman of the Spanish and Portugese Department, signed a proposal that would allow the language requirement to be satisfied in high school. He said that under this paln students who enter the University with either four years of a foreign language or three of one and two of another would not be required to take more.

Sturm said that about four or five other department heads signed this proposal, whose author was not disclosed.

William Gugli, a language professor, said he would leave the requirement as it is. Gugli said he would like to see the language requirement along with a series of other requirements, compose a strong academic program for freshman here comparable to programs at other state universities.

James Cathey, head of the Germanic Languages and Literatures Department, said the dropping of a language requirement would jeopardize two bases of education at the university: the concept of core requirements, and the need to remedy the "deplorable" inability of Americans to communicate.

Emmon Bach, head of the Linguistics department, said he was torn between whether or not to allow financial difficulties to interfere with a proper education. He said he would enter tomorrow's meeting with an "open mind."

Higher education is often "forced into a decision on a budgetary issue, that should be made on academic grounds," Bach said.

Medical technology not ready for nuclear attack

By STEPHEN M. PORTER
Collegian Correspondent

By describing what would happen if a 20 megaton nuclear bomb exploded on the University of Massachusetts campus, Dr. Katherine Kahn last night emphasized that the world simply does not possess the medical resources needed to combat the suffering caused by a nuclear war.

"Any nuclear war would cause death, injury and disease of epidemic proportions, the likes of which we have never seen," Dr. Kahn told a group of 120 at Mahar Auditorium. "Physicians must expel the myth of a possibility of an effective medical response."

Dr. Kahn is a Senior Clinical Fellow in Internal Medicine at the UMass Medical Center in Worcester. She is also on the executive committee of the board of Physicians for Social Responsibility, a national organization committeed to public and professional education of the medical hazards of nuclear technology.

"No vaccine, no antibiotic, no chemotherapy" exists which would treat those suffering most severly from the effects of a nuclear war, said Kahn.

Dr. Kahn first became interested in the consequences of nuclear war four years ago through her work with cancer patients and their families. After learning what it means to live with a disease with no effective cure, she said she became interested in doing what she could to prevent events such as nuclear war which cause cancers and leukemias.

Due to the size of its population, said Dr. Kahn, Springfield would be considered a targeted area during a nuclear attack. And it would not be inconceivable if a nuclear bomb destined for Springfield were to strike the UMass campus, she said.

If this were to happen, Dr. Kahn said, the fatality rate in a four-mile radius would be 100 percent. In a 10-mile radius all unreenforced concrete structures would be completely destroyed and fallout shelters would be completely useless. In a 20-mile radius glass and masonry would be sent flying and a 160 lb. person would be displaced by shock waves.

Because most hospitals are located near the centers of cities, Dr. Kahn said, the hospitals' destruction rate would be very high. The death rate of physicians and nurses would also be high, she said.

Columbia prepares for re-entry

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — After two flawless days in orbit, the shuttle Columbia and her crew prepared yesterday for the searing, dangerous test of a spaceship's ability to survive a winged re-entry and land like an airliner.

Questions about the integrity of heat-shielding tiles on Columbia's underbelly added extra tension to the mission's end.

The launch and flight have been nothing but smooth sailing.

"The only thing bad is we're going to have to come down," said commander John Young, making a record fifth space flight.

During a space-to-White House conversation, Young told Vice President George Bush that "the spaceship is just performing beautifully."

That was the opinion of everyone connected with the trial flight of a spacecraft that had never been tested before in orbit.

"I think your trip is just going to ignite the excitement and forward thinking for this country," said Bush. "We'll be watching that re-entry and landing with great interest on behalf of the whole country."

British unrest to be investigated

By ED BLANCHE
Associated Press

LONDON — Home Secretary William Whitelaw yesterday announced a major government inquiry into Britain's worst racial violence — weekend riots in south London that left 200 people injured and sparked renewed calls in Parliament for an end to non-white immigration.

Radical community leaders in the racially mixed Brixton district formed a "Brixton Defense Committee" and urged non-whites throughout Britain to rally in the district Sunday to support the 199 people arrested in clashes with police Saturday and Sunday.

Whitelaw, who announced the investigation in a House of Commons speech, vowed to "maintain the law" and said he would not bow to demands by blacks that police reinforcements be pulled out of Brixton.

Whitelaw said the government investigation will be headed by Lord Scarman, a leading judge and human rights reformer who has headed tribunals on

James Kelly extortion trial enters fifth week in court

BOSTON — The politically sensitive extortion trial of ex-Sen. James A. Kelly Jr. — long on promises but so far short on developments — enters its fifth week in U.S. District Court on yesterday.

Kelly is charged with violating the Hobbs Act by improperly taking $34,500 from Masiello & Associates, a Worcester architectural firm, while he was chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee.

The former Oxford Democrat, now of Miami Beach, has denied any impropriety.

There have been hints that evidence would disclose — in matters unrelated to Kelly — that favors of some state bureaucrats were purchased through prostitutes.

Definite sentencing bill will be expensive regardless of cuts

BOSTON — The King administration has made some adjustments to cut the cost of its proposed definite sentencing bill, but still "there is no question the expenditure is going to be substantial," a legal aide to the governor said yesterday.

Describing the measure as "the most sweeping change in the (state) criminal justice system in 100 years," Assistant Legal Counsel Dennis Curran said a final draft is nearly ready for the Legislature.

Curran, in an interview, said modifications have been made since Gov. Edward J. King announced the measure as part of a package of anti-crime bills last winter.

Following the announcement, an internal administration report concluded the bill could triple the prison population and cost more than $1 billion.

"There is no question the expenditure is going to be substantial in terms of prison space," although a new cost analysis based on a new draft is being made, Curran said.

One matter eliminated, he said, is a proviso requiring that separate sentences for "crimes done in tandem" be served one after the other, rather than both at the same time.

Haig presents Awards for Valor to former Iranian hostages

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. on yesterday presented the State Department's Award for Valor to 54 former American hostages in Iran, praising them for perseverance under "exceptionally dangerous circumstances."

L. Bruce Laingen, the ranking U.S. diplomat in Iran at the time of the hostage-taking, accepted the award "with great humility on behalf of all my colleagues, conscious of the fact that acts of heroism and valor on the part of all the services represented here today take place often unrewarded and unnoticed."

Project aims at dorm energy reduction

By KEVIN McGUIRE
Collegian Correspondent

Editor's note: This is part of a continuing series on energy that will appear from time to time in the* Collegian.

Concerned students at the University of Massachusetts are designing a pilot project to save energy and make dormitory living more comfortable through energy conservation.

The fledgling Energy Conservation Project Office, located in John F. Kennedy Tower in the Southwest Residential Area was formed last fall. The group is working with Energy Conservation Coordinator Barry Simon on ways to cut down energy use.

The project received a $2,000 grant from the Housing Office that will be used to experiment with energy-saving devices on four floors in Kennedy.

Project director Ron Arujo, a sophomore majoring in mechanical engineering, said Kennedy was chosen for the project because of the active involvement of its housing staff, as well as because of the dorm's large size.

"If we can make it work here, it will work anywhere," said Arujo, a Kennedy resident. "We've got to make this a success so we can get an eventual campus-wide program off the ground," he said.

The project's plans for the funding have not been completed yet, but one aspect will have students installing automatic timers on light switches that will turn lights off after a specific amount of time.

Kennedy is heated by hot water forced through pipes, which then transfer the water's heat to metal radiator plates in the dormitory rooms and lounges.

Arujo said the 22-story dormitory does not have a full-time maintenance worker, and the temperature control system in the building is poorly maintained resulting in temperature variations.

There are two temperature controllers for the entire campus, and no funding available to educate people thoroughly on the heating systems, Simon said.

Arujo and the conservation office are conducting two colloquia this semester for Kennedy residents on the basics of heat flow, energy auditing and the potential use of weather stripping and other energy-saving devices.

Arujo also said the office will serve as a laison between students and Physical plant and as a research and training center.

Arujo is also forming a task force to act as a problem solving and referral unit for the dormitory. Trained task force members would be able to follow up residents' heating complaints and work to solve them, or pass them on to Physical Plant employees.

Drum and Dance Collective holds masterclass workshops in the SUB

Todd Rossi, an Amherst Public School teacher dances (lower right) as Betsy McGurk keeps the beat moving fast (lower left). Andrew Bloom, Mike Tiberio and Paul Toft (right) play a rhythm for an exotic dance (above). The five performers are members of the University of Massachusetts Drum and Dance Collective which has employed the services of a New York choreographer, Ida "Be Be" Capps, and a music director, Richard "Pablo" Landrum. They are running workshops on Traditional African/Afro-Cuban/Caribbean music and dance. Students and local educators took part in one of the workshops held Monday evening from 5:00 to 8:00 p.m. in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union Building. Each workshop consists of a drum master class and dance master class followed by a combined ensemble class. Bloom said there would be an additional workshop open to anyone on April 20 in the Commonwealth Room before the group gives a public performance.

COMING ATTRACTIONS

Space is not the final frontier: Science fiction sells. The third chapter in the Star Wars saga is in production. It's entitled The Revenge of the Jedi and deals with the final confrontation between Luke Skywalker and his father (gasp!) Darth Vader. And one of them dies! Any guesses? I'm not telling. Chronologically, this is part 6, ending the second of three proposed trilogies. After Revenge is completed, plans call for production to begin on the first trilogy which has to do with the trials and tribulations of a young Obi Wan Kenobi (Alec Guiness' role in Star Wars) and his friend, a young Darth Vader. After this, when I'm 64, the third part of the trilogy will be attempted. Nothing like planning in advance...Isaac Asimov's novel I, Robot is set to go at Warner Brothers, directed by Irvin (The Empire Strikes Back) Kirshner, from a script by science fiction author Harlan Elison...another "classic" SF novel is also going to be put onto film. Frank Herbert's Dune is nearing a long overdue completion at the hands of Dino (King Kong) De Laurentis. Let's hope he doesn't flub this one up...

Frodo Lives! Sort of: Excalibur is only the beginning in a deluge of mythical fantasy-oriented films. This summer will see the premiere of Dragonslayer, an epic tale of magic set in the fourteenth century. The story revolves around some central romance and features some special effects dragons and dragonets which are described as being "adorable." Yoda lives!...This coming Friday will see the release of Caveman, a "prehistoric slapstick comedy" starring comedian Ringo Starr and the beautiful Barbara Bach. Ringo plays a misfit caveman who has aspirations of being in a band someday...From novel to comics and now to film; director John Milius and crew are shooting Conan in Spain with Arnold Schwarzenegger in the title role and co-starring James Earl Jones and Max von Sydow. Staying true to its original form, Conan is being described as "a thief, a slayer of men, and finally a king among kings"...A sequel to Ralph Bakshi's animated version of Tolkien's The Lord of the Rings is planned to begin in summer 1981. But, given the slow animation processes, United Artists doesn't expect to have the sequel in theatres before mid-1983. Frodo sleeps?

Former Iranian political prisoner to speak tonight

A former Iranian political prisoner and anti-Shah activist will speak tonight at 8 in room E27 Machmer Hall on the benefits and problems of the first two years of the Iranian revolution.

Fatima Fallahi, 27, began her political activities while living in exile in the United States and returned to Iran just before the overthrow of the Shah. In June 1979, Fallahi and 13 other socilists were jailed for their political views.

Fallahi was sentenced to life imprisonment, but was freed in April 1980 as a result of an international defense campaign, and has worked since then as a writer for the socialist newspaper Kargar.

Collegian seminars to begin

Mandatory seminars for Collegian staff members will begin this week with a three-hour workshop on racism Thursday at 6:30 p.m. in Campus Center room 168.

A seminar on anti-Semitism will be held on April 22, and a seminar on sexism will be given on April 27. Both will begin at 6:30 p.m. and will be held in Campus Center 168.

Editor-in-chief Rob Stein said all staff members must attend one seminar and should sign up with him.

In other business, the Collegian elections will be held all day tomorrow in the office. All staff members are eligible to vote. Stein asked staffers to remember to vote!

chauvinism also pose a threat to society, Cole said. The conservative trend in America will show reversals in the gains recently won by women and minorities.

"As resources dwindle, there is a kind of knee jerk reaction to cut out those who have only recently arrived," Cole said.

Cutbacks jeopardize non-traditional students

"Higher education has always been geared to what we call the 'traditional' student," said Dale Melcher, of the Women's Studies program. "This traditional student has always been seen as white, middle-class, with SAT scores in the 500s, and in the top 10 percent of the high school graduating class."

Irma McLaurin-Allen, assistant director of admissions, said that higher education must commit itself towards non-white and other non-traditional students in the future, such as older, part-time and handicapped students.

"It is this constituency that holds the key to the continuation and future of public higher education," she said.

Melcher said there was much concern over special programs and their continued existence, adding that their futures depended on the University's committment to them.

"We must wait to see if these support systems and alternative forms of education will be forgotten, or integrated into the system," she said.

Liberal arts or Vocational Training?

A four-member panel that included two students questioned the future of liberal arts programs in Massachusetts in light of Gov. Edward J. King's emphasis on high technology.

Because the University and public education has turned from public interest to private interest, the concept of liberal arts could disappear, said Edward Considine, representative of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy.

Considine, graduate student Greg Tarpinian, and Dr. Robert Costrell of the Economics Department, said the state's colleges and universities are dominated by people from the business community.

"Universities are the only (academic) institution devoted to knowledge for its own sake," said Costrell, adding the

The double edge of spring

Spring is here! No doubt this will be a time of celebration for UMass—frisbees, Florida tans and spring concerts. But there is so much more to think about: papers are due, finals are coming up and incompletes lurk in the distance. With joy there is sorrow. We can enjoy the beauty of spring but we must also face the struggles.

This double edge of spring moves through other parts of the world too—Somalia, Zambia, Nicaragua and many other impoverished regions. There is joy and there is sorrow. Many face the misery of a spring famine. The winter food supply is depleated and the next harvest is months away. Each day many of these people wonder where their next meal will come from. It is only in the planting of the crops and a hope for the harvest that these people find joy. Their struggle is great and the stakes are high. There is so much to do and so few resources to which they have access.

As students we have an abundance of resources and strengths to complete our own "educational planting" and we have hope in looking towards the harvest of graduation. We also have resources to help many hunger stricken nations and people find their own strength. On Thursday, April 16th the UMass Hunger Task Force in conjunction with Oxfam America is sponsoring a campus fast.

In participating in the fast we can share our own resources with others in a significant and worthwile way. By signing up for the fast with the cashier in your dining commons and skipping your evening meal on April 16 you will become part of a resource which last year sent over $8000 for hunger relief and food development to Nicaragua and Cambodia. If you are not on the meal plan you can be a part of this resource by fasting on the 16th and donating the money saved to Oxfam or the UMass Hunger Task Force.

Spread the word. People are hungry!

No April Fool's here

It is shocking to consider how close to the truth the Collegian April Fool's satire was concerning the Rhetoric exemption results. Hundreds packed into Mahar Auditorium several weeks ago to attempt, some for the first time, some for the fourth or fifth, to place out of this mandatory requirement. It seems a bit odd that only a handful were granted first semester credit and fewer both semester's credit. Apparently, there seems to be something wrong with the criteria, those evaluating, or possibly the standards of the Rhetoric Department. It takes a big department to admit that they possibly were wrong and would consider changing various aspects to improve the program.

By not exempting all students who honestly qualify for exemption is an insult. Harboring those students in these classes unnecessarily is a waste of their time and other students who truly need help. By keeping so many students in the program, does this supply graduate students, teacher's assistants, and professors employment which would not necessarily be available otherwise? If this is even partially true, is this being fair to UMass students?

Education is too important to spend time locked into a course just to pay someone else's salary. The Five College Area offers many good experiences and courses for students that could prove more rewarding than Rhetoric. I think this is of major concern to many at the University of Massachusetts and feel as though careful consideration for the improvement of the present system for exemption and course expectations should be carefully reviewed.

Clean up your act

As a graduating senior I am still shocked and appalled by the conduct of the so-called students who eat at Berkshire dining commons. I have worked there for six semesters. The childish behavior consists of leaving used trays on the table, or putting them on the floor, also of smearing potatoes on the table and windows. Further examples are rampant also. Many students are rude to the ladies. I even saw one threaten the cashier. She had simply done her job by taking a mealbook from someone who didn't own it.

My question is, Why? What is the reason for this absurd behavior? The "student" must have threatened the cashier because he had the "right" to use someone else's book. The students who go out of their way to leave a mess are beyond my comprehension. The ones who can't take the time to bring their trays to the conveyor belt must have bigger worries on their mind.

The idea behind this letter was given to me by this very letter column. People are concerned with El Salvador, Afghanistan, and the Moral Majority. My suggestion is that a little more direct action being taken on the homefront. If everybody brought their tray up to the conveyor and put their paper waste in the barrel, the dining commons would be a lot nicer and cleaner place to be, the workers could go home 20 minutes earlier and you students would all save some money. If you smiled and said hello to one of the ladies serving your meal, you'd probably get one back.

Believe me, I know, they are beautiful people doing a dreary job. They could all use a lift just like you and me. Please, before worrying about Poland, worry about your small but significant part of the world.

Lecture was biased

This past Friday night, April 10, I attended a lecture on scientific creationism vs. evolution. I found the lecture very interesting, and at times very frustrating.

I was curious to see how the speaker would deal with the theory of evolution and support his belief of scientific creationism. When speaking about evolution, clear and correct evidence was omitted and, instead, questionable data was presented. Thus, a very biased lecture was presented to the audience.

Concluding the lecture and slideshow presentation, the speaker stated, and pointed out in writing, that evolutionists do not believe in God. To me, that statement was not thought through carefully. I think it not only offended me but others in the audience. This assumption, that evolutionists do not believe in God, should have been researched carefully before it was stated in public. One should support one's views, but to distort the opposing view so obviously doesn't seem to be the most professional way to present material.

Destruction says nothing

I am a student presently enrolled in the Orchard Hill 190R "Race, Class, and Social Change" course here at UMass. One of the requirements of this course is to keep up a bulletin board displaying material concerning racism and social change. My particular bulletin board is located on the fourth floor of Brown in the Sylvan Residential Area. Recently, my bulletin board was vandalized and scrawled with racist graffiti and a large portion of the material was burned. One week later, the new material I had displayed on the bulletin board was torn down.

Destruction to personal property and university property is no way to make a statement. Obviously, the people who are responsible for this vandalism do not know how to vent their aggression and insecurity in a constructive manner. I would like to suggest that they enroll in the above named course so that they too may gain valuable knowledge concerning racism and social change. This course will provide them with a better understanding of a subject which they apparently know nothing about.

influence of the technology firms could eliminate this tradition.

Dr. Loren Baritz, vice chancellor for academic affairs, said there was no guarantee that UMass would not turn out to be a producer of high technology people, but that there were no outside interests that made budgeting decisions within the University.

"The high tech or business roundtable is not in control of budgeting—we are," Baritz said. "It's not important who governs (the University), but how they govern."

Long-range plans uncertain

Candyce Carlon, Academic Affairs Committee member, said Koffler's long-range plans failed to clarify a proposed five college resource program and excluded undergraduate involvement completely.

"My major objection is in the document's passivity in not calling for a collective interest in planning," Carlon said. "Whose interests will be reflected in decisions made by faculty and staff or the Board of Regents?"

"We don't know what's going to happen with long range planning," said Cathleen Linn, chairman of the Academic Affairs committee, "they aren't making any progress reports so we can't keep a check on it."

"In the past we have neither paid attention to planning of what we are, what we were or what we will be," she said. "The reality that frightens us is that the money has dried up and some of us don't believe it is coming back," said Esther Terry, member of the planning group.

violence in Northern Ireland and labor confrontations in Britain.

The weekend street battles in an area populated largely by West Indian immigrants, were the worst racial violence since non-white immigration from Britain's former colonies began in 1948.

A police helicopter hovered over Brixton's debris-strewn streets — quiet early yesterday night apart from the sounds of workmen repairing or boarding up shop fronts of 120 damaged buildings. British newspapers compared the devastation with that done by Nazi bombers during the Blitz of World War II.

Police, accused by community leaders of sparking the violence through "heavy-handed tactics," patroled in pairs, while truck loads of reinforcements kept to side streets of the racially mixed district.

Damage was estimated at about $2.2 million, much of it from fire that spread when firemen were turned away by the rampaging mobs which also attacked ambulances. Scotland Yard said 146 police were injured.

Right-winger Enoch Powell, a member of Parliament who last month predicted racial "civil war" in Britain, declared yesterday: "In view of the prospective future increase in the relevant (non-white) population, you have seen nothing yet." Powell is a member of the Official Unionist Party, one of several Northern Ireland Protestant parties.

Several right-wing legislators in the ruling Conservative Party called for an end to nonwhite immigration and urged the 1.9 million non-whites in Britain be returned to the former colonies and other countries from which they emigrated.

★ Shuttle

runway at Edwards Air Force Base in California will mark the completion of a textbook orbital flight whose problems were minor and triumphs big.

For touchdown day, the forecast at the lakebed landing strip calls for clear skies and little wind. "That's ready made to order," said Shuttle Control. "Sounds good," Young said.

Because two of the shuttle's heat resistant tiles were missing and a dozen damaged on the top of the spacecraft, the Air Force took high resolution photographs of the more sensitive underside of the ship as it passed over Hawaii.

A source said the Air Force pictures showed the underside tiles were apparently all in place. However, NASA officials said clouds obscured the view and the photographic results were inconclusive. They said specialists had studied video and long-lens photography of the shuttle's launch and found no damage to the critical tiles.

"We are very interested in understanding what went on, but there is still no concern," said spokesman Charles Redmond. "If you define a major problem as one where we think there might be danger to the lives of the crew members, no, this doesn't come anywhere near being a major problem."

PC knocks off spikers

RANDI J. MARCUS
Collegian Staff

They were undefeated in the league. They were seeded first. They had great practices all week. They were psyched.

The men's varsity volleyball team had everything going for it but was knocked out of the New England Collegiate Volleyball Tournament in the first round of single elimination to Providence College 18-20 and 16-14 Sunday at Princeton.

The Spikers were down 14-2 in the first game, starter Kevin Russell sprained his ankle, and they obviously weren't playing to their potential.

The Minutemen slowly crawled out from under Providence's sneakers and caught up but just couldn't grasp the win by losing two.

"We didn't take the team seriously," coach Al Morel said. "They used off-beat shots, spiked the ball hard, and we just weren't able to adapt."

Providence, ecstatically proud after its first UMass victory, brought their enthusiasm on the court with them and again spiked their way to a narrow margined win.

Morel said it was unfortunate that it was single elimination. "I think we would have come back," he said.

His team contains Pat Ryan, who was voted best collegiate volleyball player in New England. The spikers finished last season, their third in existence, 12-4.

Two UMass varsity and two JV players were chosen to participate in the All-Star game April26 at B.C. Co-captains Ryan and Mark Farrante will represent the varsity and freshman Peter Berwald and J.V. Captain Barry Malloy will play for the J.V.'s.

The spikers will face Harvard, (2nd in New England) in Cambridge tomorrow at 7 pm.

Rugby has winning weekend

The University of Massachusetts Rugby Club pulled off another weekend of decisive victories over the Worcester Rugby Football Club and Bridgewater State College, at Worcester, Saturday.

The impressive win of the day was the 9-3 victory of the UMass D side over Bridgewater's A side. UMass' D side completely controlled the ball game even though Bridgewater had the better ball players. "Bridgewater never saw the ball," said advisor Doc Laurence. "It was a game of keep away."

The Minutemen's A side pulled off a 21-6 victory against Worcester.

Laurence and his men did not use any new piece of strategy to down Worcester: "We played our usual kind of game, using our speed," said Laurence.

"Our forwards won the game. They dominated the game which was surprising because we were just hoping to run them," said Laurence.

The other big wins of the day were the 27-9 UMass B side victory over Worcester and the Minutemen's C side 26-0 victory over Bridgewater.

Fifth in the country

Gorillas still unbeaten

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Senior tri-captain Chris Corin led the Gorilla attack squad with five goals and two assists and was closely followed by Skip Vosburgh with two goals and three assists as the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, recently ranked fifth in the country, had no trouble downing the Eagles of Boston College yesterday 14-6.

Head coach Dick Garber's Gorillas went into yesterday's contest two notches up from last week's National Coaches' Lacrosse poll into the fifth slot, after wins over Rutgers and Hobart.

"It's very nice—I'm really pleased for the team," Garber said. "But we still have two-thirds of the season ahead with some tough opponents. The ranking that really means anything is the one that comes out on May 15 (final rankings)."

With the win over BC, the Gorillas are still undefeated, and have five wins behind them including an early-season upset over Cornell.

In the first quarter of play yesterday afternoon in front of a Boyden crowd of about 2000, the Gorillas shut down the Eagles' offense allowing them to see action for a grand total of two minutes. BC managed just four shots on net to UMass' 18. Vosburgh started the scoring off on a pass from attackman Jim Weller. Corin put his first in the net at 4:36 with the assist going to tri-captain Peter Schmitz.

Schmitz, a midfielder, had one goal and two assists yesterday, his goal coming early in the second quarter to break the tie and start the Gorillas on a streak of seven unanswered goals that lasted for two full periods.

UMass' faceoff master Tom Walters won control of the ball, and flipped a pass to Vosburgh. Vosburgh fed Schmitz who was running at a full clip towards the net and who took the ball and slammed it past BC goalie Pete Colombo who saw 51 Mass shots on net through the course of the game.

Junior attackman Morgan Mohrman contributed two goals to the streak, combining with both Vosburgh and Schmitz. Vosburgh, a senior attacker, outhustled all BC defenders yesterday scooping a total of 13 ground balls.

"From an execution point of view, it was one of our poorest games," Garber said. "We didn't throw, catch or scoop well at all. But the effort was super good-nobody quit."

"It was pretty much a sloppy game," Schmitz said, "we expected to play alot better.

"We haven't really peaked yet," he continued. "As long as we can play a little better every game, by Syracuse we'll be all set."

Tomorrow, the Gorillas travel to Brown University looking for their sixth straight win. "It will be a very tough game," Garber said. "For the past three out of six years it's been Brown vs. UMass for the New England championship. It's always been a big rivalry."

It will be the first road trip for the Minutemen who will be home again on April 25 to host the University of New Hampshire.

Mittwomen sweep Chiefs

By SHARON PANNOZZO
Collegian Staff

On the combined pitching efforts of Kathy O'Connell, Karen Poirier, and Allyson Rioux, the women's softball team swept a doubleheader from the Springfield College Chiefs, 2-1 and 7-3.

The victory raised the Mittwomen's record from 5-3 on the season, while Springfield College dropped to 7-3.

UMass coach Elaine Marasco described her team's performance as "terrific." "They all played extremely well today," she said.

In the first game, the Chiefs out hit the mittwomen six hits to UMass' five, but three costly errors by Springfield nullified their chance for a win.

In the second inning, thirdbaseman Chris Coughlin made it to base on Chief thirdbaseman Linda Freeman's fielding error. Freeman committed another error allowing Maddie Mangini to get on base. Brenda Simmons replaced Coughlin on the base path and came home for UMass' first score of the afternoon.

Leading off in the third inning, O'Connell slammed a double to centerfield, Coughlin hit a single, and first baseman Fran Troy belted a double scoring Coughlin. UMass was leading 2-1 at the end of three innings.

Kathy O'Connell was the winning pitcher, while Karen Avery took the loss.

In the second game of the doubleheader, the mittwomen's offense exploded, scoring seven runs on nine hits. Allyson Rioux singled to start the first inning for UMass. Catcher Jacqueline Gaw's sacrifice bunt moved Roiux to second putting her in scoring position. With one out, centerfielder Brenda Simmons doubled down the third baseline scoring Rioux.

After a "pep" talk by Coach Marasco, the mittwomen came to life, scoring three runs in the fifth inning. With the aid of three Springfield errors, UMass took the lead 4-3.

UMass added three more runs in the sixth inning, with Denise Flemming, Michelle Eovine, and Mary Ann Lombardi all scoring.

Karen Poirier, who was the starting and winning pitcher for the mittwomen, was replaced by relief ace Rioux in the sixth inning. Rioux finished off the Chiefs, allowing only two baserunners in the remaining two innings.

The squad will face Westfield State this afternoon in a double header at NOPE fields. The game is slated to begin at 2:30.

The laxmen and their fans: A UMass phenomenon

Ken Lasker

Karl Hatton simply called it "unbelievable." Ray Cozzi said it got everyone "psyched" and played a "major role in our winning."

What these UMass lacrosse players were expressing and talking about was the growing phenomenon of UMass sports, and that is the tremendous support given to them by the student body. It seems, quite simply, to have grown into a happening to go out to lacrosse games and have a really good time of it.

It is evident while attending these contests that the fact that the Gorillas are ranked fifth nationally does not necessarily constitute the main reason for the large turnouts. The four thousand or so fans who attend home games regularly are drawn not only by the team's success but by the atmosphere that prevails on the hill.

A parade of coolers pour through the open gates and the sun, pouring directly onto the sloped grandstand, blends with and soothes the many light-headed spectators. It surely must be spring, and the sun-drenched viewing of UMass lacrosse has become a large part of that season for many in recent years.

UMass fans in all sports on this campus are enthusiastic no matter what the total number of spectators, and in lacrosse this is no different. What has really blossomed here, though, is the growing comraderie between player and fan. As someone yells, "Hey Wellah! This Bud's for you!", and lifts a "pounder" toward him, Jimmy Weller acknowledges the greeting with a wave of his stick. And who can forget the Cornell game, where the fans were going so crazy with their cheering and where the responding players were so dominating on the field that the entire team rushed towards the crowd in a cheering, roaring salute for the support.

And none of the laxmen diminish the role of the crowd in their success. Tri-Captain Paul Kinnane said, "The fans will not let us get down no matter what the score. Even in Connecticut we had fans helping us out." And Jimmy Weller, whose scoring and passing has ignited the crowd on numerous occasions agreed. "Even in the Hobart game when we were down five goals they never let up, they got us back. We love the support and wouldn't do as well without it. It seems that the bigger the crowd the more we get psyched."

Richard Garber in his twenty-seventh year as Head Coach of lacrosse here at UMass also acknowledges the boom in attendence. "Attendence has been good in recent years but," he points out, "this year is better." Coach Garber also appreciates the character of the crowd. "They are very positive to our team, even while we're behind, but what's important is that they aren't negative to other teams, like I hear (at) other places. There are no real obscenities heard at our home games."

And with each home game this tremendous character displayed by lacrosse fans on this campus becomes that much more of a force in the game itself. As Jimmy Weller mentions, half seemingly in reference to the state of mind of the crowd and half kiddingly, "We all get a nice high from the crowd. They really get us going."

It is questionable, with the growing popularity of the games, where there will be space (!) to seat an influx of new fans. The prevailing "high" that exists between the players and the spectators really makes one think of that. It seems "unbelievable" for a non-scholarship sport, (or any sport,) to have such a problem. But with the superior and exciting play of the Gorillas, mixing with the feeling of having a good time continuing, who knows where this phenomenon will lead?

In this atmosphere, the fan is a large part of the game. And whether becoming transfixed on the action itself or by providing its own halftime show just fooling around on the field, the blending of characters between the laxmen and their fans is really something else.

Roll on.

Regents postpone tuition hikes

By SAMUEL CHALFEN
Collegian Staff

BOSTON—The University of Massachusetts Board of Regents, amid a jeering, shouting crowd of over 250 students at the State House yesterday, postponed their proposed tuition hikes for the Commonwealth's public higher education system.

The Regents, holding their second meeting since they assumed control of the system March 1, took three votes on amendments to the tuition increases.

After the first voice vote, students and community members outshouted the twelve voting regents.

Six Capital building police officers were called in after the Regents, operating under parliamentary procedure, refused to hear the students.

Three speakers, including two from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst who had submitted requests to speak 48 hours beforehand, told Regents their calculations were distorted and tuition increases would force students out of school.

When Regents chairman James Martin announced no further speakers would be heard before the vote, hisses and boos grew to shouts.

UMass/Boston Chancellor Robert Corrigan warned the Regents of the "gentrification of public education," the increases would cause. Corrigan, representing the Council of Presidents of Public Colleges and Universities, said the council urged the Regents to consider the tuition hikes.

"We're not worried about losing the student body, we're worried about the composition of it," Corrigan said.

Corrigan also told the regents, "If tuition rises, state financial aid should also rise."

Larry Kocot, UMass/Amherst Student Government Association Co-president, told the regents their calculations were distorted.

"UMass is the ninth most expensive in the nation and also ranks 48th in terms of state spending," Kocot said.

A Regents memorandum issued this month, and cited by the Regents when proposing the tuition hikes, said that the cost of attending Massachusetts institutions is low compared to other public institutions nationwide.

Regents member Ray Strata said the figures were based on averages, but when looking a particular institution, discrepancies arose.

Ron Keefe, student advisor to the regents from UMass/Amherst, told regents, "The expected tuition revenues before you are neither accurate nor comprehensive...The only to guarantee access to low and middle income groups is to keep tuition low."

After students, enraged that they would not be heard, stood and faced the regents shouting, Chairman Martin called for order.

"These people are the reason you are here," one unidentifed woman said, adding, "You should allow them to speak."

Regents conceded and asked for a representative of the state colleges and community colleges.

RAINY DAY DEMONSTRATION — Massachusetts' State colleges put aside any rivalries between them, as students joined together yesterday protesting the common problem of tuition increases. Tuition in Massachusetts has been raised six times since 1972.

Students confront Regents on mergers and tuition hikes

By DEBBIE SPARKS
Collegian Staff

BOSTON—About 300 student representatives from state colleges and universities gathered in front of the state house yesterday to protest proposed tuition increases under consideration by the University of Massachusetts Board of Regents.

"The weather is against us. The politicians are against us. But we have to stand up for what we believe in," were the opening remarks shouted by Palmer Paige a UMass-Boston student.

Admist the gusty wind and scattered rain showers, students from UMass-Boston, UMass-Amherst, Boston State and Roxbury Community College gathered to confront the issues of college mergers and tuition hikes.

UMass Student Senator Mike Ferrigno, one of the two students who spoke from the State House steps as the protesters marched around in a circle on the sidewalk of Beacon Street, said, "This attitude is prevalent when it comes to Government decisions, making students not important."

"When it comes to students they say the hell with them, they're not important," he said.

Ferrigno compared the day's rally with the Vietnam movement.

"That movement brought together millions of Americans and succeded in toppling Nixon and Johnson. If people can change direction of foreign policies, I'll be damned if we can't change state policies."

After about 25 minutes of rallying, the students then walked to the John W. McCormick Building behind the State House where the Board of Regents meeting was scheduled to be held.

The students were met by a policeman who stopped the crowd and refused to let them in the building.

Meanwhile, inside, the Board of Regents were in a private session on the sixth floor. The hallways were crowded with Roxbury Community College students waiting to enter the meeting to protest the proposed merger with Bunker Hill Community College.

Students were refused entry into the room because it was too small to hold the swelling numbers both inside and outside the building.

CARP rally meets counter protest

A demonstration yesterday at the University of Massachusetts in favor of continued American aid to El Salvador was met with strong opposition from about 30 people who charged the protesters with being members of the controversial Unification Church.

Twelve members of the Collegiate Association for the Research of Principles (CARP) marched in front of the Student Union Building toting signs stating, "Don't believe Marxist disinformation," and "Stop the Castro connection."

CARP member Monte Vianale said the demonstration was held to advocate continued U.S. involvement in El Salvador to counter the "Cubans objective, aided by soviet Russia to overthrow the established government and install a communist regime."

Counter demonstrators carried signs stating, "This demonstration is nothing more than cold war propaganda," and distributed leaflets calling for "Moonies off campus." No spokesperson for the Truth in Leafletting League was available for comment.

Vianale said although several members of CARP are also members of the church, the group is not directly related.

Yesterday's demonstration came nearly two weeks after 120 people rallyed and marched to Amherst Commons to protest U.S. aid to El Salvador.

Columbia lands safely after 2¼ days of flight

By ROBERT LOCKE

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. — America's rocketship Columbia and its two pilots swooped safely back to Earth today, surviving a blazing plunge from orbit and a heart-stopping landing on a hard sand runway in the Mojave Desert.

"You can't believe what a flying machine this is," Commander John Young said after

See related story on page 3

Columbia rolled to a stop. "It's really something special."

Young and Robert Crippen guided the 80-ton spaceship to a wheels-down landing at 1:22 p.m. EST on runway 23 of expansive Rogers Dry Lake, climaxing a brilliant and historic 2¼-day flight that could set this nation's course as a space-faring nation.

When the astronauts—first Americans in space since 1975—emerged from Columbia after long hours of servicing time, Young bounded down the ramp and circled around to inspect the vehicle. Jubilant, he flashed ground crews an excited thumbs up and he jabbed the air in triumph.

Crippen, smiling broadly, vigorously shook hands with ground crew members.

$3.5m of equipment missing at 10 state schools

By STEVEN A. COHEN
Associated Press

BOSTON — Discovering that more than $3.5 million worth of equipment is unaccounted for at 10 public higher education schools, the Legislature's Post Audit and Oversight Committee voted yesterday to investigate theft and equipment losses in agencies throughout state government.

The University of Massachusetts medical school at Worcester had the most missing equipment totaling $1.6 million. UMass at Amherst was not cited yesterday.

The committee announced at a news conference that the expanded investigation will be the staff's top priority for the next six to 10 months, and the attorney general, state auditor and King administration will be asked to contribute personnel to a special task force.

The worst case, according to the report, was the University of Massachusetts Medical School in Worcester, where, "as of this writing, 1,000 items with an estimated value in excess of $1.6 million have not been located."

At the medical school, the report said, "a post audit staff member passed by security personnel with an expensive audio visual item in plain view. At no time was he stopped."

At the UMass Boston campus, the report said:

—Fifty-two IBM electric typewriters with an estimated value of more than $27,000 could not be located.

—An inventory of the Anthropology Department showed nine cameras worth more than $2,500 missing.

The panel had praise only for Framingham State College, where the property control inventory system "was far and away the most effective of any observed."

White issues plan

BOSTON — Mayor Kevin H. White submitted legislation yesterday to bail out Boston's broke school system, proposing a measure that would strip the city's school committee of its fiscal authority while keeping his own budget powers intact.

White's plan eliminated sections of a city council plan that placed limits on White's spending authority. The differences between the mayor and the council could delay attempts to raise between $30 million and $40 million needed to keep Boston schools from closing tomorrow.

City Council President Patrick F. McDonough said the council would review the mayor's plan, but warned any final decision "won't be White's prefabricated package with a rubber stamp on it.

"If White won't except reasonable fiscal controls, the city will soon be bankrupt and in receivership," he said.

Last week the council passed legislation to create a comptroller, elected by the council, whose powers would supercede the city auditor, a position appointed by the mayor.

Quebec votes

MONTREAL—The Parti Quebecois, which advocates independence for the Canadian province of Quebec, held its strongest majority yet in the provincial legislature yesterday as a result of a sweeping re-election victory.

Toxic leak sealed

SEEKONK, Mass.—Workmen dressed in protective suits and helmets climbed into a tractor-trailer yesterday to reseal leaking chemical drums giving off a caustic vapor at a Route 6 truck terminal.

The poisonous mist blowing from the 40-foot trailer prompted officials to close off the heavily traveled highway early yesterday and evacuate up to 100 people from homes within a half-mile radius of the Red Star Express Lines Inc. yard.

Residents were allowed to return to their homes later in the day and the road was reopened.

Harvard alters plans

BOSTON—Harvard University protocol has disrupted a plan by graduate students to invite President Reagan to speak at their commencement.

Because Reagan would not be attending the full university graduation ceremonies—or getting an honorary degree himself—the office of University President Derek Bok discouraged the graduating class at the John F. Kennedy School of government from inviting the president.

The students agreed to change their plans.

Casino bills studied

BOSTON— Bills legalizing casino gambling and offtrack betting in Massachusetts were sent to languish in a study package by a legislative committee yesterday.

Such a fate normally spells the end of the line for bills, although it is short of outright rejection.

US-Iran policy examined by former prisoner

By BRIAN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Fatima Fallahi, a former political prisoner of the present government in Iran, attacked what she called "U.S. imperialism in Iran," charging that the U.S. is building "an army in exile" in Iraq with generals from the former Shah's regime.

Before a group of 30 students at Machmer Hall, Fallahi spoke of U.S. involvement both past and present in Iranian politics, of life during the Iranian revolution and how the people of Iran have joined together to battle all forces opposing them, especially what she called U.S. "imperialist" policies.

Fallahi's speech was followed by a question and answer period where a heated exchange broke out between several members of the audience who disagreed with Fallahi's views on the present situation in Iran.

Fallahi said that the U.S. press had lied about Iran in the past and continues to lie to the American public to justify U.S. intervention around the world.

Calling the siezing of the U.S. embassy "the turning point of the Iranian revolution" Fallahi said that documents found in the embassy showed that the U.S. was actually bringing the Shah to this country to engineer a coup to overthrow the present government.

The U.S. government, by stepping up military presence in the Middle East has been trying to convince the American public of the need of a "Vietnam type" war in the area, Fallahi said.

Fallahi said "the enemy of the Iranian people is the U.S. government and not the American people. We wish to show solidarity with the Indians and Black Americans."

Fallahi said the Iranian people are united in their struggle against the Iraqis. During the question and answer period several members of the audience charged that the present Iranian government wages a war on the Kurds. Both Fallahi and the students disputed other facts of the present situation in the Persian Gulf.

"The hypocritical media of the U.S. has tried to turn the American people against Iran," Fallahi said.

"The people of Iran rose together to overthrow an oppressive government if it can be done in Iran it can be done anywhere," Fallahi said.

Fallahi read a statement by the Iranian government supporting the Solidarity the free union of Poland in its struggle against the Polish government.

Iran has been made freer than it ever was before Fallahi said. The women of Iran in particular have made more progress during the revolution than they ever did under the Shah, she said.

Former Iranian prisoner speaks on women's rights

By MONICA CRONIN
Collegian Correspondent

Participation in the Iranian revolution was a "school" for Iranian women. It changed their consciousness and gave them tremendous self-confidence, said Fatima Fallahi, former political prisoner in Iran.

Speaking to a Women's Studies class on "Women in the Middle East" yesterday Fallahi said "The revolution was the first time that working class women and peasants came out of political and social isolation." There was no women's movement in Iran before the revolution, Fallahi said.

Much of the organization of the Iranian revolution was done by the women, Fallahi said. The men had to be at work. The women who had the time did much of the organizing of the neighborhoods.

The women who have participated in the revolution from the beginning, fighting shoulder to shoulder with the men, are beginning to reap the benefits of their struggle, Fallahi said. Women are now beginning to work in factories and to participate in the economic struggle of their country.

Under the Shah, women were forbidden to work if "their husband felt that it would diminish his stature in the community," Fallahi said.

Fallahi said the American press has misrepresented the changing position of women in Iran. She said the new regime is pictured as being backward and repressive which is not true. The women in Iran are far more free than they were under the Shah, Fallahi said. Much of the gas, oil and food being distributed is being taken care of by women because they knew the area and how much each person needs.

The reason many of the women have gone back to wearing the traditional veil is because of tradition. Also, they want to show women everywhere that it doesn't matter what you are wearing, all women have the same interests, Fallahi said.

The women fighting in the revolution realize that their demands cannot be won separately from the anti-imperialist fight, Fallahi said. There is no force that can give these women their rights; the power lies in the hand of the women themselves, she said. Women have the support of working class men. The women in Iran have won rights that women in the U.S. have been fighting for for 20 years, Fallahi said.

Columbia's success effects military enterprise directly

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Staff

This is the first of a three part series.

When the space shuttle Columbia successfully touched down at Edwards Air Force Base in California's Mojave Desert yesterday, the cheers heard throughout the Pentagon Building in Washington were probably as loud as those heard at Johnson Space Center in Houston.

Unlike previous missions such as skylab or the Apollo series, the success of the Columbia has a direct effect on the military, said Dr. Marvin Kalkstein, a nuclear chemist at the University of Massachusetts.

"I see the space shuttle as another military enterprise, or at least a potential military enterprise" said Kalkstein, who has taken an interest in the arms race for the past 20 years.

"The shuttle will be used initially to launch satellites directly in-space" said Kalkstein. Also the shuttle will be used to maintain and repair satellites.

There is speculation that the Pentagon's interest in the Shuttle came from the Soviets launching their "killer satellites" giving the Soviets a temporary advantage in the space and arms race. The military showed a clear interest when they requested the shuttle cargo hold be enlarged to carry American satellites, said K. Sigfried Yngusson of the UMass Engineering Department.

"Americans are misinformed" said Kalkstein, "our researchers are as hard at work as our Soviet counterparts in developing 'killer' satellites."

... basically cause malfunctions in the workings of other satellites as they get near.

The Associated Press yesterday carried an account from the Soviet news agency Tass which reported the successful landing of the space shuttle and said the flight was "of special significance not so much for research and academic organizations as for the Pentagon."

"A great role is attached to the shuttle program in the testing of various types of the latest weapons, which the United States plans to place in outer space," the Soviet news agency said.

The shuttle's satellites would act as guidance systems for the navy's submarines which deploy much of the nations nuclear force Kalkstein said.

"The navigational assistance the satellites provide would make submarine launched missiles about as accurate as those launched from land bases" said Kalkstein.

Communications satellites will also be launched from the hold of the shuttles, and satellites will not be limited to the U.S. government, but will be available to commercial clients and other nations as well.

To date RCA, A.T.&T., and the governments of Australia and Saudi Arabia have booked cargo space on future shuttle flights.

Kalkstein said that the success of the Columbia will determine whether the Soviets will launch a shuttle to balance the space race as well as the arms race.

"The launching of the space shuttle is one step that doesn't contribute to the deterent of war" said Kalkstein.

Hunger Task Force plans fast to aid hunger problems

By LORI MULVIHILL
Collegian Correspondent

Hunger is the cause of death of 125,000 people per day throughout the world. The Hunger Task Force, a student group at the University of Massachusetts is planning a day of fast on April 16 in order to aid the hungry overseas.

The money collected will go to Oxfam-America, an International Relief and Development Organization. Most of the money will be concentrated on Somalia, Africa; one of the poorest areas in the world, populated with refugees, most of them women and children.

The money will be used to buy low cost windmills, hoes, seeds, storage facilities for co-ops and other lowcost technological equipment. According to Rev. Pete Sabey, Campus Chaplain, "This is done on a grass roots level. We find out what the people need, instead of telling them what they need."

Dan Noyes, a Graduate student from UMass who also teaches a course at UMass entitled "World Food and Hunger Problems/Solutions," explained that the main contrast between U.S. Government and Corporation aid and the aid received from Oxfam is that of cost of the technology.

The Hunger Task Force has held a fast for the past five semesters. Last semester they raised over $7000, with four to six thousand students participating. Students can sign up at Dining Commons Entrances on the 14th and 15th, and by handing in their meal ticket for dinner, will be contributing one dollar to the hungry. Students who live off-campus are asked to donate the money they'll save by skipping a meal. A table will be set up in the Campus Center for donations.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Solo show surveys international women

By KAREN MARIE THOMAS
Black Affairs Staff

The old woman moved slowly up the aisle, clicking her cane on the floor. Gray, fabric dreadlocks hung in front of her face and her beaded cornrow hair dangled freely underneath. Wrapped in green cloth, she moved meticulously towards the platform. Chanting an ancient prayer in soft light, she parts her dreadlocks and looks at the audience. The stage is empty, holding only a chair and a music stand. The old prophetess begins her story, an international story of women of all ages, races, classes and beliefs.

"SISTER, SISTER," a one woman performance by Vinie Burrows, a potpourri of the pain and suffering of women, brought the audience of 200 to its feet Sunday evening. Burrows' mastery of accents and dialects transformed the SUB into "an international study of the dignity of human beings" where the woman's "load was heavy and her pain was great."

The performance, compiled of the poetry and prose of both the established writer and the natural voice of the world's women, spoke out politically against the discrimination of women.

"We must break the chains of oppression ourselves," said Burrows during the performance. "Once the mind is free the body will soon be free."

Burrows recites in a poetry that "we all can say and write when we speak the truth about experience."

From a child playing "patty cakes" to an old, worn out hillbilly, sitting in her rocker who "don't got no television because there's too much foolishness on," Burrows' message rings out clearly.

Quoting Mother Jones she said, "You don't need a vote to raise hell. You just need convictions and a voice. God Almighty made women and Rockerfeller and his thieves made ladies."

Burrows' unique form of delivery and presentation has developed from her own struggle against racism and discrimination.

"The American theatre didn't have a place for me, the theatre could not sustain me economically. I developed the one woman show where I could use my creative energies," she said in a later interview.

Burrows' face is unlined and clear. The only hint at her age is the few gray strands in her braids. Her small size is surprising. On her stage she appears ten feet tall. A native New Yorker, she made her Broadway debut as a child actress in "The Wisteria Trees" with Helen Hayes. She has appeared in several other Broadway shows and has traveled internationally with her solo performances. Her shows have dealt with the black experience "Walk Together Children," African folktales, "Dark Fire" and children "A Child is Born."

"In many standards I'm not successful," she said. "I did the folktales for a kindergarten class. The children were charmed and delighted by the stories. Afterward one little boy said 'You can't be a movie star because you don't have a mink coat.' Now what did he know about mink coats?"

Speaking in an Italian accent with a green cloth wrapped about her head, Burrows tells of one country woman's experience. The woman's husband stands in the room while she is giving birth. If the woman hollers out in pain she is disgraced for life in the eyes of her people and her husband. The audience sighs out in disbelief.

"I am successful in that I have the audience Sunday night and I have other audiences throughout the world. If I was discovered by 'Broadway' or 'Hollywood' I never would have had a political conscience," she said.

According to Burrows, people must be informed and on the basis of that information, they must speak out.

"You have to be involved in the world you live in. You become the sum total of your experience. Everyone needs the same thing," she said. "It's no accident that the Klan is rising. Worldwide repressive forces are struggling against that. Perhaps this is the last dying struggle of a system to be defeated."

As the lights dim down on the stage she leans on the music stand and becomes the old prophetess.

"I am the history of rape and of the rejection of what I am. I have been wrong. I am not wrong," she declares, looking at the audience defiantly.

Young runs for Mayor

Atlanta—Andrew Young, the former UN ambassador announced Monday he will run for mayor of Atlanta.

The 49-year-old ex-congressman, a leading figure in the civil rights movement, resigned his post at the United Nations in 1979 amid a furor over his unauthorized meeting with a representative of the Palestinian Liberation Organization.

In the mayor's race he joins a crowded field seeking to succeed Maynard Jackson, who became the first black mayor of a major southern city when he was elected eight years ago.

"Over the course of the next six months, this will be a campaign that will involve a consensus of issues," Young said.

"We'll be talking to the rich and poor, black and white, young and old, Hispanics, Greeks... The entire spectrum of our city's population. There's no city in today's world that has the potential of Atlanta," he said.

Young is considered a front-funner. Jackson, who is ineligible to succeed himself, rated him the most qualified candidate for the job.

Nonetheless, he faces what most observers see as a tough three-way race against A. Reginald Eaves, a county commissioner and former Atlanta public safety commissioner, and veteran state Rep. Sidney Marcus, a white state legislator.

Young also drew endorsements from Martin Luther King Sr. and Coretta Scott King, the father and widow of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., the assassinated civil rights leader with whom Young worked closely.

Observers believe the Oct. 6 nonpartisan election, in a city with a 66 percent black population, will probably be decided by a runoff with Young and Eaves splitting the black vote and Marcus, who also has picked up black endorsements, winning the white.

Other announced candidates include state Rep. Mildred Glover, who is black, and tire dealer J.K. Ramey and attorney Warren Shullman, both white.

Black Affairs congratulates Mitchell Smith, winner of this year's Shirley Graham DuBois Service Award.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Guest column

The matter of matter, spirit

The appearance of many students at the lecature of Dr. Allen Beeber at the Student Union on April 7 on the contrasting views of Creationism and Evolutionism demonstrates that this theme arouses great interest. One must welcome the initiative of the Creationists, since an orthodoxy which has been able to dominate university level thinking for a number of generations has become a dogma, as both the presentation and the attacks on it afterwards showed.

Jack L. Benson

For their own and the world's good, evolutionists ought to be forced to examine the epistemological premises on which their towering structure is built. The 19th century marriage of positivist materialism and Darwinism having been consummated at first without benefit of clergy, it is not surprising that some of its more perceptive offspring (such as the speaker, a former evolutionist) should awaken to the illegitimacy in which they find themselves—in this case a feeling of living in a wasteland stripped of divine presence.

On this score, it was interesting to hear the protestations of the defenders of the orthodox faith in evolution. They are not without thoughts of the beauty and wonder of the universe; no doubt some of them are members of a religious faith. The irony of this is that the clergy—or at least the tone-setting theologians—of most conventional churches have long since blessed the aforesaid marriage acquiescing in the "God-is-dead and there is no life after death" mentality, by taking the Bible as a collection of myths, and by other similar strategies. Thus, any conflict of the "scientific world view" with religious faith disappears and the two coexist nicely, the one shaping culture in general, the other pursuing social goals.

Of the critics of this illogical situation, only the theologians and scientists of Fundamentalist persuasion have had the "clout" to bring it to the attention of the public—in this country at least—in such a way that it cannot escape notice, that is, in reference to public education.

They are the first to bring to a wide public the knowledge that, while science deals in facts, its interpretations depend on an unproved and unprovable assumption as if it consisted only of matter (or impersonal forces). As there is no appeal from this in orthodox scientific circles, scientists whose conscience forces them to work with broader assumptions have been ostracized and ignored for generations. At this juncture, therefore, everyone ought to look into what the Creationists are asking the teaching profession to do, that is, to offer the Genesis account of creation as an alternative to Darwinism.

They want it said that the Biblical account can plausibly be applied to the great mass of complex data about the history of the earth and the universe in the literal sense that it all happened at once, and recently. This has a simplistic ring to it and it is not difficult to suppose that it could become as prejudicial to freedom of thought as the orthodoxy it has exposed. Nevertheless, the issues the Creationists are raising are not likely to dry up and blow away, and in the last years of the 20th century both the academic establishment and the public may have to make some hard choices.

But certainly an idea as powerful as Darwinian evolution has proved to be in stimulating a search for origins cannot simply be written off as a failed attempt. If it continues to be taken that way, there will be a fruitless and dangerous polar confrontation between a materialistic monism and a spiritualistic monism about which Rudolf Steiner warned already in the first quarter of this century. The call for a new level of thinking to meet the present crisis of civilization has been voiced almost routinely by leaders in both religion and science, but the only comprehensive model of this thinking was given by Steiner himself. His most eloquent exponent in the Anglo-Saxon world, Owen Barfield, has exercised a profoundly steadying influence on many researchers in various fields in this country. He was, incidentally, a member of the same intellectual group at Oxford to which C.S. Lewis, repeatedly recommended by the speaker, belonged.

Judge for yourself

As I walk through the Campus Center, my eyes catch sight of a small sign that reads, "Wrong tree, Fidel." Naturally enough, I begin to indulge upon the fine print. Immediately I am amazed at how the author explains the critically serious situation in El Salvador on a basic children's story level. Being educated on the subject, I am awed by the implications that the U.S. is there to save El Salvador from the exploitation of Fidel's communism, and to keep democracy and freedom alive.

Who's the author? Dr. Zeus maybe? No, CARP. I have often wondered about CARP's legitimacy, but this type of literature clearly excmplifies their lack of understanding of what's actually going on. How they can ignore the U.S. supported military dictatorship presently in power is beyond me, and apparently beyond them.

This type of kindergarten politics is clearly directed towards those unfamiliar with the subject, and I beseech them to ignore it. For those with a little more understanding, I invite you to read these interesting misconceptions and judge for yourselves where CARP is coming from, or going to, for that matter.

The seed is planted

John Steinbeck once said of changing cultural values, that for every step forward there is always a half step backwards. I believe that this is what we are presently going through with the raising of the drinking age, peacetime draft registration, the wave of conservatism, and the growing neglect of the humanities. This is our half step backward from our step forward of the late sixties and early seventies. But we should not give up because of this regression, instead we should concentrate on the next step forward. Our seed has already been planted and now we must water it so that it becomes strong and secure.

It's time to stand up against sexual harassment

Here at UMass, 75 cases have been reported to agencies and groups on campus in the last year concerning sexual harassment. Surveys reveal that 70 to 90 percent of all women workers at UMass have experienced sexual harassment.

So where does a woman go if she's been harassed? She can file a complaint at the Ombudsman's Office, but this usually results in the incident being handled on an informal, individual basis, or not at all. There is no uniform procedure to handle sexual harassment complaints.

The Sexual Harassment Grievance Procedure, now up for approval by the administration, provides a Grievance Board to hear complaints and make recommendations to the Chancellor.

The problem of sexual harassment is one that desperately needs to be dealt with in a standard, cogent way. Last year Students Against Sexual Harassment wrote a Grievance Procedure which was endorsed by the Undergraduate and Graduate Student Senates. After hearing about the student sexual harassment Grievance Procedure, the Committee on the Status of Women of the Faculty Senate began to write a procedure to cover employees. Individuals working on both procedures decided to combine efforts and work to develop an all-inclusive grievance procedure.

We need your support to insure that the procedure will in fact be implemented as soon as possible. The Sexual Harassment Grievance Procedure has been worked on for the last year and a half. We cannot wait any longer!

Please call or write to the Chancellor to voice your support. If you would like to be involved in organizing around the issue of sexual harassment, call 545-0341 or come to our office in room 422 of the Student Union.

Ralph talks back

Count your blessings. Give pause to thank your parents for doing you no harm at your christening, Kevin Cullen. Kevin is such an innocuous humbug of an appelation.

Imagine the tribulations facing a poor child misblessed by well-meaning parents with the name Ralph. Imagine the difficulty of maintaining a positive self-image when your name is used as a noun in the vernacular to mean a noxious vile mess found by your mother in the back of her Camaro which she lent you the night before to go out with your friends. Worse, as a verb, Ralphing is defined as the ejection of stomach contents through the mouth, usually in a series of involuntary spasmic movements.

Friends call me Ralph, you can call me vomit. But please, Kevin, don't you think Ralphs have received enough abuse? Must you persist in persecuting an unfortunate minority just because you find the malignant use of my name at the head of your columns an amusement.

Yes, you and your friends can chuckle at my expense—sure, you Stephens, Josephs and Franks. You don't know what it was like to grow up with a name handicap. Public schools were no picnic for Ralphs, let me tell you. "Ralphy, Ralphy;" "Hey, Ralph Malph;" "Hey Walfie;" "I got a dog that says Ralph." You laugh, but the pain I feel when I remember these crass insults still brings a tear to my eye.

"Talking to Ralph" brings the bile to my throat. I thought when I came to college that I had finally escaped persecution. Then I started seeing "Talking to Ralph" over your rather elementary and insulting columns. Talking to Ralph? More like Ralph-talking. Your writing appears to be a spontaneous regurgitation of partially digested Boston Globe (sic) editorial commentary.

If I ever meet you Kevin, I'll Ralph all over you.

Ralph C. Hybels
Central

Editor's note: So horrified was Kevin to learn of the oppression his column heading partied against Ralphs, he supressed involuntary spasmic movements and searched for new possibilities. So far, he has the alternatives down to "Playing with Peter" and "Richard at Large."

The Hunger Task Force has held a fast for the past five semesters. Last semester they raised over $7000, with four to six thousand students participating. Students can sign up at Dining Commons Entrances on the 14th and 15th, and by handing in their meal ticket for dinner, will be contributing one dollar to the hungry. Students who live off-campus are asked to donate the money they'll save by skipping a meal. A table will be set up in the Campus Center for donations.

Charlie Rios, a student member of the Hunger Task Force says that he is fasting because "the effort and lack of energy makes me aware of the struggle of people who experience that week after week." And in the words of Rev. Sabey, "It's a gut level thing more than a head thing. Fasting clarifies the senses and will put you at spiritual oneness with the earth, and besides there's a selfish gain in that who can't stand to lose a few pounds?"

Random (and off the wall) thoughts on a rainy day

Kevin Cullen

With rainouts galore, there's space to fill and time to kill, so some random notes and observations with absolutely no continuity or thought involved...

That fifth-place national ranking for the UMass men's lacrosse team is the second time UMass has been as high as number five. The Minutemen finished the 1972 season ranked fifth...

Junior attackman Jim Weller continues to lead the team in total points with 31, on 16 goals and 15 assists. That moves Weller into ninth place on the UMass all-time total points list, with still another year to go. Weller's counterpart, senior Lee Vosburgh, who is currently third on the team in scoring with 19 points, is now tied for seventh on the all-time career scoring list with ol' Fred Menna. Both Weller and Vosburgh have 72 career goals, just two behind Norm Smith, who graduated two years ago, eighth on the all-time UMass goal scoring list.

If UMass does anything this year, they'll get manager Bob Levey a goal before he graduates. Despite numerous chances, Levey couldn't score against UConn in that 18-1 debacle, but Levey is due for one at Williams this Saturday...

The May 8th UMass-Syracuse game could be a showdown for Northeast supremacy. It's a Friday afternoon game, and the crowd on The Hill should be incredible. This point is made without overlooking the New Hampshire game, at home, a week from Saturday — or Harvard, or Army, or even today's game with Brown. How do you get nationally ranked? You play that kind of schedule...

As for our very own Gazelles, the women's lacrosse team moved up a notch this week and is now ranked sixth nationally. Their showdown is this Saturday, at NOPE field, 1 p.m., when they take on Harvard. Not only should the game decide the New England title, it could mean a big jump in the national rankings, if the Gazelles upset Harvard, currently ranked third in the nation...

With yesterday's rainout, the UMass baseball team will make up the Boston College game today at Chestnut Hill. The Minutemen, who have doubleheaders with New Hampshire and Rutgers Thursday and Saturday, are now forced to play five games in four days. Great for the pitching staff...New Hampshire has quietly taken over the top ranking in New England with their 14-1 record. Maine is second, with UMass and Yale tied for third...

As for the baseball team, six regulars are batting over .300, with Dean Bennett, Jim Aulenback and Keith Lovellette all tied for the club leadership at .333. At this point of the season, two records that seem to have a chance to be broken are Dick Pepin's doubles for a season, set in 1969, and Bob Hansen's home run mark, which has stood since 1968. Centerfielder Mark Litano already has seven doubles and has a good shot at Pepin's 13, while first baseman Warren McReddie (5HRs) and Aulenback (4) lead the chase after Hansen's surprisingly long 13-year-old record of eight HRs in a season.

When UMass softball coach Elaine Marasco described her team's performance against Springfield Monday as "terrific," it was the first time in quite a while the second-year coach had praise for her team in the Collegian. Word around Boyden is, though, the women's softball team is just beginning to play the way they're capable of playing, and the sweep of Springfield could be the first indication of that...

Both Western Mass. and visiting sportswriters have had nothing but praise all year for the UMass sports information office under SID Howie Davis; it's a well-run ship... former UMass pitcher Collins is now coaching at Amherst Regional High. Collins was the leading pitcher for the Minutemen last year with a 6-1 record. Another former UMass player, outfielder Doug Aylward, just missed making it with a Yankees farm league team recently. Aylward, who played ball in Canada last year, was first-team All-New England for UMass last year...

A problem could arise if new UMass hoop coach Tom McLaughlin follows former boss Digger Phelps's philosophy concerning music boxes on away trips. Digger's law: one box on the bus... if you're still wondering why McLaughlin left Notre Dame for the dirt and grime of the Cage, consider the man is now raising a family, and big time college basketball, with its coast-to-coast flights and high pressure, is not exactly the best environment for a real family man, which McLaughlin is reported to be. Despite what many might think, with it's school system, Amherst is a good place to raise your kids. Just keep them away from here...

As for women's basketball, UMass head coach Mary Ann Ozdarski reports that this year's local recruiting is sparse. Of course, after last year, when Ozie went downtown and grabbed three Amherst Regional High seniors (Cindy Clapp, Jenny Gray and Nadine Jackson) who helped lead UMass to the Eastern regionals, Ms. Ozdarski has to be a tad spoiled... Seriously, with neither the Hartford nor Springfield television stations carrying Red Sox games this season, can you imagine the added business this means to local bars that have cable TV? But now that Fisk, Lynn, Burleson and Hobson gone, who really cares, right?

A tarp is pulled over UMass' Lorden Field during an early season wash-out. Yesterday, all UMass varsity contests were postponed including the baseball team's game at Boston College which will by played today.

On tap today:

The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team ends a five game home stint when it travels to Brown University today, looking for its sixth straight win. The Gorillas get a bit of rest on Saturday when they face Williams College.

With yesterday's on and off rain, all of the scheduled varsity contests were postponed with some scheduled today. In the only home match-up, UMass' softball team hosts the Owls of Westfield State College in a doubleheader at 2 p.m. at NOPE.

The baseball team travels to Boston College today and the Netmen are on the road for the first time at Holy Cross in Worcester.

The women's lacrosse squad expects to find out this morning when they will play yesterday's scheduled contest with Smith College.

UMass pitcher Kathy O'Connell who started in the double header sweep over Springfield College will probably be pitching in one of today's two games against Westfield State College. The game was rescheduled for today due to rain. The Minutewomen are 5-3 this season, and after today's contest at 2 p.m. at NOPE, they host Vermont on Friday.

Stephen Freker

Precipitation in its most common form, rain, is an anathema for most sports and sporting events.

Game-schedulers hate it, as it creates more work for them when they are forced to call off games and postpone them to a later date.

Coaches hate it because rainouts leave their teams idle and the team has the potential to get rusty. Some players despise rain and others exult in it, like the Baltimore Orioles' catcher Rick Dempsey and many players, like Dennis Eckersley and Frank Tanana, could care less.

Rain puts a damper (pun intended) on many activities but it's not fair to assign a blanket condemnation to excessive precipitation. Rain does not stop everyone in their tracks and there are plenty of things to do in duck weather and the following are a few examples.

When you wake up in the morning and look out the window and see the torrential downpour, you can say the hell with it and go back to practicing your sleeping and blowing classes off...you can make believe your're the guy in the umbrella commercial by putting on your best suit and shoes and going out into the deluge sans umbrella...you could stand on curbstones and get splashed by maniacal drivers who get pleasure out of soaking bystanders...drive down to Wonderland dog track in Revere and bring your life savings with you so you can get soaked in more ways than one...play mud football or mud softball, who cares if you get filthy and wet and catch a cold or worse, it's still a lot of fun (especially when you have a few frosty lagers handy to keep your head clear)...

If you're into bestial mimicry, waddle down to the campus pond and quack like a mallard...if you consider yourself a movie buff, you would probably burst into song, a la Gene Kelly...if you are a loyal UMass baseball fan, you could go down to Lorden Farm...ah...Field and sit in the stands by yourself and get drenched. So what if the game was called off and you're the only one there, you know you're a true fan...saloonkeepers love it when it rains because people have no place to drink outside so they fill up the barrooms. This isn't a bad place to ride out the storm even if the draft beer tastes like it's been mixed with water on a one-to-one ratio...anyone who is impressed with the sport(?) of mud wrestling could take it up quite easily in Amherst as the UMass campus and all the land surrounding it takes on the consistency of Quaker instant oatmeal, a foot deep whenever it rains...

If you belonged to a frat, you could act B.A. by sitting out in front of your house on North Pleasant Street on a beat-up old sofa, sucking down Buds in the pouring rain and intermittently waving at passing vehicles and falling off the couch into the slop...if you usually worked outside in any capacity, you could wait out the storm in your favorite tavern doing boilermakers (this remedy was alluded to above but since it is a relatively commonly used cure for rainitis, it's OK to repeat)...if you're a dedicated jogger, who doesn't mind warm, dry, full-clothed people pointing at you and saying, "Look at that joker in the shorts out in this shitty weather. He/she probably would run in a blizzard too." (Yah! huh!?), then you'd probably still get in your daily mileage no matter what it was like outside.

If you don't like your dog or cat very much, you could make it go outside during the storm or even take it for a walk in the downpour (yes, some people do walk cats sometimes. Yes, with leashes)...if you were planning on getting your car washed (yah! who gets their car washed when they're a college student), you would have saved yourself a couple of bucks when the skies started opening up...if you were in a mood to be trite and colloquial, you could walk around campus spouting such profound classics as, "Wow! It's raining cats and dogs!" or "Wow! It's coming down in buckets!" and have people walk away from you as they try to squelch their laughter...

If you were a statistics major looking for a good project to work on, you could walk around campus for a couple of hours asking people what they thought of the rain and eventually come to the conclusion that the number of people who say, "I hate this shit." will be evenly balanced by the number who say, "I love it when it rains. I think it's beautiful." as they're slogging through ankle-deep sludge between Hasbrouck and the Campus Center...if you were stuck on stats you could ride around the Amherst area and take a census-type poll of how many "workin' hard or hardly working" guys were in local bars tippin' a few (see? this point is made again, but, what the hell? it's true)...you could go down to the intramural office and help them answer the phones which always ring off the hooks (exag) even if it rains one drop (another exag) because people want to know #1, if they're still playing that night and #2, when their game is rescheduled to be played. If you wanted, you could stick around to help them reschedule the game too.....as you can see from this incomplete list, no one has to just sit around on a rainy day.

CATS ON CAMPUS

the Pierpont connection

As well as being a reputed center for numerous subversive activities in the late sixties and early seventies, Pierpont Dormitory in Southwest was also a major breeding center for illegal cats, the other voice recently learned. The scandal, dubbed "kitty-gate," has produced cries of outrage in the community. As to the whereabouts of the thousands of cats reputedly born in the now rather conservative dormitory, little is known. It is believed, however, that many of these feline menaces may still be living in the valley.

Fido, pictured above, is still being sought in connection with the alleged "kitty-gate" cat ring that may have supplied cats to the entire east coast.

I found Charlie Reynolds one Sunday at the University Sheep Barn. "I have been happily employed by the university for 29 years," he said. Charlie performs his task of tending sheep twice a day every day of the year.

Film Re-buff

By STEPHEN BEAUPRE

MODERN ROMANCE (COLUMBIA PICTURES)

Albert Brooks is a comedic genius. Unfortunately some humans find it impossible to relate to his unique perception of reality. I refuse to argue.

Brooks first full length film, the wonderful Real Life, was handled poorly by the distributors and never received the attention it deserved.

Hopefully Modern Romance will erase any "Albert who?" situation that might exist. It is an inspired study of personal relationships in an impersonal world. Brooks' eye for detail allows him to present the ambiguities of human emotion with a deftness and cinematic sophistication rarely found in modern comedy.

While being a meditation on love, it manages to avoid the coy screwball banalities of Neil Simon. This is manipulative love, obsessive love. A reaction to, and demonstration of, an idea of happiness that is born out of the "Ozzie and Harriet" mentality of the '50's. In the "ME" decade the pursuit of affection has become an anachronism.

There will be those who argue that any characterization as finely drawn as the obsessive egotist Robert Cole (Albert Brooks) must in some way represent the creator's persona. This is the same type of wrong-headed criticism that was leveled at Woody Allen's Stardust Memories. Obviously the problem is a confusion with regard to the reality/film separation principle. It's time to face the incongruities of the "you and me forever" dream. Goldie Hawn can't live forever. We must be prepared.

HARDLY WORKING (20th CENTURY FOX)

Hardly indeed. Telethon ornament Jerry Lewis is back after years of a valium-induced humanitarian haze. He's still falling down and walking into walls. It just isn't as much fun now that we know why.

THIEF (UNITED ARTISTS)

I'm tired of sensitive studies of the criminal element. The deviant with a heart of gold. James Caan is tough. He steals other people's property and then bores them with tales of a tortured soul. It's hard to tell which is worse. Outlaw angst. I think he should go to night school and take some computer courses.

TESS (COLUMBIA PICTURES)

Handsome, Elegant. Expertly crafted. This would be great if we were discussing a dinette. Unfortunately this is a movie. Beautiful and boring. One final question: Why does Roman Polanski get exiled for his trysts with teenage girls while Prince Charles get his picture on People magazine? Money talks, directors leave the country.

Contemporary prints made from the negatives of photographs taken by the Howes Brothers, who worked in the Pioneer Valley at the turn of the century, are on exhibit at the University Gallery in the Fine Arts Center through June 7. The photos show remarkably vivid scenes of people and places as they once were in this area.

Single-minded

By Philip Kret

Bill Nelson—"Banal" b/w "Mr. Magnetism Himself" (Mercury)

Bill Nelson, former guitarist and frontman for Be-Bop Deluxe, has had a preoccupation with French poet/actor/artist/film-maker Jean Cocteau since time immemorial. It has reached a point where he dots his i's with the famed "Cocteau star," and writes songs called "dada guitare," "Do You Dream In Colour?" "Art/Empire/Industry," and now "Banal." Aside from this supreme admiration for the man (he also named his record label Cocteau Records), Nelson's music reflects fantasticism like no one else's.

"Banal" is superfluous with clever hooks and includes a guitar solo that recalls his Deluxe days. The single is a step back into the land of commerciality for Nelson, who is credited with having played all the instruments except for the sax, played by brother Ian.

All the material here (Note: 12" version contains two extra tracks, "Turn to Fiction," and "Hers Is A Lush Situation") was recorded in 1979, but in various studios, so each are noticeably different and danceable.

Gang Of Four—"What We All Want" b/w "History's Bunk" (EMI)

Although a bit tedious at first listen, "What We All Want" becomes prime funk in repeated turns. Strongly maintaining their neo-socialist political stance, the Gang Of Four return after a considerable wait with a new single and an LP. These days, their concerns are projected with a quite accessible funk background, and their sound is becoming less and less urgent.

Side two of the single, "History's Bunk," is pure drivel. The insistence of early recordings is gone, leaving the band in a state of indirect self-indulgency.

However the album, Solid Gold dwells minimally on this latter style and concentrates heavily on lyrics and stylistical musicianship.

Will the public accept the B-side? The question is raised on the A-side by Gang Of Four lyricist Jon King with the lines, "Could I be happy with something else, I need something to fill my time." Now the question must be asked whether they recorded the song just to fill time?

Nipper Goes Vinyl

Nipper, now well over 50 years old, has never updated his original record player, despite the fact they named the woofer specifically for him. "What the hell," he howled, "the old thing still works great."

The Selecter
Celebrate the Bullet (Chrysalis)

When the ska-revival bit had been popular long enough for a critical backlash to begin, with all the ensuing slagging-off of ska bands by once-friendly critics, the biggest question was: Which will be the first of the major bands to go down under a critical barrage? Madness? The Specials? The Beat? The Selecter? Bodysnatchers?

Well, much as I'd hate to join the ska backlash, The Selecter's new album, Celebrate the Bullet, makes a strong case for The Selecter to win the title, "First major ska band to sink and never be heard from again." This album is pretty dismal. Wasn't the whole point of ska revival to take the energy from punk and the tunefulness of ska and reggae and create an exciting, tuneful sound? And wasn't the major goal all along to have FUN? Celebrate the Bullet is tuneful, all right, but in terms of fun and excitement it's on a par with a trip to the Dining Commons.

Pauline Black, Noel Davies, et. al. skank their way through two half-hearted album sides without ever really catching fire. The tunes are pretty, forgettable little ditties, quite reggae-ish but without any of that genre's feeling of musical urgency. For example, the title song is built on a single, wrenching guitar riff, followed by ascending reggae-like chords which go on and on and ON. WHY? Compare that to a really great ska song, like "Twist and Crawl" by the English Beat. The Selecter doesn't make you want to dance, it makes you want to sit. Sominex is cheaper, and the Dead have been around longer.

Charlie Rich
Once a Drifter (Elektra Records)

There are only two things about Country and Western music that I can find even remotely bearable: the first thing is that it usually stays well below The Mason and Dixon Line, and the second thing is Charlie Rich. Charlie is so good in fact, that I often find myself buying a few of his records, as I did when I stumbled across his latest album Once a Drifter in one of the more obscure downtown Amherst record stores.

I found two things different about this album when I compared it to some of his other releases. The first thing is that the album jacket had all four corners still intact. (It seems that there are a group of imbeciles running around the country chopping off the corners, and otherwise mutilating the jackets of Charlie Rich albums), and secondly, for the first time in years (since his string of mellow jello hits of 1973—"Behind Closed Doors" and "Most Beautiful Girl"), he has strayed from the typical Nashville sound and gone back to the cleaner Memphis Rhythym and Blues style he did so well with back in the early 1960's.

Few people outside of Memphis realize that Charlie was one of the original Rock and Rollers that recorded under the Sun Label along with Elvis, Roy Orbison, and Jerry Lee Lewis, but due to poor management and an inability to find a niche for himself outside of the piano bar-recording studio circuit, he floundered about with many different styles throughout the turbulent 60's until he decided to go completely C&W for the big bucks and thus his enormous success in the early 70's.

Charlie, who is now pushing 50, has drifted away from the twangy guitars, gassy harmonicas, and shrill back-up singers and has gotten back to his roots with a modest back up group and his own unmistakable vocal style. It's a pity that one doesn't hear some of his first rate piano work on this album, but one must pick his rosebuds while he may.

Rich is in full voice throughout the entire album, especially in the title song, where he changes keys as easily as Debbie Harry changes images. In his version of Eric Clapton's "Wonderful Tonight" he gives the phrase "easy listening" a good name, while at the same time remaining loyal to Clapton's original theme.

It's evident Charlie is back in excellent form with his latest album, but it just seems like so much of a pity that a good album like this one fails to get any publicity buildup whatsoever (I must have bought the only copy in the entire Pioneer Valley), while one can hardly walk into a record store without being inundated with 5' square posters of Blondie, Elvis Costello, and The Bee Gees.

But after all, this is the America where McDonalds now employs more people than the steel industry.

Ron Carter
New York Slick (Milestone)

On New York Slick, Ron Carter has combined a vast array of the best jazz musicians (Art Farmer, Hubert Laws, Billy Cobham, etc.), with a good variation of styling in the music. The title cut, "New York Slick," is upbeat be-bop with the musicians exchanging lead breaks. Hubert Law's flute is especially featured.

The next song, "A Slight Smile," is a slow and romantic tune which sounds like background music at a Manhattan cocktail lounge. The rhythms of Kenny Barrow's piano and Ron Carter's bass serve as a fine backbone to the leads of Farmer, Laws, and company. Side one ends with a Latin bosa-nova number, "Tierra Espanola."

Side two has two long selections, "Aromatic," which is highlighted by a playful bass lead by Carter, and "Alternate Routes," which like "A Slight Smile," is a bluesy waltz featuring the ensemble work of the sextet.

I have always acknowledged Mr. Carter's talent as one of the premier jazz bassists of today, but in the past I have felt that his albums were too centered on the bass, which could become somewhat monotonous. With New York Slick, Ron Carter has composed and produced an entertaining album using the eclectic styles of the various musicians. If you are a jazz enthusiast, this one should be in your collection.

Eric Clapton
Another Ticket (RSO)

Eric Clapton is a survivor. He made it through the sixties. He fought off heroin addiction in the early seventies, and he is one of the few members of the "old wave" who successfully rode out the disco and new wave phases of the middle and late seventies without altering his style for the sake of commerciality.

His post-heroin music, however, (from 461 Ocean Boulevard on) was certainly a shift from the more blues-oriented music of Cream and Derek and the Dominoes (to name but a few). Some fans were disappointed with a lot of the music that came from that period.

On his last album, Just One Night, Clapton got rid of the band he used on the majority of his albums in the seventies and surrounded himself with a whole new group. It was just the change he needed. He played like all his long-time fans knew he could.

Clapton has said that he enjoys playing with his new rhythm guitarist, Albert Lee, who is reportedly as adept as Clapton on guitar. On his latest album, Another Ticket, this joy comes glaring through. There hasn't been an album this well done by Eric Clapton since he made Layla back in 1970 with Derek and the Dominoes. Each cut is strong, and Clapton's guitar playing is once again awesome to listen to.

He wrote all but three tracks on this album, and from beginning to end a freshness comes through. Clapton is back (not Backless). This is the first studio album of the eighties for him, and it marks a new beginning (or perhaps just the resurrection of an old one).

From the FM track, "I Can't Stand It," to the old blues number "Floating Bridge," (circa 1940), to Clapton's eighties blues "Rita Mae," he and Lee exchange jams—playing the blues and rock 'n' roll the way they are supposed to be done.

If you're tired of hearing new wave music with synthesizer leads instead of guitars, you're going to love Another Ticket. It's the kind of album music needs. At last, instead of trying to join the new wave like so many sixties musicians, Clapton has come up with an album to show everyone how it's done, and I for one completely enjoy it.

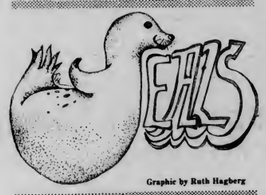
Visions of standing at Race Point--the very plot of wave-washed sand at Race Point, not an approximation—had lured me all day.

Today, I would stand at the very end of Cape Cod, at that precise, northern limit, and feel the whole of the Cape arching behind me.



Graphic by Ruth Hagberg

It was one of those weird longings for being at geographical extremities--those last footsteps of land--that have always possessed me, a feeling akin to a lust for power, I suspect. I know the exact northernmost, southernmost, easternmost, and westernmost locations to which I have been, and I mean exact. The easternmost, for example, is the men's room in a little restaurant called "Abondanze," on the Via de San Callisto in Rome. Someday, I'm going to figure out the exact latitude and longitude of that men's room.

On this February morning, my friend Mike and I had driven down to Provincetown and were walking across the dunes toward Race Point. Up and down the dunes, hardly ever stopping, we walked straight for the Point. Our skin was red from the wind. I was wearing binoculars, for no special reason. Once in a while, I'd look through them out to sea, or down the dunes, or to the Monument in town.

Five hours of laborious walking (walking on sand is hard, as any beachcomber knows) finally brought us to the Point. A lighthouse stood on the Point, and it toned with annoying regularity. The ocean was wild, our fingers were numb, and our eyes were tearing from the wind.

But the beach bent suddenly southward, and we knew this was the Point. Now, where's that last bit of sand? I thought, and looked toward the shore. Mudflats extended a quarter mile or so out. I noticed some black, round things on them, and held the binoculars to my eyes.

"Seals!" I said, and handed him the binoculars.

"Well, so they are," he said. "This, I think, is the southern limit of their, ah, their range," he said. Mike knew about such things.

"Yes," I said, "their southern limit. Just south to Race Point, never further."

They were motionless, 20 or so dark, obese things, not cuddly or lovable at all, sprawled on the mud. They were waiting for spring, waiting here at this Point, this extreme. The seals and I were at our bounds, the end of our ranges; they from the north, me from the south. That was the closest I could ever get to seals, at each of our limits, our maximums. That's what it took--going to our extremes--to meet the seals. And there they were, real seals, with tiny features at either end of their fat bodies, waiting at the Point.

We walked down the dune and warmed our extremities.

Santana cancels

University of Massachusetts Community Day concert headliner Santana has canceled its scheduled date, forcing the Union Program Council to reschedule the concert from May 9 to May 17 or 18 in order to find a replacement for the band.

UPC talent coordinator Frank Gironda said UPC will sue the group for breach of contract.

"We have legal recourse," Gironda said, "but it's not going to appease the 25,000 people who are going to be there."

According to a statement by Santana's agent the group canceled because of "unforeseen circumstances which directly effect the career of Carlos Santana (which have led him) to cancel the last four dates of this leg of the tour. Carlos is willing to reschedule the date until the next leg of the tour which resumes May 27."

"This (date) obviously does us no good," Gironda said.

Santana's agent failed to say what the unforeseen circumstances were.

"We have firm offers in right now for other groups," Gironda said. "This gives us more time and could open new possibilities that weren't available on the May 9 date."

Santana also canceled an appearance in Buffalo, a sold out show in Boston, and a spring concert at Pennsylvania State University.

Gironda said that Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson has agreed to let UPC extend the date to give them more time to find talent.

Students rally in D. C. against budget cuts

By LAURIE CANTALUPO
Collegian Correspondent

Fifty-one UMass students traveled to Washington, D.C. on Tuesday to participate in a nationwide march and rally against the Reagan Administration's budget cut proposals.

"We'll beat these attacks on quality public higher education," said Greg Tarpinian, one of several organizers for the UMass event. Tarpinian is a member of The Coalition, a group representing various RSO groups, which organized UMass participation in the march.

The enthusiasm of the 51 students who traveled eight hours on a bus with only 39 seats indicates growing student willingness to get involved, Tarpinian said.

The students joined over 2,000 others from across the country in a 20-block march organized by Young People's Lobby for Jobs, and then met with an aide of Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Springfield to lobby for increased funding for financial aid programs.

Carl Hoffman, another UMass organizer said the march took place at lunchtime and received a great deal of enthusiasm. "As we went along people joined us and workers cheered us on," he said.

Michael Ferola, a UMass student who participated, said he was impressed by how well blacks and whites worked together for this common cause.

After the march, the UMass students crowded into Conte's office and left 1200 signatures against Reagan's proposals. Ferola said Conte's aide was "really cooperative, although you could detect he was dodging a lot of our questions."

Tarpinian said The Coalition members were pleased with the number of UMass students attending the march and also with the turn-out for a trip to a Board of Regents meeting in Boston the same day. Tarpinian said The Coalition's doubts about being able to fill the Boston and Washington buses were alleviated by the large turn-outs for both events.

He said The Coalition will plan to mobilize the students for the next Board of Regents meeting April 24, when the Regents will try to raise the tuition again.

Trends in contraceptive methods changing with new developments

By MONICA CRONIN
Collegian Correspondent

Editor's Note: This is the first part of a three-part series on recent developments in contraceptive devices.

New information on existing and innovative methods of contraception turn up constantly and it can be difficult to keep abreast of them. Recently two health educators from the University of Massachusetts Health Services talked about current trends in contraception.

There is a general trend away from chemicals, both in the medical profession and by the consumer according to the educators. The "anti-chemical" consumer attitude has contributed to an increased use of the diaphragm, said Diane Wolfe, director of Community Health Education at the Health Services. The diaphragm has a theoretical effectiveness rate of 97 percent but its practical effectiveness rate is only 83 percent. The largest factor contributing to this difference is human error.

People do not appear to be taking their lifestyles realistically into account when choosing a birth control method, said Dianne Taylor, patient education coordinator for Health Services.

"Because of the fear of chemicals and the really strong consumer and cultural trend toward 'naturalness,' and because college is a time of consciousness raising," people base their birth control decision on what they perceive as natural, Wolfe said. This does not always lead to the most effective method, she said.

Both women said that in considering lifestyle when choosing birth control, people should consider how frequently they will be engaging in intercourse. It is also important to consider how comfortable you will be with a specific method, the women said. Diaphragms appear to be more effective in stable relationships and when the consumer has a fairly regular lifestyle, they said.

"I think we could cut down on problem pregnancies if people took their lifestyles into account realistically," Taylor said.

Another birth control method similar to the diaphragm, but unavailable in the U.S., is the cervical cap. The cap is smaller than a diaphragm and fits directly over the cervix. The cap is being tested at this time and may be available within a year. Neither Wolfe nor Taylor thought there were a lot of advantages to the cervical cap, but said it may be an alternative for women who cannot be fitted for a diaphragm.

Another type of diaphragm being tested is the Collatex sponge. It is made of polyurethane bonded to a spermicide and will require no additional spermicidal form and may be worn for several days at a time. The sponge is expected to be released sometime next year, Taylor said.

The consumer swing away from chemicals resulted in a rise of "natural family planning (NFP). This method of birth control is usually associated with the rhythm or calendar method but requires a high degree of motivation and training to recognize bodily changes. NFP is not offered at the University, but the health educators will provide names and referrals upon request. Natural family planning has a theoretical effectiveness rate of 92 percent but an actual rating of 75 percent. Again the difference is largely attributable to human error.

The one "non-chemical" form of birth control that has not gained popularity is the "foam and condom." Some people believe a condom decreases sensation for the man, Taylor said.

President Reagan yesterday pardoned two former FBI agents convicted of unlawful break-ins during the height of the Vietnam War protest movement.

FBI officials' pardon applauded

AMHERST, N.H. — President Reagan's pardon of two former FBI officials convicted of authorizing unlawful break-ins helps correct a miscarriage of justice and issues a warning to terrorists, the head of a retired FBI agents group said yesterday.

"(Mark) Felt and (Edward) Miller are patriots and faithful career public servants who were performing their duty under the most trying circumstances," said Norman Philcox of Amherst, president of the Society of Former Special Agents of the FBI.

"Their conviction was a complete miscarriage of justice. They never should have been indicted, never should have gone to trial and never should have been convicted."

Felt and Miller were convicted of violating civil rights of friends and relatives of members of the radical Weather Underground during the Nixon administration.

Philcox said the Weather Underground "was not merely a group of college students who took the right of protest too far." "It was composed of hard core communist revolutionaries, dedicated to acts of terrorism and operating under the influence of foreign hostile intelligence agencies."

Philcox, who served under Felt and Miller, said the two followed investigative practices "that were known to and approved by presidents since Franklin D. Roosevelt."

Philcox, president of the Society of Former Special Agents of the FBI, said the organization had raised and paid about $1½ million in legal fees and was prepared to support Felt and Miller through their appeal.

He called the prosecution Justice Department harassment of the FBI.

The pardon, he said, is a first step toward setting things right.

Tsongas: Reagan may be more moderate

By FRED BAYLES
Associated Press

BOXBORO — President Reagan may be using Democratic congressman as a foil to help him shed campaign rhetoric in favor of pragmatic policies, notably on economics, Sen. Paul Tsongas told news executives yesterday.

Speaking to the spring meeting of the New England Associated Press News Executives Association, the Massachusetts Democrat said since taking office, Reagan has toned down his stands on issues like the Panama Canal and windfall oil profits tax.

Tsongas said he thinks the Kemp-Roth tax bill, supported by Reagan during the presidential election, would not be approved by Congress. But the senator said he thought the Reagan administration would prefer it that way.

"I happen to think the president does not believe in Kemp Roth and we will serve a purpose for him to send it to the Hill where it will be defeated," Tsongas said.

Instead of Kemp Roth — a 10 per cent tax cut each of the next three years — Congress may approve tax credits to encourage industry to reinvest in new plants and in research and development.

Tsongas said Reagan's tactics give the Democrats a major challenge to come up with their own program. He said the liberal Democratic tradition died with the Republican landslide last November.

"We had control of everything for years but we did not exercise it, and we blew it," the senator said.

Pulitzer winner gives up award

WASHINGTON — Washington Post reporter Janet Cooke relinquished the Pulitzer Prize and resigned from the newspaper yesterday after acknowledging that her story of an 8-year-old heroin addict was not true.

Executive Editor Benjamin Bradlee told the Pulitzer Prize board that Miss Cooke had determined she could not accept the prize, announced Monday, because her story was a composite, "the quotes attributed to the child were in fact fabricated" and events she claimed to have witnessed did not occur.

Miss Cooke, who joined the Post in December 1979 after working for the Toledo (Ohio) Blade, could not be reached for comment.

Within a day after the award was announced, questions were raised about the academic credentials attributed to Miss Cooke in a biographical sketch issued by the Pulitzer board.

She told The Associated Press on Tuesday that the Bradlee also told a meeting of Post editors and reporters what had happened.

"She told Post editors early this morning that her story ... was, in fact, a composite, that the quotes attributed to a child were, in fact, fabricated, and that certain events described as eyewitnessed did not, in fact, happen," Bradlee said in his statement to the Pulitzer board.

He said Miss Cooke, 26, had offered her resignation and that "it has been accepted."

Bradlee said he issued the statement "with great sadness and regret."

"Janet Cooke was a particularly promising and talented young reporter," he said. "She regrets these events as much as The Washington Post regrets them."

sketch was accurate although officials of two colleges disputed it.

District of Columbia Mayor Marion Barry said he talked with Bradlee shortly after noon Wednesday and was told the story "was part reality, part myth and part fabrication."

"I didn't believe it in the first place," Barry said of the story.

Within two weeks after the story was published last September, Barry had said he thought the story was "part myth, part reality." He suggested the story was "part fictionalized for dramatic effect."

In New York, a spokesman for Columbia University, which awards the prizes upon the recommendation of the Pulitzer Prize board, said the board would have no immediate comment on the Star's story.

"It's not right for us to comment at this point," said Fred Knubel, the university spokesman. "We've received no official word on it."

It was believed there was only one previous case in which a prize, once awarded, was changed. That was in 1978 when a picture taken by a free-lance photographer was submitted by United Press International as the work of a staffer through what was called "an honest mistake." When the error was discovered the board took the prize away and gave the $1,000 award to the free lancer.

In the story, Miss Cooke told of watching the lover of the child's mother inject heroin into the boy's arm. The story was published at a time when an influx of high quality but cheap heroin on the streets of Washington had led to a surge in heroin use.

She also described how the child had become addicted to drugs.

The story had created a storm of controversy from the day it was printed with various District of Columbia officials publicly expressing their doubt about its accuracy.

Faculty votes to change present language requirement

By GREG VOLPE
Collegian Staff

Faculty members of the College of Arts and Sciences (CAS) voted overwhelmingly last night to change the present foreign language requirement for currently enrolled and incoming University of Massachusetts CAS students.

The faculty, at their annual meeting, voted to exempt students from the University's four-semester language requirement if students have done one of three things:

Students would be exempted from this requirement if they have successfully completed "four years of a single language in high school or three years of one foreign language and two years of another in high school."

In addition, the faculty voted that students may also be exempted from the requirement if they successfully complete "one year of high school instruction, in which English is not the language of instruction."

Some faculty members explained that this latter exemption would be satisfied by instruction in a foreign country or a foreign high school within this country.

Passage of the exemptions invalidates the present language requirement, which requires all CAS students, enrolled after the Fall of 1978, to complete four levels of a foreign language with no exemptions.

The exemptions, which are retroactive for all students affected by the present requirement, will come into effect in 10 working days from today, unless, according to CAS by-laws, 50 faculty members appeal the motion by petition.

Dennis Porter, a UMass French and Italian professor and chief proponent of the motion, said the new requirement will have many advantages to those directly affected by it.

In addition to validating high school foreign language work, Porter said, the exemptions will allow students to benefit "because they will not have to repeat high school work, and the enrollment in some entry level classes will decline by 20 percent.

Porter did, however, acknowledge the exemptions could have negative effect on some foreign language teaching assistants, who could be cut back because of the measure.

In other action, the faculty voted to refer a second motion, which would completely "abolish" the CAS foreign language requriement, to the Arts and Sciences Curriculum Committee for further consideration.

Student Senate defeats motion to recall judge

By KATHLEEN HOWLEY
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night defeated a motion, 28-37, to recall Michael Cohen, Clerk of Courts for "abuse of power." A two-thirds vote is required to recall a judge, according to the senate constitution.

"I'm confident that personalities have been shown to be secondary in the pursuit of community problem-solving," Cohen said. "I'd like to thank all the judges and the student senators for their best efforts in dealing with this difficult problem," he said.

Cohen was charged with, among other things, becoming personally involved with the commuter election hearings, with withholding information from the acting student attorney general, and with purposefully misrepresenting himself as co-chair of the senate budgets committee.

Jim Murphy, chair of the Governmental Affairs Committee, said Cohen "has constantly breached and overstepped his authority without thinking twice about it." Murphy disagreed with statements made by other senators during the occasionally-stormy debate that the situation arose because of personality conflicts.

"He will not get away with abuse of power again," Murphy said after the vote.

In other business, the senate passed by acclamation a motion to support the proposed retirement of the number of former UMass basketball star Alex Eldridge.

Eldridge died June 27 at the age of 24.

"He brought beauty to the art of basketball," the motion read, "and his personality was something of pleasure."

The senate also passed by acclamation a motion to approve a letter asking the faculty to cancel classes April 24 to allow students to attend the next Board of Regents meeting to protest a proposed $202 tuition hike.

According to the letter, 1,000 students will be forced to drop out of UMass if the tuition increases are approved.

"We're fighting tooth and nail to keep students in school," the letter reads, "...to send students we need your support desperately."

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

Jeffrey P. Bianchi, 22, of Weston, was yesterday elected editor-in-chief of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

"I am excited to have been given the chance to represent what I consider to be a very hard-working, committed group of people," Bianchi said. "The paper has improved in the three years that I have worked here, and I expect continued improvement during the next year."

Bianchi, a junior economics major, has served three semesters as a graphics technician, and the last two semesters as graphics manager.

Jim Kane, 19, of Auburn, was elected managing editor.

Kane, a sophomore communications studies major, has been with the Collegian three semesters, one as copy editor, and two as assistant managing editor.

Kane has also been employed this past year by WTAG radio in Worcester.

Ed Levine, 22, of Sharon, was elected news editor. Levine, a junior journalism/political science major, has been with the Collegian four semesters.

He has covered the Student Government Association two semesters, served as copy editor one semester, and as associate news editor and associate managing editor for two semesters.

Levine has also interned this year with the Quincy Patriot-Ledger.

Kathleen Howley, 22, of Cohasset, was elected executive editor. Howley is a junior journalism/english major, and has served two semesters as the Collegian SGA reporter.

UMass professor discusses experiments in space science

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: This is the second of a three-part series on the military, scientific and peaceful uses of the space shuttle.

After the successful landing of the space shuttle Columbia on Tuesday, it was the science world that took the most notice — and some scientists and engineers at the University of Massachusetts had to be included in that broad group.

It was in 1978 when the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) released its first newsletter telling of the opportunity to design projects for a spacelab that would be put in the bay of future shuttles which would conduct different experiments in the interest of space science.

It was at that time that an experiment titled Spacelab Interstellar Oxygen Project (SINTOX) was first introduced to NASA by a small group of UMass scientists and engineers.

Professor K. Sigfrid Yngvesson of the UMass Electrical Engineering Department, and primary researcher for SINTOX said that the project received its approval along with 39 others on September 1, 1979.

"Some of the (40) projects were only approved in definition (by their design descriptions), but SINTOX was approved in principal, and in its preliminary model design, said Yngvesson.

Yngvesson said that SINTOX is an experiment which would detect oxygen molecules in gaseous clouds between stars.

"Observing the oxygen molecules would tell us the conditions of the clouds" said Professor Paul Goldsmith of the Physics and Astronomy Department at UMass, another SINTOX researcher. "This will tell us a great deal about how stars are born and how they die."

A millimeter-wave telescope system which includes a receiver and small guidance computer will perform the experiment that will be among a spacelab cluster aboard the shuttle, said Yngvesson.

Yngvesson said that the spacelab is designed to mix several experiments into clusters that can be arranged differently upon NASA's orders.

He said that the SINTOX telescope will take up about 15 feet of one of the spacelab clusters.

Another experiment that the telescope could perform would be to verify the existance of water vapors surrounding comets. He said this has never been done because of atmospheric interference which block radio signals from deep space.

"A once in-a-lifetime opportunity to make these observations will be in 1985 or so when Halley's comet makes its regular sweep close to the sun," said Yngvesson.

Yngvesson said some of the other experiments which NASA will include in space lab clusters range from life sciences involving the role gravity plays on plant growth, to atmospheric technology involving optical instruments examining cosmic, gamma, and x-rays.

He said projects are not only coming from organizations within the United States, but from Belgium, France and Japan as well.

Ultraviolet Images Telescope for Astronomical Observation is the name of one project that will be included on spacelabs first cluster which Yngvesson expects to be launched in 1985.

He said that SINTOX is ready to go as soon as NASA provides the funds for its building.

"We don't know when to expect money to start the development stage" said Yngvesson, but he said because of the shuttle's perfect flight from launch to landing he sees a rekindling of the space program.

"Now," said Yngvesson, "I can think it (SYNTOX funding) is coming."

Sensitive film examines a woman's inner struggles

By DEBORAH SANDOCK
Collegian Correspondent

A Woman's Decision, a film by Krzysztoz Zanussi starring Maja Komorowska, is a sensitive and emotionally-rich examination of a woman caught up in a mid-life crisis.

Sponsored by the UMass Arts Council, Governor's Program Council, and Slavic Language Program, the film was shown last night at the University of Massachusetts.

Komorowski plays the role of Marta, an accountant living with her husband and young son in Poland. She is depicted as a noble and big-hearted do-gooder. Marta is a woman who has everything, but reaches a mid-life crisis and finds herself unfulfilled. Her husband tries to reach out to her, but to no avail.

Becoming almost desperate, Marta becomes involved with another man, one who offers her an opportunity to experience a more carefree and exciting lifestyle.

Through strong acting and Zanussi's brilliant direction, the audience experiences the inner struggle that torments Marta. Torn between her responsibility to her family, and the wish to have more freedom and independence, Marta becomes even more distraught continuously depicted in the film as caring and giving, and the viewer cannot deny her need to do something for herself.

She decides to leave her husband, only to ultimately return. The climax is triumphant, for her indecision is finally resolved, and she is satisfied with her choice.

Zanussi handles the subject of marital triangles in an artistically sensitive manner. Marta's decision is the choice of a mature and responsible adult.

The film also gives an interesting insight into contemporary Polish life. A Woman's Decision is a moving story, which is honest, clear, and movie-goers should see it if the opportunity arises.

Watts watched at Hampshire

By JOHANNA HOSOM
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: This is part of a continuing series on energy that will appear from time to time in the Collegian.

Lights, stereos and televisions will be off today at Hampshire College, as the Watt Watchers Club proclaimed Energy Fast Day. The members have claimed that Hampshire is "overwatt."

Over $500,000 has been budgeted for college energy expenditures this year. Five percent of each student's tuition fee last year went for energy costs, and that figure is expected to rise to 9 percent next year, according to college spokesman David Starr.

"The fast is to make people aware of conservation," said Abby Ruskey, a club member. "We appealed to people both politically and economically. The political aspect is that Hampshire runs 75 percent on nuclear power. We also told students how much of their money is going to pay for energy.

"Our goal is to cut consumption by 25 percent. It's a fairly high figure. We originally proposed a 50 percent decrease, but that's much too high."

"To publicize the fast, we distributed leaflets under each door in the dorm, put up posters in the dining common and bulletin boards, and put notices in the weekly bulletin," she said.

"We're suggesting conservation on a daily basis, asking people to cut down on their use of heat and appliances, and to take shorter showers. For the fast day, we're asking students to avoid doing laundry, to take showers either the day before or the day after and not to use appliances at all," she said.

"Fifty percent of the money saved will be spent on student activities. Right now we're thinking about a bonfire at night with kegs. At first we were going to use the money to support future programs, but the bonfire will generate a lot more support," Ruskey said.

Students promote electric car

By SIOBHAN C. BREEN
Collegian Staff

The small red car plugged into the service station on Russell Street yesterday may be a look into the future, said Bentley College senior John Chapski who is driving an electric car from Maine to Florida.

Chapski and Thomas Scholis, also a Bentley senior, are traveling the east coast to publicize electric cars and their potential use, Scholis said. The trip will take 14 days and cover over 1,700 miles.

"The electric car is ideal for the two-car family," Chapski said. "The electric car could be used for local trips or commuting, and the gas-powered for long distances.

"We're driving it to Florida to show as many people as possible what the car is about," he said. They will make 50 recharging stops along the way and stop at high schools and community groups.

The car was originally a Fiat Strata that was coverted by the U.S. Electricar Corporation of Athol, who donated the "Lectric Leopard" to the Bentley Project. It costs about a penny per mile to operate, said Chapski.

"For a commuting automobile, it's super," said Pete Scoon, owner of the Sunoco station where the 'Leopard' recharged.

"Based on trip lengths, an electric vehicle with a 40 mile range between rechargings could be used for 91.5 percent of all private transportation," according to a Department of Energy report.

Scholis and Chapski, management and marketing major, respectively, at the Waltham college, are receiving internship credits for the hands-on management and marketing experience they've gained from organizing this venture.

"I'd like to do it again," Scholis said. "Except next time I'd like to hit every state...well, maybe I'll skip Hawaii."

Traffic system arouses controversy

By Michael Sullivan
Collegian Correspondent

The traffic lights at the intersection of East Pleasant and Triangle Streets are expected to become operational later this week. But while town officals say traffic should flow smoother, bicyclists may face a difficult time there.

Town Planner James Cope said that he has received many complaints from area residents concerning the intersection, and most complaints have come from cyclists who oppose what he calls the "poor planning" of the design.

Cope said the town has no control over the construction or operation of the lights until the project is completed. The town approved the project, but was not responsible for the design.

"Unless something goes wrong with it, it should be done by the end of the week," said John Hollister, resident engineer for the State Department of Public Works.

The timed lights are designed for facilitating traffic flow and upgrading safety conditions in town, said Hollister.

The blinking lights currently in operation are a temporary measure activated in November.

"We thought blinking lights would be better than no lights," said Hollister. He said people did not seem to be stopping at the stop signs which were at the intersection before the lights.

Amherst Police Lt. David Jankowski agreed that the lights will help facilitate the traffic flow, but said that the intersection "does jeopardize bicyclists."

Jankowski explained that the approach to the intersection, which channels traffic into two narrow lanes, leaves nowhere for bicyclists to go. The high curbs also limit a cyclist's ability to avoid traffic.

Amherst Police accident reports show a dramatic decrease in the number of accidents since the activation of the blinking lights. In the four months prior to installation of the lights there were 17 accidents recorded. For the four months following installation there were seven.

Man robbed at knifepoint after hitchhiking in Amherst

A Florence man was robbed at knifepoint Tuesday night while hitchhiking from Amherst Center to Northampton, said Sergeant William Arnold of the Northampton Police Department.

Richard LaRose, 27, reported that the man picked him up near Amherst Center and drove him down Route 9 until Old Ferry Road in Northampton where the driver said he had to make a rest stop, Arnold said.

LaRose agreed to stop and while the men were standing outside the vehicle the driver put a three-inch knife to LaRose's throat and demanded that LaRose give him all his money, Arnold said.

LaRose then gave his assajlant approximately $60 and the driver reportedly sped away in his light green Toyota or Datsun, Arnold said.

LaRose then walked from LaFleur Airport to the Northampton Police Station and reported the crime at 10:50 p.m., Arnold said.

The assailant was described as being a white male, 24 or 25 years old, approximately six feet tall, weighing 180 to 200 pounds with brown hair, and dressed in jeans, Arnold said.

Arts endangered

An alarming aspect of President Reagan's proposed budget is the 50 percent cut for the National Endowment for the arts (NEA). These budget cuts, if approved by Congress, will have a serious, potentially devastating effect on the arts in general, and especially at the University of Massachusetts.

If these cuts had been in effect during the current school year, there would have been no visits by major dance companies, as the Fine Arts Center Concert Series receives 30 percent funding for each company from the NEA. Without this subsidy, costs would be prohibitive.

There would have been no major theater companies on campus. Presently up to 40 percent funding is available for theater residencies through the NEA.

It is possible that no major orchestras or opera companies would have appeared at UMass if these budget cuts were in effect today. Although the Fine Arts Center Concert Series is not directly funded for these shows, orchestras and opera companies receive direct funding from the NEA which reduces their charges for shows.

Cuts in the NEA's budget would also affect the UMass Arts Council, which is involved with projects as diverse as public art, outdoor shows in the residential areas, and the annual Community Day.

If Reagan's budget cuts are adopted, the exhibition program at the University Gallery will have to be seriously curtailed. New acquisitions to the University's Permanent Collection would also be seriously affected, or eliminated altogether. This year, 45 percent of the gallery's budget consisted of grants from the National Endowment For the Arts.

We feel that these programs are important to the cultural life of the University.

While it may be necessary to trim the NEA's budget, no other government agency has been singled out for such a serious cutback in funding. We feel that such an extreme cut to the NEA's budget will be detrimental to the quality of life in America, and should not be tolerated.

Reagan's budget cannot become reality, however, without congressional approval. Please take time now to write your elected representatives in Washington urging them to reconsider the budget cut to the National Endowment of the Arts.

Grandma's dream machine

These are days of grace. The roller-skaters fly back and forth, passing each other on the concrete. The bikes glide by, people roll down their windows, stick an elbow out, ducks walk on water...

I twist a fat white flower in my hair as I walk to class. My favorite and only sister has written me a letter; I take it from my back pocket and shake it like a pack of sugar, holding off the pleasure of opening it. Then I carefully open it, tearing the letter as usual.

She writes that my grandma is in the hospital, and that she is very ill. This is a great blow. I had thought my grandma would get over cancer, that she was too wonderful to have this disease. I thought she was in remission. My sister writes that grandma is down to a 100 lbs., but some kind of fluids have made her stomach expand so she looks pregnant. I think of these fluids as black and green and gray, swirling in whirlpools in my grandma's stomach. My sister writes that she asked to be switched to a bed near the window, and now she can look outside. Grandma says the weather's lovely, she sends her love.

I stop to call the hospital. "Hello, Grandma," I say, "I hear you got a window seat." She laughs a little, says she loves me, says she can't talk anymore, says she loves me, hangs up. I still have time to smoke a cigarette before class.

I get a window seat too, in my class on the second floor, and look out over the campus. People stroll, talking to their friends, some run, late for class. The most beautiful girl I've ever seen stops on the pavement, bends over, and begins to brush her hair. A boy jiggles her elbow to get her attention. She looks up, they talk. My teacher is talking; he points at the board. I think they should make open-air hospitals. My grandma needs to be in the sun. She used to always kick me out of the house, when I was curled in some dark corner, reading. Milk and sun seep into your bones and make you strong.

I think I'll walk into that hospital in broad daylight, and walk right out with the roll-away bed, grandma giggling. Like an Indy car, I'll build momentum — by the time we hit the elevators, the bed's a silver blur.

Nurses scream and drop their trays, doctors come running — we take the emergency exit. Soon the whole hospital is chasing us up 68th St. Grandma's laughing, the sun's seeping into her, she laughs louder, and says, "Faster, faster."

We mow down the cop at the intersection. Sirens are wailing all over the city, millions of feet stomp behind us as the express bed careens into Central Park, springs popping. We knock over the balloon man, hundreds of red and yellow balloons rise over New York. Taxi's veer crazily, the drivers lean out and shake their fists, swearing. Grandma laughs, gives them all the finger.

The teacher seems to be talking to me. I ask him to repeat the question, I shake my head, I ask again, but its no good. I still can't understand a word he says.

Laurie Zucker is a Collegian staff writer.

Laurie Zucker

Where have you gone, Joe DiMaggio?

When I was a kid I'd get into a lot of fights because I was the only Yankees fan in the neighborhood. When I was in high school, my catcher would deliberately return all my pitches on two hops because I liked to wear my Yankees cap on the mound at practice. When I was a sophomore in college I collected $63.75 in bets because of a certain well-timed Bucky Dent blooper home run. God, that was sweet.

But I can't do it anymore. I can't bring myself to root for the pinstripes anymore. In the past few years, they have come to represent much of what is loathsome about big business in this country — inordinate wealth, endless greed, gross self-indulgence, bitter infighting. Loyalty is a forgotten concept. The owner is a pompous dictator. The manager is his stooge.

The new Yankees disgust me. Rooting for them is the moral equivalent of rooting for Exxon.

It hurts so much to say that, because I've been a loyal, occasionally rabid, Yankees fan since I was old enough to hold a ball. I come from a small Connecticut town, more or less smack in between Boston and New York, where a baseball allegiance to either city is staked out early in life.

"Don't ever let nobody tell you that Williams was better than DiMaggio," I remember my father telling me, while we baked in the Yankee Stadium bleachers at a mid-sixties Old Timers Game. "Wasn't nobody alive could play ball like the Clipper." Or play short like the Scooter, or catch like Yogi Berra, or pitch like Whitey Ford, or throw smoke out of the bullpen like Ryne Duren.

"We've always been Yankees people in this house," he'd say. "My father saw the Babe hit three homers one day. I was at Mantle's first game in 1951. That's just the way it's always been around here." And so it was.

But it wasn't easy. In 1967, something happened that the papers called "The Impossible Dream," and the hordes of proud and ecstatic Red Sox fans of my town felt the moment ripe to pounce.

"Where the Yanks gonna end up this year?" they'd chirp. "The cellar's too good for the bums." We couldn't respond but to smack our gum and wait till next year.

Next year never came. In 1969 the Mets across town were in the midst of their miracle, and legions of weak-willed and impatient Yankee rooters migrated to their camp. By September, the papers were running four and five Mets features every day while the Bombers were all but forgotten, their game story tucked away in some lost corner next to the Belmont results and amateur golf. My father and I looked on sadly and hoped for better days.

Better days? The Mets raised another pennant in '73, and the Sox in '75. The summer of '75 was the worst. We had no answers to the acid taunts of the sharp-tongued Sox fan. We hadn't taken a pennant since '64. It had been over a decade of Horace Clarkes and Billy Burbachs, of sixth places and August eliminations. And here were our bitterest of rivals in the Series again. My town was saturated with red and blue caps and banners, the names of the rookies Lynn and Rice on everyone's lips, while those of us who dared to wear our Yankees caps in public kept them low to shade our eyes and our shame.

Then, in 1976, the shame turned back to glory. A flamboyant new owner began flashing his money belt and talking of renewing a dynasty. The majestic old stadium was renovated, and a sharp new team was assembled to occupy it. Shrewd trades brought in a motherlode of talent to add to the veterans White, Munson, and Lyle, and we whipped the hated Red Sox by ten games and took the pennant in a dogfight over Kansas City. We added some more players and won the Series in '77 and '78, and now it was the Sox fans turn to shake their heads and wonder why. It was sweet vindication for those of us who'd stood steadfastly by the weak teams and absorbed torrents of abuse from even the dimmest of Red Sox supporters. Then it began to turn sour.

They have a good shot to win it all again this year, but it's no fun anymore. The new owner turned out to be a meddler, a bully, and a crybaby. The great Munson is gone, and White and Lyle, Chambliss and Rivers, and Billy Martin. The new Yankees are nothing more than a bunch of rich guys who've been bought by the big Yankee bucks to play their positions. It's a team with no character, no freshness of spirit. There's no room for a developing rookie. No margin for error. Anything short of perfection is failure. They're a cold steel machine with a Svengali owner at the controls, adding and discarding cogs at his whim. That's not baseball, and they're not a ballclub anymore.

It's only baseball, I know, but I loathe the Exxon mentality. I hate plastic turf, and exploding scoreboards, and pastel uniforms, and sub-freezing World Series games played in the October night to accomodate the networks. And I hate teams that try to buy pennants.

I never had a chance to see DiMaggio glide into left center and snag a sinking line drive off the grass as easily as you and I tie our shoes. And it's sad because that's something I would have appreciated.

South African terror in Namibia

At this very moment a war is raging in southwestern Africa. The victims of the devastation are the people of Namibia who are struggling against the South African military machine in their quest for self-determination.

Namibia is a poor, arid country with the lowest population density of any nation. It was originally colonized by German settlers, then British, and ultimately South Africans. Regardless of nationality, none of the white colonists have shown any compassion or respect for black Namibians, but instead have attempted to enslave them.

The exploitation of Namibian resources has been lucrative for the South Africans, British, and Americans, since Namibia is a nation rich in important minerals such as uranium, copper, and lead. Thus, it is very clear which side the American government and multinational corporations support in this conflict.

The close but silent friendship of the U.S. government with the South African regime is evidenced by the refusal of the mainstream American media to inform the American public about the incredibly oppressive nature of South African apartheid. Similarly, major events in the region, such as the war in Namibia, are not reported because they expose South African terror.

In 1946, the United Nations decided to exercise supervisory power over South Africa's illegal administration in Namibia. The South African government responded by condemning the UN proposal, and intensifying its control of the country by enforcing apartheid — the policy of absolute separation of races — on all levels of Namibian society.

As white farmers took control of all the prime agricultural land, many black workers were forced to seek employment in the mines, under the most deplorable conditions. Today, the average Namibian laborer who works in a mine or industrial facility earns roughly one-twentieth the wage of a white person. The workers are often separated from their families for months at a time, since women are denied employment opportunities, and must stay in the villages. Often, the men return home, after months of hard labor, virtually penniless.

The Namibian people have never accepted the illegal colonization of their country. Armed uprisings occurred as far back as 1903, but they were always sporadic and uncoordinated. By the 1950s it became clear that a national organization was urgently needed to unite the most politically conscious people with the masses, who lived in several different tribal societies. In response to this need, the South West African Peoples Organization (SWAPO) was clandestinely formed in Windhoek in April 1960.

According to the political program of SWAPO, the main tasks of the organization are "the liberation and winning of independence for the people of Namibia by all possible means, and the establishment of a democratic people's government; and, the realization of genuine and total independence of Namibia in the spheres of politics, economy, defense, social and cultural affairs."

During the early 1960's, SWAPO used peaceful means to deal with the colonizers, but the South Africans refused to even recognize the organization. By 1966, it became evident to people all over the world that South Africa was subjecting Namibia to horrible repression. It was in that year that the UN declared the South African presence to be illegal, and SWAPO resorted to popular armed struggle against the intransigent racist regime.

In the last few years, the struggle has intensified as South Africa has built new military bases, airstrips and minefields in Namibia. South African planes continually bomb villages, while the ground troops use genocidal tactics such as firebombing huts and killing children. In May 1978, South African troops crossed the border into Angola and massacred 600 Namibian women, men, and children at a refugee camp at Kassinga.

The Angolan people themselves have suffered greatly for their unwavering support of SWAPO. In fact, both the South African and American governments have made it clear that they intend to destabilize and eventually topple the democratic, socialist government of Angola.

According to Ramsey Clark, the former U.S. Attorney General who visited Angola's Kunene province, "there were reports of day-to-day incursions by South African military personnel, apparently daily use of South African military aircraft, jets with rocket and heavy gunfire capacity and use of helicopter fleets which under heavy fire-cover land and made assults on the territory of Angola."

"At the present time there are close to 100,000 South African troops in Namibia, a nation with only a million people. Nevertheless, against overwhelming odds, the Namibian people under the leadership of SWAPO continue to struggle. According to Ellen Musialela, a freedom fighter and representative of SWAPO, "the aparteid regime is fighting a losing war. Its not weapons which fight, but the determination of the people."

Because of the determination of the fighting Namibian people, the internal black resistance to the racist regime, and the solidarity of all African peoples with these struggles, the South Africans are finally willing to discuss a solution to the Namibian conflict with SWAPO. In January 1981, a UN conference met in Geneva to discuss independence for Namibia.

In attendance were South Africa, SWAPO, the Democratic Turnhalle Alliance — a white puppet government of Namibia, the neighboring "front-line" states, Nigeria, and the five western nations with extensive investments in Namibia — Great Britain, the United States, France, Germany, and Canada. When the UN finally came up with a plan for an election, South Africa backed off and declared that elections would be premature at this time. Thus, the conference broke down, and the war again intensified.

The Haig-Reagan administration has made it clear that America stands behind the apartheid system of South Africa. This is not surprising, as the corporations and financial institutions whom Reagan represents, have $4 billion worth of investments in South Africa. A disruption of vital mineral supplies from the region would mean a major setback for the military-industrial complex in this country.

The possibility of a U.S. military intervention in southern Africa is far from remote. The United States intervened in the region as recently as 1974, when Nixon authorized aid for South Africa backed factions in Angola during the civil war in that country. The effort was halted only because the American people, weary from the long war in Vietnam and the CIA overthrow of president Allende in Chile, demanded that Congress stop the intervention.

In this particularly crucial year, it is imperative that all progressive people demand that the U.S. not again intervene in Africa. Furthermore, the struggle for survival of SWAPO and the Namibian people must not only be recognized, but actively supported. Clearly, the terrorism that is being waged against the people of Namibia is every bit as brutal as that used by the El Salvadoran junta against the people of that nation.

But there is hope. The victories of national liberation struggles in Zimbabwe, Nicaragua and Vietnam have proven what oppressed people are saying all over the world: "The people united will never be defeated."

UMass and NASA

It isn't every day that UMass can brag about making a notable contribution to a world-shaking event. But the launching of the Space Shuttle brought a number of hitherto unrevealed facts to the surface that indicate a closer, more significant association with the success of this venture.

The innumerable, costly delays which seemed to be bugging the Space Shuttle take-off had to do with the nose tiles, which wouldn't stay on and endangered the landing and the take-off. NASA called in our own Professor John E. Ritter of the UMass Mechanical Engineering Department, who is a reknowned specialist in the principles of mechanical behavior and failure of metals, polymers and ceramics. Using his expertise as an analyst of problems in the design of structural materials that need to meet definite strength and performance criteria, Prof. Ritter went out to Ames Space Center in California and worked out the stress charts which emphasize the engineering significance and measure the potential critical stress intensity factor, relaxation modulus, creep rupture life and crack growth rate which the nose of the Columbia would be subject to.

Dr. Ritter was glued to the television during the attempted launching on the 10th April and breathed a sigh of relief when the Columbia took off on the morning of the 12th. But he didn't feel his contribution was successful until the Space Shuttle landed safely in California Tuesday with the nose tiles in tact...or nearly so.

Who needs bathrooms?

The New York Times on March 20 reported that 3,000 UMass students have signed a petition protesting the abolition of co-ed bathrooms.

I take no position on this issue, but I do have one question.

The Reagan administration and Congress are seriously considering cutting off student grants and loans to hundreds of thousands of students. Those at public colleges would be particularly hard hit.

How many students have signed a petition to their Congressmen and Senators on this issue?

Think of it this way — if you can't go to college, you won't get to use those bathrooms anyway.

Correction

In a guest column by Professor Jack L. Benson yesterday, "The matter of matter, spirit," part of a sentence was omitted due to a typographical error. The fifth paragraph should read "They are the first to bring to a wide public the knowledge that, while science deals in facts, its interpretations depend on an unproved and unprovable assumption, namely, that the universe (including all its life) must be investigated as if it consisted only of matter (or impersonal forces)."

There's slim pickin's in the Valley this weekend with the annual Easter exodus, but there are a couple of interesting acts.

Among these are Max Roach and New Black Eagles, who are appearing as part of the Tenth Annual Black Musicians Conference. That's tonight in the Fine Arts center. Tickets are still available.

On Saturday night, 81 year old Roy Smeck—The Wizard of the Strings, appears in Buckley Recital Hall at Amherst College. Tickets are only a $1.00 for students, and the concert will be part of a documentary film on Smeck's life. It starts at 8 p.m.

The Nervous Eaters are in the Hangar tonight if you want to really stretch out your long weekend.

The Sci Ams are making a live video tape at Hangar One on Monday night, and that's free if you want to check it out.

Tomorrow night the Shaboo All-Stars are at the Nail, and Hot Head Slater is at the Hangar. Other than that there isn't much else to do.

Saturday, reggae band Jah Malla, plays at Rahar's.

In record news there is no truth to the rumor that Paul, George, and Ringo are going to regroup to do a tribute album for John Lennon, according to an interview with Ringo in this week's Rolling Stone.

Both Ringo and Paul, however, are working on albums that feature the other former beatles on certain tracks.

Ringo's new album, Can't Fight Lightning, is due out in late spring and might include some tracks Ringo recorded with John, too.

Former leader of Creedence Clearwater Revival, John Fogerty, is working on a new solo album due for release later in the year.

Roy Smeck will be appearing in Buckley Recital Hall at Amherst College this Saturday night. Tickets are $1 for students.

Which beer tasted better?

An impossible question?

No. The answer is, the beer on the right tasted better. The suds are the tipoff. The head lacing the glass on the right has what brewers call "cling." Its tendency to cling to the glass tells you that the brewer didn't skimp on the hops. And that it tasted better.

Ever taste a beer with no "hop" to it?

Hops give a beer its zing. Too little hops leaves a beer lifeless. Too much hops makes a beer bite.

But choose a beer with the right proportion of hops to barley malt, and your beer will be lively and refreshing. Yet, still go down nice and smooth.

Does your beer have "cling?"

To check for "cling," you need a glass that's "beer clean." (Never used for milk or soft drinks, never washed in soap.*)

Pour your beer down the center of the glass to form a 3/4 inch head. See if it leaves rings of foam as you drink. But don't stop at the "cling" test. Make this a full-fledged taste test.

*Note: "Beer-clean" glasses should be washed with detergent. Rinse several times in very hot water. Air dry only—never use a towel.

Can you recognize your beer by the taste?

Probably just 1 beer drinker in 3 can pick his beer out of a group of three. You try. Pour your brand and two other leading beers—a Schlitz, Bud or a Miller—into identical glasses. Have a friend switch them around. As you drink each beer, not only check it for its "cling," but rate its taste characteristics from 1 to 10 on the flavor scale. Now comes the real test. Tell your friend which beer is yours.

Did your choice surprise you?

Something like 2 out of 3 beer drinkers don't pick their brand. And that surprises them. A lot of them pick Schlitz instead.

That doesn't surprise us. Two years ago a master brewer, Frank Sellinger, came to Schlitz. Today he is the Chief Executive Officer and today's Schlitz is the smoothest beer he's ever brewed. Taste it against yours. The results may surprise you.

Concert brings energetic response

Country, Blues and Bluegrass Benefit Concert
Hangar One, Hadley 4-12-81

By JON OLTSIK
Collegian Correspondent

The third annual Country, Blues, and Bluegrass Benefit concert was held last Sunday at Hanger One in Hadley, and with the 18 or so bands that played and the large crowd that circulated in and out, the concert was a day-long extravaganza.

It was clear from the start that the concert could be nothing but a country jamboree. The dress was casual with overalls, flannel shirts, and long skirts prevalent. The mood was relaxed and friendly with all the energy stemming from the music.

The concert featured a wide range of music with artists from South Deerfield to South Chicago. With the start of the entertainment at noon, the mode was bluegrass and the band was Billings Gap. The crowd responded to the local band with howls and claps of appreciation.

The bluegrass segment of the day also featured a veteran of country music in the valley, Wynn Fay and the Ridgerunners, as well as The Valley Partners, The River Valley Ramblers, and a host of others appearing throughout the night.

During the day the crowd was completely enthused-stomping, clapping, and carrying on. They swarmed the dance floor to swing when Cowboy Jazz took the stage. There was not enough room to jitter-bug, but the dancers made the best of the situation. No one seemed to mind; smiling, laughing, and dancing were the dominant actions.

The blues segment of the show began around 10:00 p.m. and was certainly one of the highlights of the day. The Ambrosia Blues Allstars (Tuesday night, Ambrosia Cafe fame) began with their electric Chicago-style blues which once again packed the dance floor.

After a brief pause, J.B. Hutto and the New Hawks took the stage and wailed such favorites as "Don't Want You No More" and "Got my Mojo Workin." The climax of his performance came when J.B., his rhythm guitarist, and his bassist came out into the audience while the crowd made a circle around the band and danced with the wailing bluesers.

After the New Hawks had finished it was the Eddy Clearwater Blues Band and Carey Bell who rocked the Hanger. With songs like old favorite "Kansas City," Eddy kept the then-exhausted crowd up and on their feet, boogying and screaming.

The feeling of the concert was one of joy; everyone, whether performing, listening, or working seemed to be having a great time. The emphasis was on the music and the musid didn't disappoint anyone. It was a good feeling, too, to know that money was being raised for WMUA's traditional Sunday-afternoon Country Blues and Bluegrass show.

Billings Gap were just one of many bands who appeared at the Country Blues and Bluegrass Benefit.

Student's sculpture provides unique and delightful imagery

By SUSAN BARON
Collegian Staff

Through April, Jeff Boshart's thesis exhibit will be on view at Herter Gallery. Adding another "ism" to the repertoire of art styles, Jeff calls his installation "Industrialism."

Boshart's sculpture consists of three tons of 16 foot long, wooden beams. With the help of physics, tension and point-to-point balance, the construction stands in Gallery One—from ceiling to floor, wall to wall. No nails, just good old man-made sculpture.

Although smaller and more discreet, I found the highlight of Boshart's exhibit in the Sun Gallery. The "drawings" and floor sculptures in this part of the exhibit provide visual and audio delights.

Unlike most drawings, Boshart uses pieces of wood, rather than pencil drawn lines, as the substance of his art. Each "drawing" is enclosed by a frame and plexiglass. Within each frame lies a geometric pattern of wooden shapes. Instead of conventional nails, it is a single weight, strategically hung from each work, that pulls and holds the individual parts together. Physics is the constant. Unique and impressive art is the result.

For fun, Boshart makes teeter-totter-type floor sculptures. When set in motion, these pieces rock creating different sounds.

Even before speaking with Boshart, the thesis of the exhibit was fairly clear. The title, "Industrialism," represents the image and attitude of his work. As Boshart said, "Visually, it's romantic." But as for content, the exhibit rebels against social stigmas. Boshart's art is man-made, not machine-made. It is simple and humanistic. Boshart likes to think of it as having a "Constructivist base with incorporated societal influences."

Twenty-five years old and from Montana, Boshart is finishing up his graduate degree in Art at UMass. Surprisingly, he's never even taken a physics course. His fine and mechanical sculpture seems to prove otherwise.

Coffee shop exhibits student's art

By KATHERINE STONE
Collegian Correspondent

Hidden among the art studios of the fourth floor in the Fine Arts Center is a coffee shop adjacent to a student gallery run by the Arts Students Association.

The ASA is a student-run organization which organizes bus trips to New York City and a materials co-op which sells art supplies at a discount. The coffee shop is designed to give students and teachers a place to relax between their classes.

Currently there is a double exhibit by Donna Estabrooks, a junior B.F.A. painting major, and Elsie F. Stockwell, a sophomore undeclared.

"The coffee shop provides a social center for art students and encourages people to interact with their work," said Stockwell.

"Anyone can sign up," Estabrooks said. "The exhibits change on a weekly basis. It's nice to let other students see the work you're doing and get some feedback," she said.

Gorillas declaw Bears, 25-11

By STEPHEN FREKER
Collegian Staff

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — Shortly after the game was over, the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team presented its head coach Dick Garber with a brand new bearskin rug. Later, Chris Corin and Pete Schmitz sauntered onto the team bus sporting big grins and neckchains made of bear claws. The prevalent feeling was that this game made up for last year's game, and then some.

Well, the first two incidents are playful fabrications, but the last sentiment could not be more correct as Garber's Gorillas whitewashed Brown University's Bears, 25-11, at Stevenson Field in Providence yesterday.

By pressing and hustling on both ends of the field, Massachusetts was able to jump out to a quick lead and add to its momentum as the game progressed, eventually turning it into a one-sided study in demoralization for the Bears, who are currently ranked third in New England.

"We weren't expecting anything like this. We thought it would be a lot closer," Garber said. "We've scored more goals in a game in past years, but never against such a quality opponent."

The first attack line of Corin, Jim Weller and Skip Vosburgh along with midfielder tri-captain Schmidt, combined to completely control and dominate the Brown end of the field, executing the pressure ride offense to perfection.

The defense also played another standout game as a unit and was backed by the steady netminding of Chris Bennedetto. None of the Bear scores were tallied at a crucial time of the game and the trio of tri-captain Paul Kinnane, Mark Fierro, and Peter Martino made the matters difficult for Brown's attackers all game long.

"Our defense is one of our strongest points," Garber said. "We were concerned about their attack squad but we don't have to worry too much with those guys out there to back us up."

"They (the defense) just kept taking the ball away from Brown and they couldn't get a good offense going," Corin said. "The defense plus the good goaltending gives us a lot of confidence when we're out there."

Senior Tom Walters, the faceoff master, put in another yeoman's effort in the circle, picking up 24 of 30 faceoffs and scooping up 16 ground balls of the Gorillas' 24 ball (79-55) advantage in that department.

Massachusetts jumped out to a quick 5-1 lead at the end of the first quarter by maintaining possession for extended time spans and working for the good shot. Brown had its chances to score on a couple of breakaways, but couldn't slip by Bennedetto. A penalty-disallowed goal and a disputed goal off the top of the Gorilla net, added to the Bears' miseries.

The Manhasset (N.Y.) Connection, Vosburgh to Corin, was in fine form in the quarter and in the game as Corin slammed in two of his season-high six goals off of feeds from Vosburgh, who had seven assists for the game.

Senior Brian Kaley broke the Gorillas' defensive scoring ice for the season when he picked up a misplayed Bear ball 10 feet in front of Brown's cage and walked in for the goal. This made the score 7-1 in Massachusetts' favor and the paltry (by "hill" standards, although it was a large crowd for a Brown game) Bear crowd of 300 began to sense a shellacking. However, Brown came back with two quick goals to get back into the game for the time being.

In the third quarter, the Gorillas, who were perhaps remembering last year's stinging loss to the Bears at Boyden Field, simply opened the floodgates. Massachusetts scored eight unanswered goals in eight minutes and outshot the Bears 25-7 in the period, and were ahead at the end of three, 18-8.

Attacker Weller, who shot a perfect five-for-five in the second half, played a major role in this decisive onslaught. The Ontario native threw in four of his seven goals (Weller equaled this output against Cornell) in the period on a variety of dazzling shots which included a behind-the-back, over-the-shoulder sparkler, left-handed. Corin also pumped in two more in the quarter, one unassisted and one on a dishoff from Schmidt that he whipped in sidearm.

A meaningless "play of the game" for Brown came when Bear middie Kurt Stenburg scored a goal with a miracle-shot from the faceoff line with a second to go in the third quarter.

"Two years ago they beat us here and they really let us know it," Corin said. "They beat us at home last year and it was worse. We had a lot of incentive today and everyone came through as a team. I'm just glad we did it here."

Team effort prevails, Mittmen stifle Eagles

By JANE WOLFSON
Collegian Staff

This was one of those games that could only be called a complete team effort. A game that consisted of flawless pitching, outstanding hitting (16 hits, 12 runs), and a solid defense, all which lead to the University of Massachusetts baseball team 12-1 romp over Boston College yesterday at Chestnut Hill.

Clearly the consistency of the UMass pitching staff with four pitchers combining for the win was the most important surprise during the afternoon.

Starter and winning pitcher Chuck Thompson went the first three innings for the Minutemen, giving up the only run while allowing two hits and three walks. Steve Cramer gave up just one hit as he pitched the next two scoreless innings. But the story for UMass pitching came from the performances of Adam Grossman and Steve Drelick.

Grossman, making his first performance for UMass this season due to a shoulder injury this winter, was truly impressive.

Throwing mostly fastballs mixed with a few sliders, the lefty sophomore, stifled the Eagles for the next three innings giving up only one hit and registering one strikeout.

"I threw a lot of fastballs," Grossman, who was 4-0 with the JV last season, said. "My arm felt really good, I'm about 85 percent back and I feel like I'll be ready to pitch again this weekend."

Drelick then came in and pitched the final inning for UMass. He literally blew BC away in the ninth with his fastball (It took only eight pitches to retire the side). Control had been a problem with Drelick in his past outings, but not yesterday, as he struckout the leadoff batter in four pitches, fielded a dribbler back to the mound for the second out and served up a fly ball to centerfielder Mark Litano for the final out of the game.

Offensively for UMass everyone hit the ball. Secondbaseman Dean Bennett lead the Minutemen with four hits, including a double and an RBI. Litano's second homerun of the year to lead off the third inning was one of his three hits as well as the teams twentieth homerun of the year, which ties last years total mark only midway through the season.

Leftfielder John Kraham and firstbaseman Warren McReddie each contributed 2 RBI's to the scoring debacle.

UMass scored its first run off BC starter Joe Reardon in the first inning when McReddie singled up the middle scoring shortstop Vin Bonanno who had reached base on a walk.

Litano led off the third inning with his shot over the fence in leftcenter for what proved to be the winning run. McReddie then scored the second run of the inning after he reached base on a fielders choice moved to second on a single by freshman rightfielder Keith Lovellette and came across on a fielders choice by Kraham.

UMass scored two more runs in the fourth and three a piece in the fifth and sixth and the final run in the eighth. Both Bennetts, Dean and Barry each scored runs in the fifth and sixth innings and DH Tim Foster, catcher Jim Aulenback and Kelly McDonald accounted for the other three runs scored.

Boston College was incredibly sloppy in the field tallying eight errors along with countless overthrows and missed relay throws from the outfield.

Today the Minutemen travel to the University of New Hampshire to take on the Wildcats for a doubleheader starting at 1:00. Righthander Vin Todd and lefty Tony Presnal will be starting for UMass.

Callahan second in pentathalon

Micki Callahan, a member of the University of Massachusetts women's track team is in second place after the first day of the Boston College Relays women's pentathalon with 2374 points.

The pentathalon, the first to be held in New England during the season consists of seven events. The athletes competed in four of them yesterday with Callahan winning the 200 meter run, placing second in the high jump and the high hurdles and fourth in the shotput.

The Pentathalon will finish up today beginning at noon with the javelin throw, the long jump and the 800 meter run.

Women batters sweep Westfield, 3-0, 3-2

RANDI J. MARCUS

Although they swept the double-header, the UMass women's varsity softball team looked like two different teams as it shut out Westfield State College 3-0 and squeezed by 3-2 in the second game yesterday at NOPE.

"I felt we were pretty good out there in the first game," captain Brenda Simmons said, "But in the second game it seemed like we weren't always mentally there, and when we weren't, we got caught off guard."

Pitcher Kathy O'Connell held the Owls hitless until the fifth inning when they got one of their two hits.

The Minutewomen wasted no time taking the lead as Alison Rouix walked, stole a base and was knocked home by O'Connell, who doubled them scored on a single by Fran Troy.

UMass held a 2-0 lead steadily with a few scattered hits by Maddie Mangini, Jackie Gaw and Simmons.

The Owls were no threat obtaining their second hit late in the seventh inning.

Centerfielder Simmons injured her leg late in the first game whil sliding into second and was out for the second game.

The Owls showed a sign of life with good base running that allowed them to score on a passed ball in the first inning in game two.

The Minute women were quick to retaliate and take the lead thanks to Debbie Picket who knocked in sophomore Maryanne Lombardi and junior ourfielder Mangini who both had base hits.

UMass loaded the bases in the fifth and again in the sixth inning with hits by Karen Poirier, Mangini, and Lombardi but their efforts were in vain as they were left on base at the end of the innings.

The Owls tied the game in the top of the sixth inning scoring on a UMass error. A great catch in rightfield and "an incredible throw", according to coach Elaine Marasco in to catcher Gaw allowed Mangini to prevent Westfield's further scoring.

UMass picked up the winning run in the last inning bringing their record to 7-3. They face Vermont Friday at 3 p.m. at NOPE.

Labor Board Chief raps budget cuts

By M. W. MULCAHY
Collegian Staff

John Fanning, chairman of the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) said last night if the Senate Budget Committee cuts their budget by 30 million dollars as proposed by the Senate Labor Commission, they "might as well go out of business."

Fanning, who spoke before a group of 40 to 50 people in the Campus Center last night, appealed to the labor and management community to support the NLRB and oppose the suggested cuts.

Fanning said he expects to take in 63,000 cases in 1982, but if the cuts are made the NLRB will not be able to handle approximately 35,000 of them.

Fanning, who has served on the five member board for 24 years, said he thought President Reagan would probably not reappoint him as chairman in 1982 because he is not a Republican.

"I'd rather be a Democrat than be the head of the NLRB," Fanning said.

Fanning said although the number of cases the NLRB handles has increased, both Carter and Reagan have cut their budget and they will have to fire four to five thousand people.

Fanning said another major problem is that the board only has three of its suggested five members and consequently will not decide many controversial issues.

One of the issues which Fanning is putting off is whether an individual has the right to resign from his union at any time, he said.

Another issue being delayed is whether the union has the right to request the employer to tell them of toxic substances being used, Fanning said.

"This is a tough decision because on one hand the employees shouldn't be in danger because of the toxic substances," Fanning explained, "but the employer says that identifying the substance would be revealing a trade secret and he would lose his competitive advantage."

Another major decision awaiting the appointment of the new members is a reappraisal of the Yeshiva University decision that said faculty are members of management not labor and cannot strike, Fanning said.

Fanning said the three present members of the NLRB all disagree with this decision.

Fanning attributed the rising number of cases to a larger and more educated work force.

He emphasized his plea by quoting a television commercial, saying, "You can pay us now or you'll pay for it later."

Higher drinking age effectiveness disputed

By MICHAEL SULLIVAN
Collegian Correspondent

Two years after Massachusetts raised the legal drinking age from 18 to 20, opinion remains sharply divided as to the effectiveness of the measure.

According to the Associated Press (AP), state Registrar of Motor Vehicles Richard E. McLaughlin informed Governor Edward J. King last month that his office has recorded a 13.7 percent decrease in alcohol related teenage traffic fatalities, but state Sen. John Olver of Amherst disputes McLaughlin's figures, saying that "Any sophomore in college would receive a failing grade for using the registrar's statistical methods."

Olver added that there is insufficient evidence to prove either side of the issue, stating that McLaughlin fails to consider other variables, chief of which is the overall decrease in driving in recent years, in compiling his statistics, the AP reported.

Opinion on campus remains divided as well.

Dean of Students William F. Field said he feels that the measure has "produced larger consumption on campus, increased car drinking, and increased room drinking.

"The overall effect on campus is negative," Field said.

Field went on to say that the University used to be able to monitor the drinking and entertainment at social events, which cannot be held now because of the underage students. He said he sees this as an overall desocialization effect.

Director of Public Safety Gerald O'Neil expressed a different opinion.

"I don't have any evidence suggesting more drinking in dorms," he said. "I feel that it's been favorable here."

When questioned on the desocialization effect, O'Neil said, "You don't need beer to socialize."

While Field feels that drinking in dorms has increased, O'Neil said that he feels the law has put the alcohol off-campus in apartment complexes rather than in dorms.

Both men agreed, however, that the law has probably resulted in more drinking being done in cars by underage persons lacking anywhere else to go. Both men also agree that the law has had a positive effect in keeping alcohol out of the high schools.

MASSPIRG targets sale of useless drugs

By BRIAN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Using a recent survey published by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MASSPIRG) has targeted 15 drugs labeled by the FDA as being ineffective.

A survey of area pharmacies conducted by MASSPIRG showed that five of the 15 drugs were being sold by the pharmacies contacted, project coordinator Brian Kelley said.

The five drugs found either needed additional research or lacked necessary evidence to prove their effectiveness, Kelley said.

The drugs targeted by the MASSPIRG survey were: AVC Cream, Dimetapp, Donnatal, Marax, Mycolog, Mysteclin, Parfon Forte, Pavabid HP, Peritrate, Pherigan Expectorants, Ru-Vert, Synalogs, Tigan RS, Vasodilan, Winstrol and Wyanoids HC.

"Up until now these drugs have gone largely unnoticed. The public just isn't aware that a problem exists," said Mari Lewis, a project worker.

Many medical doctors do not receive in-depth instruction in pharmacology and do not have the knowledge of the ineffectiveness of drugs on the market, Kelley said.

"The responsibility falls on the drug manufacturers who just have not been doing their jobs in many cases," Kelley said.

Many drugs give the user side effects such as dizziness, lack of coordination and drowsiness. Others lose their effectiveness over a continued period of usage, Kelley said.

The problem stems from the incompleteness of the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act of 1938 which states that drugs on the market had to be proven safe, Kelley said.

In 1962 Congress amended the act requiring that drugs had to also be proven effective, this left a gap of 22 years in which drugs were produced for public consumption.

In 1966 the FDA contracted the National Academy of Sciences National Research Council (NAS-NRC) to investigate all drugs produced in those 22 years.

The NAS-NRC rated the drugs and placed them under categories ranging from "effective" to "ineffective." The MASSPIRG study deals with drugs in the categories of "probably effective," "possibly effective," and "ineffective", Kelley said.

Kelley feels that drugs in the "probably effective" and "possibly effective" and "ineffective" categories should be removed from the market until their usefulness has been proven.

Reagan plans further arms sales to Saudis

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration, in another move to bolster Persian Gulf security, has decided to sell Saudi Arabia ground radar stations and 10,000 anti-tank missiles even while other major arms sales to the oil-rich kingdom are under fire in Congress.

"That's enough missiles to knock out every tank in the Russian arsenal, certainly all the tanks Israel has," a highly placed source said with some exaggeration. Actually, the Pentagon estimates the Soviets have about 45,000 tanks. Israel has about 3,000.

The secret plan to arm the Saudis with the TOW missiles as well as a dozen highly sensitive ground radar stations for controlling interceptor planes is likely to spark further controversy when Congress is officially informed about the plans later this month.

Opposition is growing to the prospective sale of five advanced AWACs radar planes and equipment to enhance the firepower range of the 60 F-15 jet fighters the Saudis are to get beginning next year.

Commenting wryly on the decision to sell 10,000 wire-guided missiles to the Saudis — all that were quietly requested — one source said "Maybe they want to use some for target practice." That source, like others, asked not to be identified — in part because congressional notification still is pending.

The Saudis already have 4,000 antitank missiles. When the Army asked why they needed so many more, according to a source who asked not to be quoted by name, the Saudis said one reason was "they wanted to shoot some up for training."

Arms sales to the Saudis, which now total $35 billion, were on the rise before the Reagan administration took over. Even though the Saudis have boycotted U.S. efforts to secure peace for Israel among its Arab neighbors, the kingdom's vast oil resources and immense wealth facilitated U.S. weapons purchases.

These sales are accelerating under the new administration, which is moving to bolster countries in the Persian Gulf and Indian Ocean region against any potential Soviet thrust toward the oilfields.

The arms sales also are worrying Israel, which also is being bolstered by the administration as part of the same security policy.

The Saudis fought alongside other Arab countries in the 1948, 1967 and 1973 wars with Israel and help finance the Palestine Liberation Organization, which is sworn to dismantle the Jewish state.

"We're feeding the crocodile, thinking they'll be nice to us later," a key congressional source said. "We're deluding ourselves."

Rescue moves slowly toward trapped miners

Associated Press

REDSTONE, Colo. — Rescuers wearing oxygen masks had to rebuild a tunnel's ventilation system as they moved with painful slowness yesterday toward 15 men trapped by an explosion 7,000 feet inside a coal mine high in the mountains of Western Colorado.

Asked to estimate the odds for a successful rescue, Robert Delaney, attorney for Mid-Continent Resources Co., replied, "I wouldn't place odds on them one way or the other. I'd say they are remote."

At 2:30 p.m. MST, almost 24 hours after the blast, the rescue team had advanced to within about 800 feet of where the men were last seen, but officials said the rescuers' progress would be extremely slow because of the need to test for explosive gases and rebuild the damaged ventilation system.

Officials said the cause of the explosion at 4:15 p.m. MST on Wednesday had not been determined. But one of the seven miners who escaped after the blast said he thought it had been caused by a buildup of methane, a highly explosive and toxic substance.

The rescue teams — working in shifts in the sub-freezing temperatures deep inside the mountain — had to stop frequently to check for possible pockets of the methane, which is colorless and odorless.

The rescue teams managed to move forward only 200 feet in three and a half hours of effort during the early afternoon.

Delaney said the rescuers were moving slowly because of "rather conservative" federal rescue procedures which require crews to "build a path of clean air" as they approach an accident site.

The trapped miners were equipped with breathing units for use in emergencies, but Delaney said the units are good for only one hour.

A crowd of miners and relatives kept a vigil at the mine entrance at the end of a winding mountain road. Relatives avoided reporters, but rushed to hear any scraps of news from officials coming from the mine.

The 15 men trapped by the explosion range in age from 20 to 40 and all but three are married.

"We tell the relatives to go home," said a mine security guard. "We tell them there's no use staying here. But when something like this happens, and it's someone in your family, you don't stop to think about things. You just get in your car and drive up here."

The explosion rocked the lower sections of the Dutch Creek No. 1 mine, which is located at an altitude of 10,034 feet in the small one-street town of Redstone, about 30 miles west of Aspen.

Seven men emerged from the mine shaft in two groups after the blast, and three of them were admitted to Valley View Hospital in Glenwood Springs, 30 miles away, for treatment of burns, bruises and shock.

DRIFTER ARRESTED — Roland Smith of 80 Deerfield St., Greenfield is taken to Greenfield District Court yesterday by police officers. Smith has been accused of threatening the life of President Reagan.

Man held for threatening president

SPRINGFIELD — A 29-year-old Greenfield man was jailed on $10,000 cash bail yesterday on charges of making threats on the life of President Ronald Reagan.

Roland Smith was arrested by U.S. marshals yesterday morning immediately after his arraignment in Greenfield District Court on charges of assaulting two sheriff's deputies.

Authorities said Smith made the threats Wednesday, after he allegedly assaulted two Franklin County deputies who were trying to serve him with an eviction notice from his apartment.

It was not revealed at a bail hearing yesterday afternoon before U.S. Magistrate Charles Bergen what Smith allegedly said about the president.

Bergen scheduled a preliminary hearing in the case for April 24.

Prosecution rests in Sen. Kelly case

BOSTON — The prosecution rested its extortion case against ex-Sen. James A. Kelly Jr. yesterday quoting from a 1978 statement by the defendant that "political clout" influences what the state builds and where.

Prosecutor D. Lloyd Macdonald's parting shot was Kelly's sworn testimony before a legislative subcommittee in which he volunteered that it is the "realities of politics" that legislative leaders usually call the tune.

Macdonald read excerpts that included a view that decision makers in the executive branch are subject to the same forces as legislative leaders, noting:

"The same, exactly the same forces, either a feeling of obligation, or perhaps even the other side, corruption, is there and can and will enter when and if it's allowed."

Atkins criticizes King's budget proposal

BOSTON — Senate Ways and Means Chairman Chester G. Atkins joined his House counterpart yesterday in saying the proposed state budget filed by Gov. Edward J. King for the next fiscal year may be written in red ink.

Atkins, at a news conference, said his committee projects a $164.9 million deficit in the $6.4 billion bill, even without increasing aid to the financially strapped cities and towns.

While the Concord Democrat said it is too early to discuss new state taxes, the Senate's tax chairman, John W. Olver, said it is clear to him they will have to be considered.

Administrators address BOG on finances

By GREG VOLPE
Collegian Staff

Administrators of the Campus Center/Student Union complex spoke last night to the Campus Center Board of Governors on the present and future financial course of the multi-million dollar complex.

Bud Wilkes, assistant director, and Mohammad Idrees, financial manager, presented the board with the total financial structure of the Campus Center to better assist members in understanding where and why money is being spent by building administrators.

The board, in its present role, is designated as a student body which, in addition to controlling many student funds in the Campus Center and Student Union, represents the University of Massachusetts student body in the Campus Center/Student Union complex.

Wilkes, explaining where a large portion of yearly generated revenue is spent, said that since the complex was completed in 1970, the Campus Center has been paying around $1.5 million a year on mortgage payments to the state through the UMass Building Authority.

The Campus Center, Wilkes said, was issued a 35-year $21 million bond issue in 1976 to cover the total costs of the Campus Center construction.

Idrees, who detailed the financial process more extensively, told the board that the budgeted net income for every fiscal year determines how much will be spent on Campus Center and Student Union renovations.

Wilkes, expressing optimism for the future of the Campus Center, said, "Compare the building complex to a child growing up. That child's only 10 years old. It's growing, it's learning, and it hasn't reached its potential yet."

In other action, the board unanimously voted the approval of the Internal Conference Policy which will give the board more control on arrangements made for many R.S.O. groups, and the BOG itself, for traveling to various conferences.

BOG appoints coordinator for display space

By GREG VOLPE
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center Board of Governors (BOG), in an effort to enhance the quality of Campus Center and Student Union display space, announced its recently appointed "display coordinator" will soon implement policy regarding all existing and proposed space.

The position, proposed by the BOG late last January, was filled by Brendan McDonough in March. McDonough, a UMass graduate student, will "coordinate" all activities concerning display space used by various UMass groups.

At present, display space, in various location around the Campus Center/Student Union complex, is used by many groups and organizations to promote, and inform students about events and "happenings" occuring on campus.

BOG spokeswoman, Ellen Gillis, said the need for more "professional" looking and effective displays, prompted the board to create the position.

"Lack of professional standards in prime display space and under-utilization of non-prime display space, has caused us to hire Brendan. We hope to set standards of aesthetic and graphic presentability," she said.

Gillis said "prime" display space is located in front and around the Campus Center Coffee Shop, specifically at the "kiosk" location.

In addition to working with the many RSO groups, student organizations, and Campus Center services, that regularly utilize display space, the display coordinator will also assist Campus Center administrators in implementing some display space policies, Gillis said.

"The bottom line, is that the Campus Center administration is going out of their way to work with the BOG, to create new display cases, and help us understand what it is to have a good display," she said.

McDonough, who will begin working in an official capacity in three weeks, said reaching students in an effective way is of primary importance for all future displays.

"I will work with groups to develop more professional displays, which will create more effective communication," he said.

In addition, Gillis said, the Concourse Improvement Panel, consisting of both students and Campus Center administrators, will soon be implementing a "signage" policy, which would create more display space for the BOG and Student Government Association.

Gillis said the new space would be used by the BOG and SGA to post the minutes of their weekly meetings.

IUD and Pill dangers are not completely known

By MONICA CRONIN
Collegian Correspondent

Editor's Note: This is the second part of a three-part series on recent developments in Contraceptive devices.

One birth control method that is not perceived as having a problem with chemicals is the I.U.D. (Intrauterine Device). This is a fallacy of sorts because the most widely used I.U.D.s used are the Copper-7 and the Progestasert, both of which contain small amounts of chemicals. The trace chemicals may increase the contraceptive effect and reduce the heavy menstrual bleeding and cramping associated with the early I.U.D.s. The Copper-7 and the Progestasert are both slightly smaller than previous I.U.D.s. They were created for women with smaller uteri or those who have never had children, said Diane Wolfe, director of community Health Education at the UMass Health Center.

One important drawback to the I.U.D. is that it increases a woman's chances of contracting Pelvic Inflammatory Disease (PID). If untreated, PID can result in sterility. The chances of contracting PID are particularly high for women who: are under 25, have never been pregnant, have several sexual partners, or who have had pelvic infections before. The chances are higher for women who fall into more than one of those categories. I.U.D.s have a theoretical effectiveness rate of 99 percent and a practical effectiveness rate of 90 percent. They are one of the most reliable forms of birth control but have several drawbacks which deserve thoughtful consideration, particularly for college age women. Women who use an I.U.D. as their form of birth control and who have several sexual partners are more susceptible to PID because of the increased number of sources.

The most common and most feared form of birth control is the Pill. The Pill has been linked with mood swings, increased hair growth and hypertension, but much of the data these links are derived from is based on 20-year-old studies. At that time the Pill's potency was much greater. "This makes it difficult for a health professional to recommend the Pill," said Wolfe.

The most recent study of the effects of the Pill appears to bring reassuring news for the Pill users. The so-called "Walnut Creek" study is a ten-year study done by the Kaiser-Permanente Medical Center at Walnut Creek, Ca. The study found the risks of disease for most participants to be "negligible".

"There are problems with this particular study because it is retrospective and involves upper or at least middle class participants," said Dianne Taylor, patient education coordinator at the UMass Health Center. "The findings cannot be applied across the board. Most of these women have probably been healthy all their lives and have had access to health services," said Wolfe.

The fact that the study involved upper class consumers means that people from radically different backgrounds cannot apply the results to their situation.

Another problem with the study is that it is retrospective and most of the women in the study had used the Pill for only a fraction of the ten year period. Most studies have focused on current users of the Pill. Some research indicates that the most serious side effect of the Pill, cardiovascular problems, may show up only in current users.

In general, the women who are at risk when using the Pill are those who have had a heart attack, a stroke, blood clots, chest pains (angina pectoris), cancer of the breast or reproductive organs, or undiagnosed vaginal bleeding.

Student questions shuttle's use

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: This is the last installment in a three-part series on the Space Shuttle.

National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) researchers believe the beginning of an industrial revolution in space will be attributed to the flexibility of the space shuttle.

'We could have everything in space for peaceful purposes, but it's threatened by...ideas of Star Wars.'

One University of Massachusetts student, however, is skeptical about the intentions that NASA and the military have towards the shuttle.

"We could have everything in space for peaceful purposes, but it's threatened by antiquated military attitudes with ideas of "Star Wars," said Phyllis Rodin, 67, a doctoral candidate in future studies at UMass.

Rodin is supported by NASA's legislative charter which reads "the potential benefits to be gained from...the utilization of aeronautical and space activities for peaceful and scientific purposes."

"The Department of Defense isn't following the charter They are not using space for peaceful purposes," said Rodin.

Rodin also said if the military did begin taking active measures towards using the shuttle for a space war scenario, she feels groups might take legal actions to prevent it.

In the latest edition of SPINOFF, an annual magazine published by NASA, there were no reports of military uses of the space shuttle. The magazine reported only the shuttle's industrial advantages. The magazine reported that a new range of products would be manufactured in space which were impossible to produce on earth because of poor atmospheric conditions and gravity.

NASA said some of the products would include uncontaminated glass for optical applications, crystals for electronics systems, and a new class of pharmaceuticals.

Because of the shuttle's flexibility, it will enable assembly of habitable space factories while in orbit, reports NASA.

Some of the components which give the shuttle its flexibility include a 50 foot robot arm called the Remote Manipulator System which discharges satellites and other cargo at a safe distance from the shuttle, and the Automated Beam Builder (ABB) which rolls, bends, cuts, and welds triangular beams up to six miles long from spools of aluminum.

NASA reports both components will be mounted on early flights of the shuttle.

NASA plans to develop a shuttle system of "space tugs" more powerful than the Columbia series to transport large equipment.

Large corporations such as RCA and American Telephone & Telegraph have already rented space in the shuttle's cargo bay and have plans for the construction of orbital platforms which will carry communication antennas and solar energy equipment.

NASA has also set up "Get Away Specials" which would allow smaller organizations cargo space on certain flights, and Rodin said she has made a $500 deposit on such space.

"I paid for five cubic feet of space on the shuttle in 1977." said Rodin. "The space will be turned over to a high school age woman who wins a science contest."

To be quite honest, I really don't know where to begin this letter or which of a thousand titles I will give it. Let me see, I could call it "Observations of a Post Graduate," "Apathy Lives On," or "Who's Gonna Take the Weight." The title is unimportant, our freshpersons will be my main concern.

You know the ones I'm talking about. The ones with their dry-clean jeans, the Major Mudd-shine shoes and the latest living-colored-disco-do-hair-style. Upperclassmen know them so well that watching them hop around the campus causes our memories to laugh and shudder. You and I both know that they are in for the shock of their lives, if they are here long enough to be shocked.

Recently I arrived back on campus for a visit and I just had to see how the black organizations were faring. It appeared that a handful of old friends and upperclassmen were manning the boats for services that we all enjoy, such as Black Affairs, Nummo, and B.M.C.P. Through personal sacrifice and dedication they were working overtime to make sure that the Disco hoppers enjoyed that brief taste of Folk Perspective that Hally Valley P.T.A. had to offer.

"Did the University put a ban on admitting minorities," I shakily inquired of a female upperclassman.

"No," she replied, flashing a beautiful, tired smile. "They just don't come out and participate as much as you and I know they should. They feel that the educational experience is found lingering around on their corridors."

"Well," I said with relief, at least Reagan's cuts hadn't completely eliminated all signs of black progress in the '80's. They'll learn."

It's a doggone shame that so many of the upperclassmen, struggling to graduate, have to shoulder all of the responsibility for the organizations. They too have educational pursuits here.

For those of you who come here, fresh from your parents' arms with the idea that your brief stay will be one big party, are in for a serious shock. When you find at the end of the second semester that your education experience wasn't what you expected it to be, you should ask yourselves seriously and honestly "what did you put into making it a complete education? Did you participate in your classes or support the organizations which provide the services that you now enjoy?"

For shame, for shame little kiddies. Grow up, come down out of those dorms and make yourselves useful before you realize that all you've done since entering college was to get an "A" in Gossip 101. That's not what you came here to do. You could have done that at home and saved yourselves a lot of money in the process.

For all of you upperclassmen who are working overtime to provide a service, they'll learn. Remember that most of you were the same way. Some one had to pull your coattails also. Perhaps during events like the recent Funk-A-Thon, the music should be stopped long enough to extend a serious invitation for the new students to join the black organizations.

Freshmen, your next few years here won't be easy, they will be very difficult. Not every upperclassmen will be a true friend, but usually the people you meet working in an organization will try to be of some assistance to you.

There are constant reminders to stay on your toes. This should allow you to concentrate on what joining a group like Alpha Phi Alpha, Black Affairs, Nummo News, B.M.C.P., or other organizations in your community means to you.

The decisions you are making at UMass are based on some of the experiences that are becoming a part of your life here. You too can develop some pride that has not been seen by others. Instead of being one of the complainers, you can enjoy the benefits of knowing the program or project that has some of you in it.

For the administrators, staff, professors, and friends that I've had the privilege and pleasure of knowing, and especially to Sister Yvonne, let me take this opportunity to say a sincere Thank You.

A Friend Always,
Brother Bo Clemons

SWA unveils Southwest Week

By JOHN DiPALAZZO
Collegian Staff

The Southwest Assembly announced the list of events scheduled for Southwest Week, which will run from April 26 until May 3, at its meeting last night.

Southwest Week events will include theater presentations, sports events, crafts demonstrations, and appearances by live bands throughout the week.

The major event of the week will be an outdoor concert featuring four bands led by the Neighborhoods on May 2, which will be Southwest Community Day, it was announced.

Other bands appearing on that day will be J.B. Hutto and the New Hawks, the Mundanes, and Zion Inatation. The bands Paradox, Level 21, Blue Moon, and Portable Exit will also appear during the week.

In other business, the assembly referred to its finance committee a request for $500 to help fund the Fourth Annual Third World Picnic to be held in Southwest on May 16. Organizers for the event said funding from sources other than the assembly was being sought. Assembly members pointed out that a possible schedule conflict could exist if Spring Concert is rescheduled for May 16.

Melton Miller, Master Director of the Southwest Residential College, expressed his views on issues and problems facing Southwest. Miller said that one of the major problems facing Southwest, and all student groups in general, is students' "inability to interact" with each other.

Miller said many of Southwest's problems were intensified by the population density of the area, but added that Southwest, "offered the opportunity to test the premise that most education takes place outside the classroom."

Miller also told the assembly that the current coed bathroom controversy was brought about when a minority of students voice their opposition to what they felt was a forced decision affecting their lifestyles.

Faculty Senate Picks delegate to Trustees

By STEVE DALY
Collegian Staff

Sociology Professor Jay Demerath was elected faculty delegate to the Board of Trustees yesterday by the Faculty Senate.

Demerath, associate delegate to the Board of Trustees this year, will serve a two-year term. He replaces English professor Joseph Frank, whose term expires this semester.

Demerath defeated Exercise Science Professor Benjamin Ricci by better than a two to one margin, said Faculty Senate President David Booth.

Demerath said the Board of Regents have "problems" and the staffwork for the board is "noticeably deficient."

He expressed doubt as to whether the board was prepared for the political arena they find themselves in.

Student Government Association co-President Kevin Mangan read a letter to the faculty from the Undergraduate Student Senate requesting the cancellation of classes April 24, the purpose being to allow students to attend the next Board of Regents meeting concerning proposed tuition increases.

"We are fighting tooth and nail to keep students in school," Mangan said, "and we need your support."

Faculty Senate Secretary Paul Jennings announced that he had received a memo from Provost Loren Baritz concerning a faculty senate motion that proposed to change the C, D and E core requirements. The provost concurred with the proposal, making it impossible for students entering the University after this semester to fulfill core requirements with courses from their major, reported Jennings.

In other business, the senate returned to the Committee on Committees for further examination on its nominations for members of the Ad Hoc Committee on General Education. Senator Sylvia Forman of the anthropology department said she was "distressed by the makeup of this sensitive committee," which is designed to study and evaluate the undergraduate curriculum and develop proposals for curriculum modification.

Curtis, 20, of Melville residence hall in the Southwest Residential Area was cited with leaving the scene of a property damage accident, operating an unregistered and uninsured vehicle, driving without a valid driver's license and speeding, following a one car - property damage accident on Governor's Drive at 1:48 a.m. yesterday.

Three men arrested for road sign thefts

Two University of Massachusetts students and a Sunderland man were arrested yesterday and charged with larceny over $100 for having several stolen road signs in their possession, Amherst police said.

William Manning, 25, Mark Marilla, 21, both of Brandywine Apartments in Amherst, and Steven Jenkins, 21, of Sunderland, were observed walking around the intersection of Strong and Northeast Streets carrying a tool box. Amherst police were responding to a call of suspicious activity, police said.

When police approached the car, it had several signs inside including a Farmington Road sign from South Amherst, and a "Hand Woven Fabrics" sign from Moody Street in Hadley, police said.

In an unrelated incident, a Southeast Street resident reported a breaking and entering at 1:12 p.m. Wednesday, police said.

The burglar had entered through a garage window and proceeded through an unlocked door, police said.

The burglar was scared off when the resident returned home. He escaped thrugh a sliding glass door with a silver bracelet and a roll of 1950 pennies, police said.

Yesterday morning a man was beaten, robbed of $140.00 and had his car stolen while on Mill Lane in Amherst, police said.

He was released from Cooley Dickenson Hospital later that morning with several stitches, police said.

Prof discusses 'self & identity'

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

Edwin D. Driver, professor of sociology at the University of Massachusetts, spoke last night to an audience of about 50 people in the Campus Center on the concept of self and identity, and explained results of his Theory of Self test which he administered to university students in India, Iran, Trinidad-Tobago, and the United States.

"The nature of the self and its relation to society is a major theme of philosophy, religion, and literature," Driver stated, describing his lecture.

"In the great traditions of China, India, and Persia, this relationship is conceived in various forms: harmony, opposition, integration, independence. In recent history, sociology has emphasized the integration of self and society, viewing them simply as distributive and collective aspects of one phenomenon. Thus the attitudes which a person holds toward the self are but reflections of the attitudes prevalent in his or her society at that phase of its history."

Driver said the test, administered in the U.S. to his class at UMass, tested attitudes toward social roles and relationships, interests, achievements, and evaluations. Responses were compared by national grouping, mixture of positive and negative reaction, gender, and educational network.

By national grouping, Driver said response was not consistently coherent. He said attitudes reflecting ambition, aspiration, and ideology were "very much absent", with aspiration slightly higher in the U.S.

Students from India showed great concern with attitudes based on physical appearance, while those from the U.S. displayed interest in physical well being including prevalence in smoking "pot", Driver noted.

Driver also displayed statistics comparing responses of men and women, but found little dissimilarity.

"The nation makes a bigger difference in determining identity than gender," Driver said.

Driver also noted little variation between men and women in attitudes related to ambition, which he labelled "mostly academic oriented."

Driver said the U.S. results probably do not reflect regional attitudes, as he conducted the test obtaining similar results at Harvard University, the University of Arizona, and American International College in Springfield.

"Self & Society" was the title of Professor Edward Driver's lecture last night in the Campus Center Auditorium. The lecture is part of an ongoing series of the Chancellor Lecture Series.

UM student killed in NYC by driver high on angel dust

A University of Massachusetts student was killed in a New York City auto accident during spring vacation. His car was rammed by an auto driven by a man whom police said had taken angel dust.

Police said Benjamin J. Koistinen, 22, of Thatcher dormitory, died at the scene of the accident. Witnesses said his car flipped five times after being struck by another car speeding at more than 100 miles per hour.

Police arrested William Thompson, 22, of Corona, N.Y., and charged him with second-degree manslaughter, leaving the scene of an accident, and recklessly causing the death of another.

Two passengers told police that Thompson had taken angel dust, a hallucinogenic drug. They said during the high-speed ride one of them tried to pull Thompson's foot off the accelerator while the other hid under a blanket in the back.

Thompson's car also struck a taxi, injuring a passenger, and later went out of control and landed in a ditch where Thompson jumped out and shouted, "I'm God, I'm God," according to a report in the New York Daily News.

Dean of Students William F. Field said he hoped students would realize the dangers of angel dust, which he termed "the stupidest drug in the world," so that Koistinen would not have died in vain.

An estimated 150 women and children will participate in a mourning ceremony at the cemetary and march through the town to Polaski Park.

At the cemetary, women will mourn those who have died as a result of military destruction, physical violence on the streets, and the loss of jobs as a result of the increasing military budget.

The next planning meeting for the march will be Monday, April 20 at 7 p.m. in the American Friends Service Committee (A.F.S.C.) office in Northampton. Further information may be obtained by calling Pat Proxell at 584-4218 of A.F.S.C. at 584-8975.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Out of Control

Health care at Armageddon

They're out there.

The elements of war are all around. The world has too many people eating too little food. Big countries are talking about bigger and better weapons. Money is unstable, resources are threatening to run out. But — the grim picture is not complete yet. The Collegian has informed us earlier this week that the medical profession is not even prepared to handle a nuclear attack!

What sort of news is this to tell me over breakfast? You mean that if there was a nuclear war, doctors would not be able to help me? Come on! Tell me it isn't so! I mean, with all the advances in medical technology, there isn't one doctor who could patch me up after the bomb hits my town? Well, I do declare — perhaps it is time our government, indeed even our private industry, did something! Perhaps we should allocate funds and open hospital programs strictly for use in a nuclear attack. And we shouldn't stop there. We should build nuclear-proof hospitals, so by the time the war starts, the medical profession will indeed be prepared — for Duty and Humanity.

It's what hospitals are for, no?

Well — now we've gotten a head start in the right direction. Once the hospitals are ready for the attack, we can be more serious about discussing the attack itself. After all, what good would it do to get hospitals ready for nuclear war, and spend all that money, and get all the people so confident in medicine, if we never gave the hospitals a chance to show their stuff?

One good thing about nuclear war is that there won't be too many patients for our well-equipped medical facilities to be burdened with. The few casualties with skin still on their bodies will find plenty of bed space, and good care, too. And while being made comfortable in the bomb-proof hospital, the patients won't have to worry about any other bombs that might drop. They'll be safe. If they still have eyes, they can read magazines and newspapers that tell them of the latest innovations medicine has provided for readiness and protection from nuclear attack. They can look out the seventy-two foot thick leaded glass panels at the lovely flat grey scenery outside, as waves of red fire glow in the distance. They will know they are safe.

Another good thing about nuclear war is that it will decrease surplus population. The medical profession has lately been on the bandwagon to inform us of the dangers of overpopulation. It has even helped us keep the population down, but alas! not enough and not very fast. War is really the best and fastest way. When there are four billion lemmings going after seven jelly beans, some of the lemmings are going to get jealous of the others, thus war and self-destruction at random. (This experiment, I must warn you, is not conclusive, because it was virtually impossible to assemble a second collection of four-billion lemmings as a control group.)

Be that as it may, it is an accepted theory that all species from the amoeba to the human being have built-in population control mechanisms. Our most effective is war. And the most effective war of course is the nuclear war.

Since medicine is in business for health and survival first, and population control as a side interest, then I should think medicine would get in gear and start building some protection. Thank God for newspapers! It's about time the press got involved in the nuclear war question. We must keep informed. And when the war begins, the press can tell us exactly where the first hits are made, and what hospitals are right in there providing services, and how well the survivors are doing in the new facilities.

If I'm going to be the subject of some nuclear population control experiment, I want to know I'll have medicine on my side — like a vaccine, or a body lotion, or anything that will assure me that if I can afford the price, I'll be able to buy my way out of any negative side effects.

Letters

Symbol is necessary

As members of the Committee for Equal Rights and Reproductive Freedom, we feel that it is necessary to respond to Sheila Coleman and Kelly McDevitts's letter accusing us of a lack of sound arguments.

Nothing could be further from the truth. It is obvious that these individuals did not stop at the table to talk to us as did the hundreds of other students who were truly concerned with the issue of a woman's right to control her own body.

The literature on our table is an example of the depth to which we have struggled to present sound information on the subject of "choice;" fact sheets, news articles, pamphlets and petitions.

"Whether 'coat hanger abortions' are a reality or not..." (Coleman and McDevitt). This is exactly the point. This is reality. This is fact. It is true that at least 125 women a year will die in illegal abortions now that Medicaid funding, at the federal level, has been cut off for the poor which will significantly effect women of color. It is true that this number will increase dramatically if laws are passed to prohibit all abortions. However, we do not depict this with grotesque pictures of women lying in the gutter after a "back alley abortion". The Right to Life organizations have stooped to these tactics. We have not. The coat hanger is a symbol of the reality which will confront millions of women if the Human Life Amendment is passed.

We have found that too many people are simply unaware of the amendment or the impact it will have on their lives. After having set up our table for a week with little response, we felt that something more was needed to impress upon people the urgency of this situation.

At the present time 20 of 34 states needed to ratify the call for a Constitutional Convention, where the Human Life Amendment (HLA) will be introduced, have done so. A human life bill is now in Congress that, if passed, will not only prohibit abortion, but will also prohibit the use of the IUD and certain forms of the birth control pill.

The situation is alarmingly clear. If we do not act now, the gains that we all fought for in the sixties and seventies — the right to control our own bodies, the right to decent health care and childcare support, and the right to teach sex education in the public schools will be gone.

Our "attention grabber" (Coleman and McDevitt) worked. We had more response than ever before. Hundreds of people signed our petition to stop the HLA. We sold out our bus for the rally in Springfield at the Democratic Party's convention last Saturday. Reports from inside the convention hall confirmed that our presence outside the Civic Center prompted the defeat of anti-choice legislation in this year's state Democratic Party platform.

It is unfortunate that we sometimes have to catch people's attention before they will listen, but the urgency and the importance of this issue demands this kind of immediate action.

Big laws for little guns

According to a recent issue of Time magazine, one handgun is sold every 13 seconds in the United States. It is estimated that there are 55 million handguns in America today and that two million more will be added to that total by next year. Since 1963, over 400,000 Americans have been killed by pistols (that's more Americans than were killed in World War II). The United States has the highest rate of murder by handguns in the world.

Americans are becoming increasingly discouraged by the ease with which people can purchase handguns in the United States. A recent Gallup poll study shows that 62 percent of the people questioned favor gun control. If the majority of Americans favor handgun control, then why isn't something being done about it?

There are laws on handgun regulation — about 25,000 of them. These laws function at local, state, and federal levels, but they are so inconsistent that it is like not having any laws at all.

Probably the single most important reason why there is no consistent handgun law is the National Rifle Association. The NRA is one of the most powerful lobbying groups in Washington. The members of this group believe in the right to bear arms (guaranteed by the Second Amendment of the U.S. Constitution). The NRA targets legislators who favor gun control. They are especially effective in persuading legislators around election time.

America needs a tough federal law which bans handguns. This law should prevent new handguns from coming into circulation. Rifles and shotguns would not be included in this law (which should satisfy the NRA). Rifles and shotguns are better than handguns in defending one's home, and they also are seldom used by criminals. Obviously, there would still be millions of illegal handguns in circulation. Stiff and severe penalties should be handed out to those criminals who use guns in their crimes.

Americans should write to their legislators to persuade them to support gun control legislation. Hasn't America had enough?

Monette reveals poetic lives of celebrities

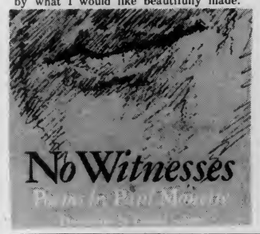
No Witnesses [Avon Books]
By Paul Monette

By LYNN M. RZESZUT
Collegian Correspondent

No Witnesses, the latest book of poetry by Paul Monette, is a witty, emotional anthology of previously published works, done in a narrative style reminiscent of John Ciardi's Lives of X. Winner of the Merrill-Ingram Award, Monette's poems are scenes of intimacy, taken from the lives of celebrities (in the finer sense of the word), to which there could be no witnesses.

Monette explores various themes through the eyes of his protagonists. Isadora Duncan discusses fame: "They want stray fruit the unspiced thing that rolls like a pearl under a bed and smells of me." Of art, Degas tells us: "There are so many lies in nature, a painter talking to painters starts to lie about the plum and yellow tree he forks for effect on a storm in purple paint. The fact is, nothing sticks to particular colors."

Monette's obviously skeptical views on the nature of art find further expression in lines such as, "We write in ink if we have something good to say, but if the family trade is pencils, then one works with one's resources," and "Beauty is not what I mean by what I would like beautifully made."



What was Monette feeling when he penned the lines, "What do you take for writer's block? Bring me a fifth of it."?

The material is cleverly clouded in humor counterpointed with almost macabre reality. In the poem "Bones and Jewels," Edna St. Vincent Millay leads us through the conflicts of a woman poet in a Victorian age, "I want to write the Iliad (at least)" she tells us; yet her dreams are being pressed toward matrimony. Rebellious, she says of the man who courts her, "He thinks I am doing a poem, as one does, um, one's knitting or one's horoscope." There is no communication. When she asks, "Would we be the Brownings, Bunny?", he answers, "You mean, will I take care of you?"

This cynical view of love continues as a recurring theme. On the eve of her wedding, Hansel writes Gretel, "At our door, where we will love the best enough to save them, being loved will stop having its root in what mothers empty us of because they are starving."

The little chuckle-style humor contained within these weighty 111 pages is confined to religion. Noel Coward impersonates a priest, and we are told of Thoreau: " 'Henry?... Tell me, have you made your peace with Him?' They were unmarried, the two of them. 'My darling Aunt Emma, I didn't know we'd quarreled, He and I.' "

I can't say the book is sobering, for that would be totally unfair to the talented use of realities which draw from the reader, this reader at least, those moments of wry recognition. I can't say the book is overly morose, although the writer has obvious doubts about the validity of certain institutions in society.

The book, beautifully illustrated by David Schorr, is a must for any library, and will lead to many readings and re-readings. And one last parting thought, "Thoreau, who was Thoreau, all the time, died too damn soon for us to have it from him straight how spring is maintained in us like a thing being written down because it didn't happen but, once written down, does." Happy springtime everybody!

Shakespeare comedy to open at Rand

By JONATHAN HAMILTON
Collegian Staff

One of William Shakespeare's most endearing and delightful comedies, Love's Labour's lost, will be performed by the University Ensemble Theater at the Rand Theater in the Fine Arts Center April 16-18 and 23-25. All shows begin at 8 p.m.

Love's Labour's Lost is the tale of the King of Navarre who, with three of his fellow noblemen, shuts himself away to forsake life's worldly pleasures and live in austerity. The four men vow to fast, sleep only three hours a night, and abstain from meeting or speaking to women. This agreement is just barely consummated as news arrives that the Princess of France has reached the King's castle. The men are immediately attracted by the beauty of the Princess and her ladies in waiting. As a result, of course, the men's vows are put in jeopardy.

The play is under the direction of Richard Trousdell who directed The Bride last fall. Tickets are now on sale at the Rand Theater box office between 1:00 and 4:00 p.m. Mon-Fri and one hour before the performance begins.

★ Contraceptives

High blood cholesterol levels, high blood pressure, and smoking are also risk factors in Pill use.

The biggest problem women have when choosing the Pill as a method of birth control is that the long term effects are not conclusively known.

The theoretical effectiveness of the Pill is 99.7 percent while its practical effectiveness is 96 percent. The closeness of the rates is due to the fact that there is not much room for human error in Pill use.

★ Faculty Senate

Provost Baritz agreed with Forman, saying there is "something defective in the process." Baritz said he desired a better balance of departments on the committee.

A policy for establishing "institutes, centers or similar organizations at UMass-Amherst" was adopted by the senate.

A motion proposing a minor in Portugese was also passed.

Civic leaders plead to energy department for conservation aid

Associated Press

BOSTON — The Reagan administration, getting ready to issue its own energy plan, heard civic leaders from the Northeast plead yesterday for federal aid for conservation programs.

A 12-hour public hearing on Reagan's developing program was held yesterday by the Boston office of the U.S. Department of Energy. Many of the 60 speakers said they were worried about the administration's hints that it will concentrate on developing synthetic fuels and drop financing for other energy efforts.

One such hint was contained in a "working staff paper" that DOE issued before the hearing. The paper states: "Federal public spending for energy purposes should be limited to those areas where the private sector is unlikely to invest sufficiently, such as in high cost, long lead time technologies with substantial prospects of high pay-off.

"Public spending should not be used to subsidize domestic energy production and conservation..."

Massachusetts State Rep. Walter Bickford, D-Berlin, asserted that conservation is five to 10 times more cost-efficient than investments in synfuels or nuclear power.

"The energy we use in this country is literally leaking out of millions of holes. It is here we can find the safest, cheapest, most readily available power," Bickford said.

Bickford said he is one of the few liberal Democrats in the Massachusetts House who favors oil and gas deregulation, but added that market forces are not working fast enough to promote energy-saving.

Instead of concentrating federal tax dollars in a few highcost synfuel programs, Bickford called for spreading aid around to numerous conservation projects — "where Joe the carpenter does some weatherization and spends the money in his own community."

Stephen Kulik of the Hampshire (Mass.) County Energy Resource Center, called the Reagan administration "out of touch with reality" concerning energy.

"The private sector cannot solve the energy problem alone. The private sector helped create the energy mess we're in today," Kulik said.

Kulik said his rural western Massachusetts county of 150,000 people had to send $200 million to other parts of the nation and the world to purchase energy last year.

"The impact of this economic drain is devastating," he said.

William G. Poist, spokesman for New England's natural gas companies, urged the federal government to streamline its regulatory process but not to speed up the gradual lifting of federal price controls on gas planned through 1985.

He said New England customers are already paying $5-$6 per thousand cubic feet for gas and cannot handle sharp increases.

Poist said New England gas companies want federal approval of plans to import Canadian gas.

Jett can not outgrow musical adolescence

Joan Jett
Bad Reputation* (Boardwalk)

Some performers' entire careers are haunted by the naivete and blind ambition of their past youth. No matter how hard they try, they can never shake the image they made for themselves or in most cases the one some asinine press agent created for them during their formative years. Joan Jett is a prime example of this, and her first solo album Bad Reputation is her vinyl acknowledgement of the fact.

In 1975, 15 year old Joan Jett formed the all-girl Glitter-pop band from L.A. known as the Runaways. Four years of relentless touring and five mediocre albums later, the Runaways disbanded. Lead singer Cherrie Currie went on to star in the 1980 movie "Foxes" in which she portrayed the same burned out, abused little blonde nymph she symbolized in her tenure as chief-teaser of the Runaways. Joan Jett, on the other hand, stayed true to her musical background and formed her new band, The Blackhearts.

Today, Jett is a 21-year-old artist backed up by 16-year-old Gary Ryan on bass, Eric Ambel on guitar and drummer Lee Crystal. Through them, and on Bad Reputation, Jett tries to live down the joke status of her former band. The three-chord blitzkrieg guitar on the title cut is Jett's most effective way of performing a coup de grace on whatever memories of the Runaways the record-buying public may still associate with her. However, that is where the serious rock ends and Jett's sugarcoated pop begins.

On two of the LP's songs, Jett is helped out by ex-Sex Pistols Steve Jones on guitar and Paul Cook on drums. Their first collaboration is Lesley Gore's feminist anthem "You Don't Own Me" and on this cut Jett comes through as a capable balladeer but really doesn't take the song anywhere. When Cook's frantic drumming and Jones' razor-edged guitar are combined with Jett's adolescent vocals on the Jett-penned "Don't Abuse Me," the result is some sort of a statutory rape of the Pistol's "God Save the Queen."

Probably the most offensive song on the album is a whiny little number called "Too Bad On Your Birthday." Not only does this song suffer from terminally cold guitar leads, but it also contains a morosely repetitive chorus of the title.

From here on in the LP seems to seep into some sort of half-hearted trip down Rock an' Roll's memory lane. Of the albums' twelve cuts, half are covers. Granted, Jett does do justice to Gary Glitter's "Do You Want To Touch Me (Oh Yeah)" and she performs adequately on his "Doing Alright With The Boys." But, if one wished to hear Gary Glitter songs then one would buy a Gary Glitter album, not a Joan Jett LP.

Jett's renditions of such classics as the Isley Brothers' "Shout" and "Wooly Bully" sound plastic and meandering; reminiscent of the kind of hollow, mocking, "Oldies" interpretations Suzi Quatro has become noted for on her Happy Days television show appearances. If Quatro ever tires of her role as Fonzi's leather clad female counterpart then Joan Jett would make an apt replacement.

The one thing that stands out on this album is Jett's own indecision. She doesn't know what direction to lead her music. She claims to have been weaned on the likes of early seventies heavy-metal glitter rockers like T. Rex and Slade but at least half the album is laden with bubblegum pop songs more befitting a top-forty AM radio flash-in-the-pan rather than an 80's rouge-rock queen.

Jett boasts that she is the girl who was raised on Rock 'n' Roll instead of Wonderbread but doesn't prove it by this album. There is nothing "bad" about Bad Reputation.

Wildcats take first game, Mass retaliates

By MIKE ESTRADA
Collegian Staff

DURHAM, N.H.—Despite being shellshocked from the opener, the Minutemen were able to turn the tables at Brackett Field here yesterday, where the University of Massachusetts split a doubleheader with the University of New Hampshire, 12-3 and 7-4.

UMass (11-10) weathered a UNH cannonade in the first game; a contest during which the Wildcats (15-2) proved the merit of their being ranked number one in New England College Baseball by ripping 15 hits, including five home runs.

But with a five-run seventh inning in the nightcap the Minutemen denied the infallibility of the Wildcats by handing the hosts their second loss of the season, breaking a 12-game winning streak had by the boys from the southeast corner of New Hampshire.

UMass, 2-1 away from home this week, continues its road show tomorrow with a doubleheader against Rutgers University in New Brunswick.

UMass was held to just seven singles in the opener by Wildcat righthanded pitcher Andy Adams (6-0). With the help of a thrown out base stealer and a double play, Adams faced just 12 batters through the first four innings; the bare minimum.

In accordance with the slugging that has made his team number one this week, coach Ted Conner got three hits each from Paul LeCompte and Son Tom Conner. Sophomore Andy Brickley, the designated hitter, hit two tremendous home run blasts, one inside the park, to give the Melrose native two of his three extra base hits on the day.

But the song did not remain the same in the nightcap. Minutemen lefty hurler Tony Presnal (3-1) was touched for two runs in the first inning but retired 13 consecutive men through the middle stanzas, buying time for the rest of the Minutemen to tune up the aluminum.

Their five-run seventh, highlighted by two, two-run scoring hits by Mark Litano and Jim Aulenback, broke a 2-2 tie, chased Wildcat lefty Tom O'Shea from the mound, and spared UMass from an embarassing (and costly) two-game sweep.

Warren McReddie's towering home run in the fifth, his sixth roundtripper of the season, tied the game at two.

GAME ONE: UMass starting righthander Vin Todd looked strong and said he felt strong, but everything he tossed up to the plate was ripped, even the outs.

Three singles and sacrifice fly plated two runs in the first inning for UNH. The first batter to face Todd in the second, Brickley, hit a drive over the head of centerfielder Litano, good for an inside-the-park home run.

Two outs later Wildcat leftfielder LeCompte three for four knocked one over the 355 ft. mark in left to make the score 4-0. A single and a walk later and a frustrated Todd was pulled by UMass coach Dick Bergquist.

Righty reliever Steve Drelick couldn't fare any better against the barrage. UNH scored once in third, twice in the fourth (on a home run by Mike Salinaro) and five times in the sixth on the strength of five hits and back to back homers by Jeff Stohrer and Brickley.

The Minutemen, after scoring once in the fifth, halted their best rally in the sixth. With none out, two runs in and men at first and second, Aulenback grounded into a double play. McReddie flied out to right to end the inning.

GAME TWO: The UMass bats stayed mostly quiet through the second game as O'Shea put down men in order through four innings. In the fifth, Aulenback reached first on an error and McReddie hit UMass' first extra base hit of the day, a 380-foot plus homer over the right field fence that tied the game at two.

Presnal became more and more unhittable as the game progressed. Not one Wildcat reached base in the fourth, fifth or sixth innings. The Minutemen plated five runs on five hits in the seventh. It proved to be just what they needed as the hosts scored twice again in the seventh to close the score to 7-4.

Brian Roach (below) flies high over Haigus Mall while another member of the University of Massachusetts Sport Parachute Club watches his descent. The club gave its first spring demonstration to UMass and has another demo scheduled for Wednesday between Whitmore and the School of Business Administration (SBA). Roach is a jump master who did his last demonstration yesterday.

Third set fatal, UM loses

By ANTONY KUNDERT
Collegian Staff

In an incredibly close meet that went down to the last set of the final match, the University of Connecticut defeated the Massachusetts women's tennis squad yesterday afternoon, 5-4.

In that match on the Boyden Courts Carolyn Tarbell and Kathy Burke, playing number one doubles for UMass, lost the first set 7-5. The second set was even closer and they won it in a tie breaker 7-6. The final set of this match would decide the contest. All watched as UConn was able to play more aggressive tennis and won the set, 6-4, the match and the meet.

"We were really aggressive in the first sets," Tarbell said. "Then we just got too relaxed and tensed up in the last set."

It was exactly what we expected it to be - a really close meet," coach John Beal said. "Nobody really played poorly, but in the three-set matches people couldn't keep their concentration and be aggressive."

The first to finish her match was Paula Natale playing number three singles, who was able to breeze by UConn's Bonnie Dorkin in straight sets 6-1, 6-2. Playing at the number two spot for UMass was captain Joanne Vennochi, who had a close first set but ran away with the second to beat Tracy Behrman, 7-5, 6-1. The only other win for UMass among the six singles matches was Helen Najarian playing number five, who took two straight sets to win over Diane Davins 6-4, 7-6.

Twin sisters Elizabeth and Patricia Sullivan, playing at the number one and six spots respectively, lost their matches in three setters.

In doubles play, UMass' only win came from Lynn O'Sullivan and Didi Courtright playing number three. They beat their opponents in a comeback effort after losing the first set 2-6, and then winning the remaining two 6-4, 6-2.

"I fell apart and she (O'Sullivan) got me back in the game," Courtright said. "Her momentum finally flowed to me."

Women drivers second in tourney

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's golf team placed second behind Amherst College in yesterday's Massachusetts State Tournament held at the Stowe Country Club in Stowe, Mass.

Marlene Susienka was the top UMass player and finished fourth. Susienka held second until she triple bogeyed on the eighteenth hole. She finished with a score of 90.

The only other UMass player to finish in the top ten was Robin Hayes who shot a 102. Hayes was tenth.

"We finished just about where I thought we'd finish," UMass coach Jack Leaman said.

"I was a little disappointed in our overall play though," Leaman said, "I thought it would be a lot closer."

UMass as a team shot a 407, thirty strokes behind Amherst College and eight strokes ahead of third place finisher Springfield College.

Leaman said he was pleased with the play of Jane Egan, a sophomore, who placed fifteenth with a score of 107.

"We've just got some work to do to get ourselves ready. I think we're going to be a good team before the year's out and I'm anxious to play at home." Leaman said.

The team will have its first chance to play at home on Monday, at the Hickory Ridge Country Club when UMass will host Amherst, Mount Holyoke, and Springfield.

Spikers end season with win

The University of Massachusetts men's volleyball club capped a two-month long season Wednesday night defeating Yale University in three straight games at New Haven. UMass won the first two squeaking by Yale 15-13 and 16-14, then had no trouble taking the third 15-9.

"Dave Marteney came in as a sub and he played back row well and his hitting was good," head coach Al Morel said.

Morel and four of his players will see post-season competition at the New England All Star game on April 26. Co-captains Pat Ryan (first team all NE) and Mark Ferrante (second team all NE) as well as Barry Malloy and Peter Berwold were named all stars. Morel was named to coach one of the all-star squads.

UMass concludes the season in third place in New England with a 17-6 record, just barely missing qualifying for the Eastern tournament, according to Morel. The Spikers finished behind Springfield College and Harvard who are both going to the tourney.

"This is the best team we've ever had at UMass," Morel said. "We had a couple of bad matches like Brown and URI (Rhode Island) but these guys have alot of team character."

Morel will be losing five seniors to graduation but suspect next year's team to be equally strong. "We only had three returning starters this year," he said.

Student arrested for Southwest stabbing

By M.W. MULCAHY
and DEBBIE SPARKS
Collegian STaff

A University of Massachusetts student was arrested Friday morning after allegedly stabbing two UMass students outside George Washington Tower in Southwest Residential Area, Jeanne Stover of the UMass news bureau said.

Richard D. Wilson III, 20, of Washington Tower, was arrested on charges of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon, Stover said. Wilson was held in the Northampton House of Corrections until Friday afternoon when he was released in lieu of $1,000 bail, said Associate Director of Public Safety Phillip J. Cavanaugh.

G. Denrick Reichard, 19, of Coolidge dormitory, was allegedly stabbed twice in the abdomen and was reportedly in satisfactory condition last night in Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton, a supervisor at the hospital said.

Mike Chenekle, 22, of Beta Kappa Phi, was stabbed in the back of the head, and received eight stitches Friday morning at UMass infirmary. He was released a few hours later, Stover said.

At about 3:18 a.m. Friday, UMass Police Officers William Murphy and Kevin Donovan responded to the scene after receiving a call, Cavanaugh said. An apparent fight had broken out in front of Washington Tower involving Wilson, Reichard, Chenelle, and at least one other student, Cavanaugh said.

The fight had apparently moved inside Washington, as fresh blood was found on the sink and floor of one of the kitchenettes, Cavanaugh said.

Presently, no motive is known, Stover said.

Reichard, after being stabbed, went back to his residence, Coolidge Dormitory, where he banged on doors on his floor yelling, "Help me, I've been stabbed," said floor resident Al Bradley.

Murphy and Donovan are still investigating the incident, police said.

In an unrelated incident Thursday, a male exposed himself in a Herter hall elevator to a woman entering from the third floor, police said.

Upon leaving the building and approaching her car, she noticed the man was following her, police said. After safely reaching her car, she drove away and called the police, police said.

There have been a number of reported obscene phone calls in the last two months, police said.

There has also been a surge of stolen license plates on campus, police said.

In the last ten days there has been six reported acts of vandalism on campus, police said.

Ex-Iranian hostage to speak tomorrow

By MICHAEL SULLIVAN
Collegian Correspondent

Former Iranian hostage Victor Tomseth, senior political officer at the U.S. embassy in Tehran, will speak on the topic "444 Days in Captivity-Why was America Held Hostage?" at 8 p.m. tomorrow in the Student Union Ballroom.

Tomseth and Embassy Charge d'Affairs L. Bruce Laingen were not at the embassy at the time of the takeover, having spent the morning at the Iranian Foreign Ministry discussing the diplomatic status of some of the embassy's military personnel.

After spending three days at the Iranian Foreign Ministry, Tomseth, Laingen and security officer Michael Howland were removed to a former diplomatic dining room, where they were to stay until being moved to prison three weeks prior to the release of the hostages.

They had virtually no contact with the hostages in the embassy compound during their isolation.

Tomseth joined the Foreign Service in 1966 after serving as a Peace Corps volunteer in Nepal during 1965-66. Tomseth has served the Foreign Service in a variety of capacities since then, including posts in Thailand, Iran, and Washington, D.C.

Born in Eugene, Oregon, in 1941, he received a bachelor's degree in history from the University of Oregon, and a masters degree in South Asian studies from the University of Michigan. He speaks Nepalese, Thai, and Farsi, (an Iranian dialect), and met his wife Wallapa in Bangkok, Thailand, where she was born and grew up. They have two children, Christopher and Aranya.

The event is sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program, and admission is free to Five College students on a space available basis. Sign language interpretation will be provided.

Birth control: Further options for contraception

By MONICA CRONIN
Collegian Correspondent

Editors Note: This is the final part of a three-part series on recent developments in contraceptive devices.

The most permanent form of birth control, sterilization, is not widely performed in the UMass community. Sterilization is more often a method of birth control for older people who have already had families.

Two new techniques for female sterilization, larascopy and minilaparotomy, are becoming widely used. Both are out-patient surgeries and involve little scarring. While sterilization is virtually irreversible in women, it is reversible in 40 to 90 percent of the approximately half-million men per year who have vasectomies. However, men should not approach a vasectomy as a reversible form of birth control. "There is not a doctor in the country who would do it if the man approached it with the attitude of wanting it reversed," said Diane Wolfe, director of Community health education at University Health Services.

Birth control is available at the University Health Services for any UMass student. It is reccomended that students attend an educational session before making an appointment with a physician or nurse practitioner. The sessions are intended to familarize the student with all methods of birth control and to give them time to consider before making a decision.

The Wednesday evening session is for couples who want to make their birth control choice a mutual decision. Wolfe said that this type of a session would not have been supported 10 years ago. That the sessions are held now is probably due to the rising consciousness of men.

"It's my impression that some men (who attend the couples session and other sessions) want to understand that the women are going through. They are sensitive kind of men," said Diane Taylor, patient education coordinator for Health Services.

Nevertheless there are those men who still feel that birth control is strictly the woman's responsibility, the Health Services staffers said. In a college setting, lifestyles fluctuate so widely that "it is almost necessary for the woman to be responsible," they both said.

Although the college setting is usually associated with a casual sexual atmosphere, there is a very low frequency of sexually transmitted diseases (STD) at UMass. Less than 2 percent of the cultures analyzed in one year had positive tests for STD. The Health Services provides general information about venereal diseases and will provide additional information if called.

There is much research being done in the areas of birth control. Among the new birth control devices under experimentation are: implanted progesterone caps, hormone shots which have the same effect as a birth control pill but which are only given every three months; non-hormonal implants and a tailless I.U.D. which is being researched because some information indicates that the increase in PID amond I.U.D. users may be due to the fact that the tail of an I.U.D. acts as a "pathway" for germs.

Both Taylor and Wolfe agreed that it is important for a woman to make a safe logical choice in birth control. The important factor to consider is not whether the method is chemical but whether it is effective.

"It is more sensible to choose something that will work and that they will comfortable with than something that will result in an abortion or unwanted pregnancy," said Wolfe. Both women stressed that abortion is not a form of birth control.

"One thing I think a lot of women need to think about is that they will probably use a number of different methods in their life and they shouldn't think that this is a decision on one birth control method they must stick to for life," Wolfe said.

Recent Atlanta killing ruled asphyxiation

By NANCY KENNEY
Associated Press

ATLANTA — A black teen-ager who was slain, stripped and dumped into a suburban river probably died of asphyxiation — like 12 of the 23 other young blacks killed here since July 1979, a medical examiner ruled yesterday.

The decomposed body of 15-year-old Joseph Bell was found Sunday floating face-down in an isolated bend of the South River in DeKalb County. He had been missing since March 2, when he stopped to look for work at a restaurant where he occasionally did odd jobs.

The manager of the restaurant, Richard Harp, told police he received a telephone call on March 3 from someone claiming to be Bell wlo said, "I'm almost dead." Police spokeswoman Beverly Harvard said police were investigating the incident.

DeKalb County Medical Examiner Joseph Burton announced after an autopsy yesterday that Bell did not appear to have been strangled, but that smothering was a "possible" cause of death. Burton said Bell could have been in the river since the day he disappeared.

In addition to the asphyxiations, one of the victims was shot, one bludgeoned, one stabbed and one killed by a blow to the head. The bodies of seven victims were so badly decomposed that the cause of death could not be determined.

Ronny Tillman, who discovered Bell's body while riding a motorbike along the river, said the body was clad in "just shorts." Five of the victims found this year were clothed only in shorts or undershorts.

Several authorities, including State Crime Lab Director Larry Howard, have speculated that the recent victims may have been stripped and dumped in rivers to prevent investigators from finding clues such as fibers, reported on some of the bodies.

Burton said there was no evidence of external injuries other than marks resulting from contact with debris in the river. Nor were there any apparent signs of sexual abuse or mutilation, although the body was too decomposed for a complete examination, he said.

Irish prisoner nears death

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — Three legislators from the Irish Republic visited weakening hunger striker Bobby Sands yesterday over protests from angry Protestants, then demanded an urgent meeting with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher "before it is too late."

In Londonderry, Northern Ireland's second-largest city, young Roman Catholics bombarded troops and police with stones and bottles yesterday in a sixth day of violence that has escalated as Sands' condition declined. Police said five cars were hijacked and a bus set on fire in different parts of the city.

Catholic leaders in Londonderry appealed for calm last night as sporadic outbursts of stone and gasoline-bomb throwing continued, and police braced for more trouble.

In Belfast, police reported stone-throwing youths earlier in the day were on the streets in three Catholic districts and several vehicles were burned. Police said three homemade bombs and a revolver were seized in the Protestant Shankill district. No injuries were reported in the Londonderry and Belfast clashes.

John O'Connell, a physician who said he tried to persuade Sands to end his 51-day hunger strike, said the 27-year-old Irish Republican Army guerrilla appeared to be within five or six days of death.

"I got the impression Mr. Sands was determined to die," said O'Connell, one of the three visiting legislators. The others were Neil Blaney and Sile de Valera, granddaughter of Eamon de Valera late president of the Irish Republic.

They commented at a news conference in Dublin after their return to the predominately Catholic Irish Republic from the 80-minute meeting with Sands in Belfast's Maze Prison.

"All three of us want very early talks with Mrs. Thatcher — before it is too late," Blaney said.

Hundreds of people attended a funeral procession in Sidon, Lebanon, where the city buried the victims of Sunday's shelling of the coastal city by Israeli-backed Christian militias. Sixteen people were killed and 40 wounded in the attack. Two artillery shells slammed into a crowded cafe and adjacent restaurant causing most of the casualties.

City council considers plan for schools to remain open

BOSTON — The Boston City Council, facing a court deadline to bail out city schools, considered a $55 million borrowing plan yesterday that would keep classes open after spring vacation.

The $55 million would be used to pay city homeowners who are due property tax refunds. But proponents of the plan said it also would free enough money in the city budget to keep the schools open until June.

When students were dismissed for a spring break last Thursday, officials said schools would not reopen as scheduled on April 27 unless $30 million is added to the now-depleted $210 million school budget for 1980-81.

Suffolk Superior Court Judge Thomas Morse has given the city until tomorrow to find a way to keep the schools open.

The proposed plan, drafted by the council's Committee on Government Finance, would provide $20 million less in bond money than Mayor Kevin H. White had requested. Other provisions of the compromise would:

—require the city to rehire 400 firefighters and police who were laid off because of taxcutting Proposition 2½. It was not clear where funding would come from to pay their salaries.

—freeze assessments on city property at the current levels until the entire city is reassessed.

—repay the bonds by imposing new taxes on hotel rooms, parking lots and condominium conversions.

—create a new position of city comptroller but would allow the retention of the city auditor, a position that the council had earlier tried to abolish.

Four American sailors held, later released by Cubans

HAVANA, Cuba — A Cuban patrol vessel seized four U.S. sailors when their recreation boats strayed into Cuban waters near the U.S. Naval Base at Guantanamo on Cuba's southern coast, but American diplomats gained their release yesterday afternoon, officials reported.

State Department spokesman David Nall announced in Washington that the sailors were released at 3 p.m. in Havana and turned over to Wayne Smith, head of the U.S. Interests Section. Nall said they would be flown to the United States today.

One official in the Interests Section said earlier the section was "making appropriate efforts to contact authorities in Havana" about the release of the sailors, who were seized Sunday afternoon.

The official, who asked not to be identified, said the four had been held at Boqueron, at the eastern end of the communist island nation. The sailors had been fishing in two small boats borrowed from the base and their craft apparently strayed from the U.S. jurisdictional waters at Guantanamo.

In Washington, the Navy said the four were all enlisted men and identified them as Boiler Technician 2nd Class Hal Carlson of Chicago; Boiler Technician Fireman Apprentice Timothy L. Van Engelenhmven of Sioux Center, Iowa; Machinist Mate Fireman Michael G. Kurchock of Pottsville, Pa., and Fireman Apprentice Ottie L. Craycraft of Miamisburg, Ohio.

Students protest budget cuts

By DEBBIE SPARKS
Collegian Staff

It has been estimated by the Massachusetts Higher Education Assistance Corporation that 500,000 students nationally will drop out of school or not enter college if proposed cuts in federal assistance for student aid are enacted.

This week, in opposition to the budget-cutting measures, twelve schools statewide are organizing massive letter-writing campaigns and teach-ins in an effort to prevent the cuts.

Kevin Bowe, a spokesperson for MassPIRG said that they hope to get 1,000 letters from students at UMass-Amherst alone.

"These cuts are across the board cuts, and effect anyone who gets any type of assistance," he said.

The cuts, if approved, would include the provision that students whose parents' income is in the $19,000 to $25,000 range would no longer be eligible, for loans. The "financial need" of every student would be reduced by assuming he or she can contribute $750 per year. The federal payment of the 9 percent loan interest would be discontinued while the student is in school, resulting in increased costs of up to $225 for each year of borrowing.

Sallie Mae, the federal agency which issues funds for student loans, would be prevented from borrowing federal funds. This change would reduce the amount of funds available for student loans, and increase their costs.

Social Security student benefits would be cut by eliminating the provision which continues benefits to dependants ages 18 to 22 who are full-time students.

MassPIRG is asking that the student letters be sent to the following congressman Silvio Conte, R-Mass, the ranking minority member of the appropriations committee; Rep. Edward Boland, D-Mass, ranking majority member of the appropriations committee; Rep. Brian Donnelly, D-Mass, of the Budget committee; and Rep. Thomas P. (Tip) O'Neil, D-Mass., Speaker of the House.

A booth will be set up in the Campus Center concourse for the next three days to answer any questions and provide general information, Bowe said.

UMass-Boston, Fitchburg State, Salem State, Framingham State, Southeastern Mass. University, Boston College, Clark University, Hampshire College, Amherst College, Mt. Holyoke and UMass-Amherst, are all participating in the protest effort.

SGA sending letters to protest budget cuts

By KEVIN McGUIRE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Student Government Association is sending letters to all freshmen, sophomores and their parents this week urging them to protest proposed cutbacks in the UMass budget as well as federal financial aid.

More than 8,000 students and parents in 160 legislative districts will receive the SGA letter, calling the problems facing UMass and the other state colleges, "the toughest crisis in the history of higher education."

The letter urges both students and parents to contact their state representatives to show concern over the UMass budget reductions, and to write their congressmen to protest the Reagan administration's financial aid cutbacks.

"If the budget cuts are held up, you will see 100 to 200 faculty, administration, and professional positions eliminated," said mailing director Kenneth Moore, who co-signed the letter with SGA co-President Larry Kocot.

Moore said larger classes, fewer course sections, and faculty cutbacks will result from the budget reductions.

Governor Edward J. King's budget proposals for fiscal year 1982 provides no inflationary increase for the University, and reduces the Amherst campus' funding by $600,000 from this year's budget.

An estimated $2.54 million will be necessary to maintain the Amherst campus with no major changes or improvements, according to the Office of Planning and Budget.

Moore said the Office of Planning and Budget has estimated that 80.5 percent of UMass students received some sort of financial aid in the past year.

He added that 97 percent of University students receive financial aid from federal and private sources, with the remaining three percent coming from the state.

Moore said that only freshmen and sophomores are being contacted by mail because of the SGA's limited financial resources.

"We had to concentrate on who we'd get the highest percentage of responses from, and they (the freshmen and sophomores) have the most to lose," Moore said.

There will be a letter-stuffing party tonight at 6 in Memorial Hall to kick off the mailing campaign.

Board of Regents

The following list of members of the state Board if Regents is provided by the Collegian to allow students and their parents to contact Regents to express concern about proposed tuition increases.

At its April 14 meeting, the Board postponed a vote on a $200 tuition increase for in-state students, a $300 increase for non-resident undergraduates, a $175 increase for in-state graduates, and a $375 hike for out-of-state graduates. Another vote on tuition hikes is expected at the Regent's meeting Friday in Boston.

Students appeal for nuclear arms freeze

A newly-formed Hampshire College student organization will begin a campaign calling for a joint United States-Soviet Union nuclear weapons freeze on their campus next Tuesday, April 27.

"About 20 students have formed the Hampshire Campaign for a Nuclear Arms Freeze, and have planned a campus-wide referendum demanding the freeze, for Tuesday," said Matt Goodman, a student director of the campaign.

"We want Hampshire students to take a personal stand on the government's nuclear arms policy," said Goodman.

Similar votes will be taken today at Amherst College, and tomorrow at the University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Student Senate.

An open discussion on the issue will take place at Hampshire's Johnson Library Center at 1 p.m., and a hand count of supporters will be taken prior to the referendum voting.

Goodman said secret balloting for faculty, staff, administrators and students is scheduled from 1:30 to 4 p.m.

"Hampshire will be the first college to hold such a vote," said Goodman. "We oppose the support of a nuclear arms race by the two governments."

Goodman said the Hampshire group will publicize its campaign, and will also travel to other college campuses and organize referenda.

"We expect our campaign to grow, and only be a part of a national movement," Goodman said.

The Hampshire rally will also be supported by the environmental studies and the Public Policy Center at Hampshire, said Goodman.

Max Roach shines in FAC concert

Max Roach Quartet and New Black Eagle Jazz Band
F.A.C. Concert Hall, April 16, 1981

By F.C. WYSE
Collegian Correspondent

Max Roach, one of the greatest influences on America's Be Bop era performed with his quartet Thursday night for an audience of Black music enthusiasts. The UMass faculty member and his group performed a cycle of new comositions from his new album on the Columbia record label.

This concert, part of the tenth annual Black Musicians Conference, was a benefit performance for the Fletcher Henderson Memorial Scholarship Fund. Conceived by Max Roach, this program hopes to gather talented young musicians who would otherwise be unable to attend the University.

The New Black Eagles, a seven piece Boston-based group, opened the show with selections of 20th Century New Orleans music, revitalizing such classic compositions as Jelly Roll Morton's "Kansas City Stomp," Duke Ellington's 1927 hit, "The Mooch," and Louis Armstrong's lesser known "Skeleton In The Closet."

On clarinet and soprano saxophone, Stan McDonald soared through the register, and then some, in the style of the great Sydney Bechet, taking daring solos which were as melodic and beautiful as they were technical. On cornet, band leader Tony Pringle explored every variation in tone from soft mute to raunch and cry baby with everything in between.

Stan Vincent played a fine trombone, taking many interesting, upbeat solos and Eli Newberger's tuba solos were as brilliant, and often as humorous, as his stage antics.

Pianist Bob Pilsner, looking like Brahms (before he'd thought twice about Clara Schumann), took solos that were not nearly as daring as his exaggerated technique made them appear. Nor were they audible; for though the piano was a concert grand, it simply didn't project throughout the vast FAC Concert Hall.

They closed their short set with "Sweetie Dear," an up-tempo composition (and it was!) written by Sidney Bechet when his band was in residence at the Savoy.

After a brief intermission, Dr. Frederick Tillis took the stage to award Max Roach a plague from the University community expressing their gratitude for his work in the field of Black Studies.

On stage alone, Roach announced that his first solo piece of the evening, "South Africa God Damn," would be dedicated to the slain children in Atlanta, Georgia. The piece, recorded originally by Archie Shepp in Paris, France, was a haunting dirge which played violently against a foreboding, droning bass drum and high hat.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Nothing new in Ireland

Bobby Sands should be dead very soon. It's been 52 days since Sands started his hunger strike in Maze prison, located on the outskirts of Belfast in Northern Ireland. A priest gave Bobby Sands his last rites Friday night, and it is now just a matter of time before Bobby Sands is dead.

It is typically ironic, and Irish, that Bobby Sands should approach death at this time. Yesterday marked the 65th anniversary of the Easter Rebellion in Dublin, when Irish patriots took up arms against the British. Since then, the arms have never been put down. Bobby Sands took up arms, and got a 14-year prison term for doing so.

Kevin Cullen

"WAR MAY BE HELL . . . BUT PEACETIMES GREAT"

Hunger strikes are nothing new in Irish history. Fifty years ago there occurred an event curiously similar to the one going on in Belfast right now.

The year was 1920. The British were having little success in dealing with the guerilla tactics of the Irish Republican Army, which was trying to secure home rule for Ireland. With typical ruthlessness, Lloyd George decided it was time to play hard ball. Groups of British auxillaries, called Black and Tans for their uniforms, roamed the countryside, terrorizing Irish men, women and children.

The British Labour Party sent a commission to Ireland which found, through eyewitness accounts, that atrocities were being committed in the name of the Crown.

While response to this report and media coverage of the atrocities showed the British in a bad light, it was not until the death of Terence MacSwiney, Lord Mayor of Cork that public opinion turned against the British. MacSwiney was arrested on a charge of possessing allegedly compromising documents, and placed in London's Brixton Jail, where he began a hunger strike, protesting not only his treatment, but British treatment of the Irish in general. For 74 days, MacSwiney took only water and his daily eucharistic wafer.

After MacSwiney's death, public opinion turned against Britain. A congressional commission on conditions in Ireland heard evidence in Washington and published a report that, while condeming IRA violence, condemned even more severely the actions of the British government. In the United States, it was not just Irish-Americans who were raising hell, it was everyone.

But, that's changed.

The IRA of Bobby Sands' time has also changed. When MacSwiney died, the IRA fought to end British rule in Ireland. Since the Treaty of London in 1921 left six counties in the North under British control, a divided Ireland has existed.

Today's IRA rejects not only the London regime but the Dublin regime of the Republic of Ireland. As far as the socialist leadership of the IRA today is concerned, the Treaty of London merely replaced British capitalists with Irish capitalists. The end of paritition in Northern Ireland would not end the troubles in Ulster. Until a socialist republic is set up, the provisional IRA will not rest.

And, so, poor kids in the ghettos of Belfast and Derry will grow up angry and kill people, all in the name of Ireland. Kids like Bobby Sands.

Sands ran for the Fermanagh-South Tyrone seat from his hospital bed. He won a seat in Westminster, but is not allowed to take the seat in Parliament.

Instead, Bobby Sands lies in a hospital cot, emaciated, waiting for death.

When MacSwiney's body was returned to Cork for burial in October of 1920, there was an outpouring of national mourning. When and if Bobby Sands dies, it is likely he will be remembered by a renewed outbreak of violence in Ulster.

Nothing much has changed in Ulster for 800 years. While the politicians argue, people die in Northern Ireland.

Mid-semester painting disrupts dormitory living

With little more than a month of school ahead of us, we have become accustomed to our environments and are comfortably settled into our dormitory rooms. It is a hectic time for most everyone with exams, finals and making arrangements for summer jobs.

Our lives are once again being disrupted—only this time not by the water shortage, financial aid cuts or tuition increases, but by the painting of our rooms in a number of the Southwest Area Residence Halls.

We were given a five day notice to remove everything from our walls, from our closets, bookcases and to move all belongings into the center of the rooms in order to accommodate the painters. This totally disturbs our living quarters, and at this time of year a physical upheaval of students' personal living space is more an outrage than just an inconvenience.

In addition, painters and numerous maintenance people will have free access to our rooms. Who is held responsible if our valuables are stolen?

This action violates our privacy and security. If refusing to allow painters into our rooms will result in a fine, we have lost our rights as students living in the residential system.

Perhaps the Office of Residential Life could start painting the dorms after this semester ends or devise a better system for painting the dorms. Students' rights and their lives must be taken into consideration (for once) before the administration once again goes ahead without any student input.

The drinking age used to be 18; financial aid used to be...

On April 10 and 11 about 100 students representing 24 colleges and universities gathered on our campus to make plans to achieve adequate federal financial aid for students in higher education. It was an excellent meeting, a good mix of serious study, practical politics, and enthusiasm.

The conference was organized by a UMass student organization called SAFA, or Students Advocating Financial Aid. It is the same group which last November conducted a well-organized lobbying effort at the nation's Capitol. These students should receive "high marks" for their work, congratulations and thanks.

Last Thursday's Collegian carried a letter from John P. Mallam, Vice President for Governmental Relations for the American Association of State Colleges and Universities. He commented on the 3,000 signature petition concerning UMass toilets, and asked how many signed a petition concerning the cutting off of student grants and loans. I have written to Mr. Mallam telling him that last November more than 5,000 students signed such a petition that it was delivered to Capitol Hill, and that UMass is proud that it is a leader in the effort to achieve adequate federal funding for student aid.

Anyone wishing to help the SAFA effort should send their name and address to the SAFA office in the Student Union.

Gerry Grady
Coordinator of Community Relations

Last year everyone who received financial aid at this University also received, over this past year, numerous "award" letters that drastically cut their grants. This year, before the "award" letters even start biting away, no one will receive a grant equaling 100 percent of their total need. Next year, with President Reagan's education cuts, proper student financial aid, in effect, will be non-existent.

President Reagan's cuts affect all student financial aid programs, with varying degrees of severity. The plain fact is that these cuts, covering BEOG's, student and parent loans and work-study jobs, among other things, will be reality if there is no intensive response by those affected. As a student organization, Mass PIRG wants to provide that response, but only with your help.

Mass PIRG has organized a state-wide financial aid letter-writing and teach-in campaign today, Wednesday and Thursday. Fact sheets for information concerning the specifics of the cuts and sample letters will be provided. We hope to obtain 10,000 letters from twelve schools across the state as part of a national effort to stop the cuts, and hope one of the letters will be yours. Remember, if you don't save your financial aid, no one will. And, if you don't believe the financial aid cuts will become law, remember, the drinking age used to be eighteen!

A talk with Archie Shepp

Editor's Note:

A faculty member of the Afro-American studies department, Archie Shepp enjoys a world-wide reputation as a saxophone player. Shepp has been instrumental in the development of the Black Musician's conference, which this year celebrated its tenth anniversary.

INTERVIEW

Q: What are the implications of a Black Musicians Conference?

A: Primarily that Black music and culture is finally receiving the recognition it has fought for. It is being taken out of chains and given lecture and concert hall status. I believe that it was inevitable and I look forward to many more such programs in that they are for the good of every one. The truth may come out yet.

Q: In light of the new administration's stand on higher education what future do you see for Black Studies programs nationally?

A: It is far from a matter of simply Black programs. The President is wiping out and brutalizing his own constituency. There are as many Whites in the 10-15,000 income bracket and they are feeling the effects just as seriously as blacks.

Q: And what course of action should they take?

A: The only course: Unity and Solidarity in Adversity. This is the time. Students must stay active. They have let it slip by. In the 60's I needed a large lecture hall to accomodate the students enrolled in my course but now a small classroom will suffice. It says alot about the state of affairs in this country when students have forsaken the arts and humanities for business courses and trade-related studies. This is the inevitable showdown between the American Dream and the American Ideal. Who will win? I can't really say but that the former is this country and the latter could save it. We have a citizenry of socially unaware individuals with no sense of national identity. If you ask an American what his nationality is you are bound to get a list of parts of the whole but if you ask a Parisian he will tell you he is French , a Muscovite will tell you he is Russian but an American lacks this very identity. And the country suffers for it!

Q: In what way.

A: This country is still fighting a Civil War. What they agreed upon in 1865 was an external, superficial truce. The hatred remains because the Western slaveowner mentality has survived because the government will fail without it. It is not built on solid ground.

Q: Then the cause of Freedom will unite the people?

A: They are not that virtuous. No. Poverty is the only thing that will unite Americans; vis. If their own good is somehow threatened. And it is now, White and Black alike. This is the time to take the offensive because you can no longer trust that the government will look out for your interests. They must first admit their error in allowing this administration come to power. As I said the students in the 60's were interested and maintained a vigil that won and preserved the liberties we now enjoy but they are blurred and quieted now behind the cry for the fast dollar. Ultimately we need good honest leaders and an active citizenry. We are going nowhere without that, fast. We must keep institutes of higher learning open for they are the key to the truth, the source of goodness that has kept this country on its feet this long And it is miraculous that we still are, this land where you shoot a President to date a starlet. The time is right though. We must unite under one cause-soon.

★Max Roach

Roach then introduced his band, which featured Cecil Bridgewater on trumpet, Calvin Hill on bass, and Odeon Pope on tenor saxophone.

The ensemble opened with a Bridgewater composion entitled, "Chattahootchie Red," which displayed their flawless unison work and each man's virtuosity. Bridgewater's solo was melodic with thoughtful variations on his own theme, while Pope's tenor solor was powerful and tense with dissonance set against Roach's lightning cymbal work. Roach kept time with the high-hats and performed mesmerizing stickwork on drums and cymbals, a trademark of Roach's I first learned from his 56 At Basin Street album with the original Max Roach Quartet.

Calvin Hill and Odeon Pope played a duo to the legendary Clifford Brown, a member of Roach's original quartet, entitled, "I Remember Clifford."

Roach treated the audience to a solo encore, a tribute to Count Basie's drummer, Jonathan Samuel David Jones, a man whose drum styles, as Roach put it, "revolutionized percussion work."

With just a high hat, two sticks and one foot, Roach mesmerized the audience with 3 minutes of variation in high hat technique. He delivered a brief closing address thanking all who made possible the 10th Annual Black Musician's Conference and took his leave to thunderous applause.

smart race. He also pointed toward team composure once again as a key to the victory.

Both the varsity and junior varsity had a boat entered against Temple's respective four man shells. In each of these races UMass was victorious by good margins.

In what may have been the most exciting race of the day, the first freshman boat for UMass squeaked out a .7 of a second victory.

This marked the first win of the year for a boat that freshman coach Ron Reece held very high expectations for at the outset of the season.

"They've been improving pretty steadily. I've made a couple of changes and things seem to be coming along," Reece said.

UMass will have its only home race of the season this Saturday against Williams College. The races will begin at 11 a.m. and will run until 2 p.m. The race site is the Connecticut River and the finish line is located on the southern side of Route 9.

Seko wins Marathon

BOSTON—Toshihiko Seko, a durable speedster from Japan, avenged one of his rare losses and ended old rival Bill Rodgers' domination of the Boston Marathon Monday, pulling away in the final five minutes en route to a record smashing effort in the 85th annual classic.

Seko, who pressed Rodgers to a course and U.S. record two years ago, shaved one slim second off the American distance king's mark while covering 26 miles, 385 yards in 2 hours, 9 minutes, 26 seconds.

Seko sprinted across the finish line more than 250 yards ahead of Craig Virgin, who held on for second place exactly one minute behind in 2:10:26. Rodgers was third in 2:10:34, failing in a bid to become the first runner ever to win the Boston Marathon four consecutive years.

wind down the left field line, for his fourth RBI and a more than comfortable 9-0 lead.

Meanwhile, UMass starter Steve "Murray" Cramer was having little trouble with the Scarlet Knights. Cramer went five innings, allowing two runs just one earned on four hits for his third win against two losses. Cramer gave up just two hits over the first four innings, one of them a mistake to Rutgers outfielder Mark Zagunis, who made the score 9-2 with a homer to left. Sophomore lefthander Adam Grossman cleaned up for Cramer, giving up three runs, two of them unearned, in two innings of work.

But, after Barry Bennett and Lovellette were through, the cake was more of a run than a walk. Lovellette doubled in McReddie and Kraham, who had singled, in the fourth to make it 12-1. Lovellette singled to McReddie, who kept his day perfect with a walk, in the sixth for the final run.

And Dick Bergquist is hard at work, revising his next speech on pressure.

Mittmen take two from Rutgers

By KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

PISCATAWAY, N.J.—Five minutes before his University of Massachusetts baseball team got off their bus at Rutgers Saturday afternoon, head coach Dick Bergquist gave a short speech.

"I don't want to put any more pressure on you," Bergquist told his players, "but if we want to be considered for the NCAA tournament, we have to win the Eastern Eight, and we have to sweep today."

Pressure? Pressure is an eight-letter word, and little else to the UMass baseball team, which proceeded to sweep a doubleheader from Rutgers in their first league encounter this season.

In the opener, UMass got a complete game from its senior ace Chuck Thompson for a 3-1 win, while a 13-hit attack and nine runs batted in from Keith Lovellette and Barry Bennett gave the Minutemen a 13-5 victory in the nightcap.

The sweep gave UMass, now 13-10, its third consecutive victory, as the Minutemen have won four of their last five. UMass also took the games while beating the top two pitchers for the Scarlet Knights, now 10-13-1.

Thompson, now 5-1, literally scattered seven hits and struck out six en route to another one of his Bill Lee performances, his fifth consecutive victory. UMass got all the runs they'd need off Rutgers' ace Rob Applegate when second baseman Dean Bennett led off the game with a single, stole second, then scored on a Vin Bonanno double. Bonanno came in with what proved to be the game winner on a Jim Aulenback ground rule double to left.

Thompson, meanwhile, was enjoying a strong wind at his back, showing good heat when he needed it while allowing just two hits over the first four innings.

"I had the feeling today that I'd have a pretty good fastball," Thompson said. "The strike outs helped, too."

Indeed, Thompson, who won't strike out a hell of a lot of batters every game, used his K's at most opportune times and showed fine control with just one walk over seven innings.

UMass added an unearned run in the seventh, when Applegate, now 2-2, gave up one of his two walks to Barry Bennett. Bennett stole second, moved to third on a ball that shortstop Mark Germann fumbled with, then scored when second baseman Rich Federico threw the ball away trying to get Bennett who had rounded third.

After an error, a single and a sacrifice put the tying runs in scoring position in the Rutgers seventh, Thompson induced catcher Chris Moran to tap back to the box for the second out, and Barry Bennett came up with a nice short hop to end the game.

In the second game, UMass jumped all over Rutgers starter and loser Jim Lawlor in the epitome of a cake.

UMass got to Lawlor, now 2-1, for pairs of runs in the first and second, while Lovellette and Barry Bennett, who cracked his first home run of the season, broke it open in a five-run third.

A Mark Litano fielder's choice brought in Dean Bennett with the first run, while Litano scored on Warren McReddie's first of three hits in the game a double to right for a 2-0 lead. Barry Bennett doubled in Kelly McDonald, who had two hits, then scored on another Litano fielder's choice for the 4-0 lead that gave Mr. Lawlor his walking papers.

An error and singles by McReddie and John Kraham loaded the bases for Lovellette (3-for-4, 5 RBI's) who delivered a single to left scoring two. Exit reliever Tony Odachowski, enter George Starr. After a walk, Barry Bennett greeted Mr. Starr with a towering home run into the Gazelles fall to third ranked Harvard, 6-5

By VINCE DeWITT
Collegian Staff

Intimidation was the name of the game on NOPE Field Saturday as Harvard, third-ranked nationally, beat the sixth-ranked University of Massachusetts laxwomen by one goal, 6-5. The teams' defenses both did outstanding jobs, unfortunately UMass let one more shot than Harvard slip by.

"This game was important because we were fighting for the top spot in New England" said UMass coach Pam Hixon. Harvard remains undefeated while Umass has two losses.

Whit Thayer opened the scoring attack for Umass by flinging a shot past the Harvard goalie only a minute and ten seconds into the first half. Thayer led in the overall scoring with two goals and one assist, followed by Margie Anderson, Sue Caples, and Lynn Vincello with one goal apiece.

At the half, with the score tied 4-4 and UMass looking as though an upset of the Crimson might not be farfetched, something happened. "We came back out in the second half and we were fidgety", Thayer said.

Harvard did not let up, keeping the laxwomen at bay by sticking close to the attackers and stopping any kind of passing attack from developing.

On the other side of the coin, however, freshman Carol Progowski did a superb job of shutting off Harvard's high scorer and possibly helped to keep the score as close as it was.

"This was a disappointing loss", co-captain Lynn said. "We had a good team effort, but Harvard is tough competition. We look forward to meeting them again at the regionals May 2-3. We'll beat them then".

Many UMass players echoed these sentiments and it looks as though the next contest will be another hard-fought battle which could just as easily have UMass on top. top.

Patty Shea of UMass' JV squad scurries for the ball in the Minutewomen's weekend bout with Harvard.

In women's JV lacrosse, the laxwomen faired worse than the varsity, losing 6-1. Harvard once again had a very organized team effort and some sharp passing, especially near the junior laxwomen's goal.

UMass was never really in the game, as the Crimson led 4-1 at halftime. Massachusetts had several chances to score in the second half, but Harvard's goalie made save after save and effectively stymied these offensive thrusts.

Gorillas make it seven straight

WILLIAMSTOWN—The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team came to Williams College with the knowledge that Williams would be the "last laugher" on its tough schedule. What the Minutemen found out was that the Ephmen had no intention of being funny.

By halftime nobody was laughing as the Gorillas were clinging onto an 8-7 lead.

The impossible dream upset for Williams turned into a nightmarish second half as the Gorillas opened with eight unanswered goals in the third period. With six more tallies in the final period, the Gorillas coasted to a 22-9 victory here Saturday.

After the game UMass head coach Dick Garber breathed a sign of relief. "Another half like the first one and a fantastic season becomes a disastrous one."

A highlight for the Gorillas came at the 12:10 mark of the fourth period when senior team manager Bob Levey scored his first UMass goal.

"I was really glad to contribute on the field for a change," said Levey who also thanked the team for the chance to play.

Senior attackman Chris Corin led the team in scoring for the second game in a row tallying five goals and four assists against the Ephmen. He was followed by Jim Weller who had four goals and four assists and Skip Vosburgh who tossed in three and assisted on two.

The Gorillas, now 7-0 travel to Long Island tomorrow to face 15th ranked Hofstra University.

Mittwomen sweep

A combination of strong pitching and timely hitting helped the University of Massachusetts' softball squad take both ends of a doubleheader from the University of Vermont Friday afternoon, 6-5 in extra innings and 3-2.

Coach Elaine Marasco was pleased with her team's performance. "They have showed me a lot this season. They are mentally tough and are getting physically tougher every day," she said. "Everybody's hitting has improved, and this is a real plus."

In the first game, the mittwomen wasted no time in getting on the board. Catcher Jackie Gaw belted a home run to right center in the first inning to put UMass ahead 2-0. Massachusetts added another run when centerfielder Brenda Simmons scored from third on a throwing error by UVM.

The Catamounts made the score 2-1 in the second inning when pitcher Claudette Thibault smacked a two-run homer. UMass added two more runs in the second when Simmons drove in pitcher Kathy O'Connell and Allyson Rioux with a sharp double to center.

The Catamounts added two runs in the fifth inning when designated hitter Linda Ballard blasted a two-run round tripper. An excellent running catch by right fielder Mary Ann Lombardi got UMass out of the inning.

After O'Connell gave up a triple to the first batter she faced in the sixth inning, she was relieved by Rioux. Vermont managed only two hits off Rioux in the sixth, but they were enough to even the score at 5-5, sending the game into extra innings. In the ninth O'Connell, now playing leftfield, sealed the victory for UMass when she rapped a 3-2 pitch for an infield single.

The second game was a pitcher's duel. After four innings, the score was tied, 1-1. In the bottom of the fifth, Gaw blasted her second homer of the afternoon to put UMass ahead, 2-1. The Minutewomen finally put the game away in the bottom of the sixth. Designated hitter, Maddy Mangini reached first after being hit by a pitch. After an infield hit by Lombardi, Rioux banged a single to score pinch runner, Pam Purdy.

Pitcher Karen Poirier walked two batters and gave up eight hits in raising her record to 4-1. The mittwomen will travel to University of Connecticut this Thursday for a 3:00 p.m. contest.

Wright sets record

By KENNETH ROLT
Collegian Staff

Flat and lackluster are adjectives best describing the performance of the University of Massachusetts men's track team at the Boston College Relays last weekend.

The lone winner for the Minutemen was sophomore John Wright in the 110 meter high hurdles. The Dorchester native cruised through the trials and semi-finals heats in meet records of 14.6 and 14.4 seconds, before yet another meet record in the final race, 14.3 seconds. Currently, Wright is the fastest high hurdler in New England, while only in his third season of outdoor competition.

The decathaletes made one of their few competitions a successful one, with Greg Mader and Dale Whiting placing third and fifth respectively. The multi-eventers totaled 5963 and 5837 points in the two day competition held on Monday and Tuesday of last week. Mader also placed sixth in the 400 meter hurdles which was held Saturday.

Distance man Frank Prial became the third UMass IC4A qualifier this spring, with an eighth place 30:27.8 10,000 meter effort. Running in nearly perfect conditions on Thursday night, Prial ran consistent sub-5:00 minute miles for the 6.2 mile distance, and qualified by ten seconds.

Rowers win big

The University of Massachusetts men's crew team travelled to the Schuylkil River in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania on Saturday and came away with what coach Dave Kumlin termed a necessary victory over Temple University.

The UMass varsity, junior varsity and freshmen boats won all five races against what was considered a very fast Temple crew.

The varsity eight was behind during the first 750 meters of their 2000 meter race but pulled to a half of a boat length lead by the 1000 meter mark. They held this margin for the rest of the race and won by about six seconds.

"The varsity rowed a very smart race. They held their composure when the Temple boat was hanging right with them during the first part of the course," Kumlin said.

The junior varsity race was also in doubt during the early part of the race but the UMass boat pulled ahead during the last 500 meters and won by a narrow margin.

In discussing the junior varsity race, Kumlin cited the junior varsity coxswain Beth Jacoby for calling a very

CETA Cutbacks Threaten 300,000 Jobs

By Dennis Schaal

Paul Balistrieri, a program analyst for the Paterson, N.J., Employment Training Administration, looks toward the ceiling, searching for an answer.

He accepts that his own job may be slashed out of existence in September when the Reagan administration intends to eliminate some 300,000 public service jobs funded by the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA). But Balistrieri worries about what will happen to the hundreds of chronically unemployed workers in Paterson--the welfare mothers, the young people, the national minorities--who study welding, weaving, secretarial skills and bookkeeping, English as a second language and high school equivalency tests in CETA-funded classroom training.

What will happen to them?

"I don't know," says Balistrieri, his head shaking. "There's going to be some problems. I think it will get pretty hot."

In a recessionary period--when 8 million people are officially on the unemployment rolls, 1 million "discouraged workers" have given up on the job search and another 4 million have been forced into part-time schedules--The Reagan administration's proposed budget would eliminate some $11 billion worth of jobs programs which are in dire need of massive expansion.

The proposed cuts would roll back gains of the 1960s and betray the limited New Deal of the 1930s. Reagan proposes to:

°Cut $1 billion in CETA funds for public service workers in community and social service agencies in the current fiscal year. This would eliminate 300,000 jobs by Sept. 30; immediate dismissals have already been sent to thousands of CETA workers. The effect of the cut ripples far beyond the dismissed CETA worker: the community agencies which depend on CETA staff funding are forced in turn to reduce services and even close up shop. A CETA hiring freeze is already in effect.

°Tighten unemployment compensation rules which would at least partially deny benefits to 1 million people. The proposal would make it more difficult to collect an additional 13 weeks of benefits after the standard 26 weeks are run. In addition, the rules would force workers to accept jobs that pay substantially less than in their previous employment Benefits would be denied to military personnel who decline to reenlist.

°Downgrade two job creation and employment training programs for high school dropouts and young people from "economically disadvantaged" backgrounds by merging the Youth Employment Training Program and Youth Community Conservation Improvement Program into existing Labor department programs for adults. It would amount to a $575 million cut.

°Revoke entirely funds for "countercyclical" public service employment programs. The program targets communities where the impact of the economic downturn is most severe.

°Reduce the Trade Readjustment Act program by 76 percent program, especially used by auto workers, compensates those laid-off workers whose job losses can be tied to competition from imports.

CETA Cuts Called Criminal

"These cuts are criminal," offers Jan Kelley of Women in the Trades, a CETA-staffed program in New York City which counsels women about and helps train them in skills in nontraditional jobs. "We will be clobbered in our ability to make women economically viable. The government says that the private sector will take up the slack, but if there is no one to funnel information to women about these opportunities, there is no way for them to get jobs."

The CETA program, first passed by Congress in 1971, emerged out of the struggles of Vietnma vets, welfare recipients, national minorities and the hardcore unemployed in the 1960s. It opened up almost 1 million jobs funded by the Labor Department for the chronic jobless.

The program is far from perfect. Politicians have stocked many CETA slots with party cronies, several cities have transferred low-paid CETA workers into jobs formerly held by unionized workers and many CETA jobs are actually dead-end positions which provided little skills training.

Still, the CETA program does indeed provide valuable job training and employment to hundreds of thousands of people. When municipalities began laying off CETA employees in 1976, under the impact of fiscal crises, CETA workers in several cities fought for the program by conducting militant sit-ins at Labor Department and other governmental offices.

The Reagan government would cripple the program with the stroke of a pen. It argues that the financial weight these programs place on the taxpayer would be eased as the private sector fills the gap.

But with a February official unemployment rate of 7.3 percent, it is clear that pushing people out of CETA jobs and training slots will just shuttle them into the welfare, food stamp and unemploymenbt offices.

"They'll go on welfare or get low-paying jobs where they can't afford to eat," explains Keeley, referring to women trainees displaced by CETA cuts. "Women were beginning to make inroads, but that is going to be turned back."

The individual hardships could potentially have political ramifications, and city officials are edgy. "Last summer we had 8000 individuals in public service employment and we nearly had a riot in the city anyway," Willie Johnson of the Philadelphia office of employment and training told the New York Times recently. "Now they have taken away one of the tools we use to provide not only employment and training, but hope for our young people. It adds to the burden the city faces in trying to keep calm during the summer.

Kelley and others feel that some people affected by the cuts may be drawn into organizations mounting a counteroffensive. "for some people, they will collapse and do without," she notes. "For other people who feel that organizations can provide a solution, they will go out and do that."

Fifth Annual Black Studies Conference Explores Revolutionary Themes In Black Studies

The 5th Annual Black Studies conference took place during the first week of April at the City College of New York. Many distiguished scholars of Black Studies gave enlightening speaches comvering a diversity of themes. As part of the activity, a series of workshops were offered. Prof. Walter Rhett from the university of South Carolina exposted a very interesting perspective of the topic "Revolutionary themes in Black Studies".

He began by redefining certain definitions which many times are taken too lightly. The speaker defined revolution as a movement or motion, and the word science as a system that both explains and interprets changelie Movement). Thus Black Science is the system which interprets and explains the Black Revolution Movement.

Proff. Rhett stressed that in order to decide what kind of motion is to be entailed in a Revolution one must understand the basic therories and concepts of Black Studies. In order to get to the real roots of Black Studies one must sort through three basic schools of thought. Those are the following, as stated by Proff. Rhett: The study of:

1) Intellectual theories of scholars such as W.E.B. Dubois- In his opinion this is necessary but in itself is limited.
2) The Black experience upon arriving under the yoke of the White man.
3) Black as a way of living.

The speaker based his theory on this last argument. Parting from this specific point he explained that the Black way of life entails the Black experience before the White man intervened in the established order, through the Black experience as a subjugated group, to the development of revolutionary thought and what is yet to come.

By the establish order, Proff. Rhett meant order in the basic structures such as, family, community and politics. This order is part of a continuous cycle which has been transformed by the influence and oppresion of the White man.

He then proceeded to describe the revolutionary movement that arose in the 60's which suggested the return to the Mother Country to restore the established order. Proff. Rhett believes that a disruption in the cycle is not neccesary to restore order. We are now here and as part of this cycle and particular circunstances only can create problems of this sort be solved. Revolution must come on this continuum, and it must come through the basic structure before mentioned. For this to happen he stressed the importance of understanding and redefining our culture, for he views the true revolutionaries as those who combine theory and practice to recreate a more meaningful Black experience. Using this as a basis the Group for Integrated Studies was formed in Mr. Rhetts community in South Carolina. This group took as its roots the Pan-African Classical Tradition. The group dedicates their effors to studing history of the established order only by combining research with the Pan-African Cultural Traditions. The activities consist of creating the participation of and involvement of the Black community of a learning experience based on traditional culture. This involves research presented during celebration in which food, dance and cuture are successfully combined with history. He explained the importance of such groups to creat awareness and to successfully begin to restore the natural established order.

Of course this is but one facet of the Revolution which entails much more.

Where Right To Vote Was Like Reaching The Moon

A voter registration movement spurred by the Voting Rights Act of 1965 brought sweeping change to Lowndes County, as it did to many political entities in the south, today, black people control nearly half the county's political posts.

With the the approaching expiration of key parts of the Voting Rights Act, and with evidence that some powerful members of Congress are determinedly opposed to renewal, black people like those here in Lowndes County are fearful of losing those achievements and of the repression that they say might follow.

"The original idea was good and it has served its purpose: that is, to allow blacks to vote," declared Ted Bozeman, 44, the state district judge here, who is white.

Judge bozeman also said he did not think political discrimination would reemerge if much of the teeth on the law were pulled.

But Sheriff Hulett strongly disagrees.

If the Voting Rights Act is allowed to expire, and he thinks it eventually will be, "there will be other things to replace it, such as bills to purge voters from the rolls," he said.

"We'll end up with many of our positions going back to white people," Sheriff Hulett continued. "There are alot of richerd who still don't want to see blacks doing this."

"There have been a lot changes, little things like better roads and treatment at the jail and now black people can post bond for other black people who have been arrested, but we are still a long way from being free." the Sheriff said.

Racist Violence i.e. Political Terror

by C. Zulu Nummo Staff

In part two of this series, we stated that the reason for the increased arming of the American police and their being turned loosed on the black communities was in large part due to internal and external economic and political problems that are causing the economy and the government to shake.

Generally stated the internal and external economic and political problems of the United States are;

a. Black unemployment and the political and social unrest centered around jobs and economic insecurity.

b. General unemployment.

c. The deterioration of the United States economic position as number one by competition from West Germany and Japan has shaken the the U.S. industry's confidence.

d. Former colonies are defeating their foreing oppressors and winning independance. These newly independant nations show little interest in capitalism. They are only maintaing contacts with their former exploiters out of necessity and turning to socialism at the first opportunity.

e. U.S. industries' increasing resort to advanced technology as a means to increase productivity, coupled with the wholesale transfer of entire factories to foriegn countries where wages are lower and unionization movements as well as democratic and socialist movements are constricted by military means.

Even though the U.S. and other multinational corporations are presenting profit increases, these increases are coming from smaller areas and at price more clear to the people in the corporations home country.

With these problems and their growing magnitude and intensity, the question faced by the Bank-Corporate-Government power structure is "how can the most profits be made with the least social and political turmoil or how can the degree of social and political turmoil be controlled to such a degree where the status quo is not threatened and business can continue as normal. To this question the Banking-Corporate-Government power structure has answered in resounding unity, "When something works, use it!"

In the science of physics there was realized a physical law which is now popularly known as "for every action there is a reaction". Taking the general aspects of this law and applying it to the history of people, we can get a better understanding of the right-wing upsurge of the present in contrast to the great progressive struggles of Blacks in the 50's, 60's and 70's for economic and political reforms.

It was inevitable that a reaction would occur. Exactly when, how and under what circumstance was not clear then but it is clear now for all to see because we are living directly in the middle of the reaction! We are living in reactionary period of American history not too unlike the reconstruction period. A period of right wing upsurge. Indeed a portion of the so-called silent majority that Ex-President Nixon appealed to is speaking very loudly now. They speak not only with votes but also with guns, knives, bullets, bombs, ropes, KKK, Nazi and police uniforms.

Many black and liberal organizations that have studied racism and statistics on racist violence have concluded time and time again that whenever the economy starts to get shaky there is corresponding rise in racism, which is especially manifested in racist violence. The problem is that they are correct. The White middle and working class become insecure when credit is beyond their reach and they cannot get houses, cars, send their kids to college and throw unlimited beer bashes. They are very nervous now especially since they have been the section to bear the brunt of the tax burden for every major government social reform since the 1940's.

The more acute problem is that theyt are blaming their deteriorating situation on the wrong groups! They are blaming their worsening situation on Blacks and other minorities and oppressed groups because our struggle forced the system to conceed reform.

The media only gives extensive coverage to right-wing views that spreads only their opinion that blames the problems on the victims instead if the real source, i.e. the Bank-Corporate-Government power structure.

The white working and middle classes should not be brutalizing and waging warfare on the minorities. they should be struggling against the real source of their problem, the Bank-Corporate-Government power structure. Neverthless they have begun a war of terrorism on minority people. Why will be examined in the next edition of Nummo.

THE STRUGGLE AGAINST OUR OWN WEAKNESSES

The struggle of blacks for human dignity gained its momentum in the South. This kind of struggle could only have been unleashed in the South - not just because the South was more racist and more impoverished but because in the South the tradition of viewing blacks as inferior had been rationalized and given legitimacy by a philosophy.

All over the United States the philosophy that one set of human beings is inferior to another on the basis of race was practiced. But in the South this philosophy was also preached. Therefore the movement to struggle against racism in the South had to develop s philosophy as the basis for its struggle: the philosophy of the essential dignity of every man being, regardless of race, sex or national origin. That is why the black movement began to draw everybody into it - either pro or con. It put forward a philosophy with which everybody, regardless of race, color or sex, had to grapple.

When everyone is drawn into a conflict as deeply rooted as racism is rooted in this society, there is no telling how far the struggle will have to go. You begin to open up contradictions which most people in the society have been evading or tolerating: some because they benefit from them (as many do); others because they believe these contradictions are beyond their power to challenge or negate (as blacks used to think); and still others because they believe that to confront these contradictions will create too much antagonism and turmoil.

Once the struggle began to extend out of the South, it became clear that every institution in this country was built by keeping blacks at the bottom. Treating blacks as scavengers has been an integral part of the development of this country. U.S. capitalism has been able to develop more rapidly than other capitalisms because it had the wherewithal to exploit on a double basis. Not only was it able to exploit wage labor in production and the consumer in the market as every capitalist society does; but when factories and machinery became obsolete for the exploitation of whites, they could be used for the exploitation of blacks. Used plants, used houses, used churches, used neighborhoods, used clothes, used anything and everything, after being discarded by whites, could always be recycled to exploit blacks both in production and consumption. Thus whites in this country have been able to get to the top faster because blacks were kept at the bottom.

In providing this opportunity for rapid upward mobility to whites, the American capitalist system has developed very differently from other capitalist economies. First of all, this country from the very beginning had to import labor - either by force or by promises. Secondly, every ethnic group which came voluntarily came in order to get to the top as quickly as possible. These groups therefore closed their eyes to the obvious fact that they were able to rise so rapidly only because the indigenous labor force of blacks was being excluded from the same opportunities.

In this way the system of American racism, of the institutionalized exclusion of blacks from equal opportunity, has been inseparably interconnected with American capitalism, a capitalism which enables special ethnic and interest groups to rise rapidly to the top at the expense of others. Whites could not see this because they were the beneficiaries of the system.

The erupton of the black movement exposed this historical connection between racism and capitalism in th United States and also made it clear that it is not possible to get rid of racism in this country without getting rid of capitalism, any more than it was possible to carry on a struggle to reform the South without struggling to change this entire nation. Nor is it possible, without getting rid of capitalism, to get rid of the method of thinking which has become ingrained in the American people as a result of the specific historical development of this country, namely, that special groups should advance at the expense of others.

There is a very important dialectical principle here which we must all understand. A struggle may start out with the aim of resolving one contradiction. But if the contradiction which it sets out to negate is fundamental enough, the main contradiction may change in the course of the struggle. Struggle is social practice, and when you engage in social practice, you gain new insights. You find out that there is much more involved than you had originall perceived to be the case. You are therefore faced with the need to raise your level of understanding or conception. If you do not raise your level of understanding as the struggle develops and expands, then what began as a progressive struggle can turn into its opposite.

When relations among a people who have begun to struggle against an oppressor degenerate as rapidly as relations in the black community have degenerated in the past few years, we have to look beyond the external cause or external conditions and look for the internal cause. We have to look for the reasons for the degeneration in the new contradictions which have emerged within the struggle, within the movement.

Many of us can remember the years when black pride and black unity were growing by leaps and bounds. We also know that at a certain point the rhetoric and the symbolism of black pride and black unity began to become a cosmetic to cover up the reality of growing black disillusionmen and black disunity.

The turning point came in 1967-68. In the summer of 1967 blacks in cities all over the country rose in rebellion, with the greatest explosions taking place in Newark and Detroit. Then in 1968, following the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., another wave of rebellions erupted. The main social force in these rebellions was the urban youth, which we have elsewhere called the "black street force." In the wake of these rebellions black people all over the country, of all ages, all social classes and all shades of opinion, began to write and talk about their "Black Revolution" and "Black Power."

In the general excitement and enthusiasm of those days, few people stopped to wonder about the new contradictions which had been created in the black movement and the new responsibilities which had been placed on black leadership by the emergence of this new black street force.

The most articulate blacks were too busy working on schemes to take advantaghe of the panic in the white power structure to get something for themselves. In practice, "Black Power" came to mean how much pressure you could put in the white power structure to get an appointment to a high position. The essence of "Black Power" (as it was summed up in the Black Manifesto at the Black Economic Development Conference in Detroit in 1969) became the extraction or "reparations" from whites.

Very few of those who were getting themselves "together" to "take care of business" (the popular expression was TCB or "do your own thing") stopped to think of how this approach to "Black Power" in terms of economics and reparations was corrupting the movement. They didn't stop to think that , in the name of blackness, they were actually becoming integrated into the economic values of the American capitalist system and accepting the "Everybody's doing it; therefore it's allright" capitalist philosophy so deeply ingrained in the American way of life.

In those days most of us had the simplistic view that you were independent as long as you didn't take direct orders from those who funded your project. We did not understand then what we should understand now: that a system incorporates its opponents much more subtly by making them dependent upon it economically for handouts and by making it easy for them to adopt its values.

Nor did black leaders, scrambling for "reparations" in those days, stop to think of the example they were setting for the new street force by their TCB philosophy. They did not realize that these young people at the bottom of the black community (as they still are), with little education and without channels to the white power structure, could only get their "reparations" from the white shopkeepers still in the black neighborhoods, and then, when these fled, from other blacks.

By 1969-70 it was not too difficult to see what was happening. But instead of grappling with this new reality and its roots in their own failure to project a new direction forthis street force, black leaders began to use the flagrantly anti-social behavior of young street blacks as additional pressure on the white power

Preamble From The Manifesto For A Black Revolutionary Party

In the last 25 years, before the eyes of the entire world, the Black movement in the United States has moved steadily, and apparently irresistibly, from a struggle for Rights to a struggle for Power, from hope in Reform to a realization of the need for Revolution. Year after year, as the movement has expanded its geographical arena, from South to North and from coast to coast, it has also broadened its appeal from top to bottom of the Black community until, today, literally millions of Black men, women and youth consider themselves comrades-in-arms in the Black Revolution.

In every city dozens of organizations have sprung up to offer leadership and direction to these brothers and sisters. Some of these organizaitons have come into being out of spontaneous eruption. Others are simply hangovers from the Reform stage of the movement. Some are based upon ideas once held by only a few so-called fanatics but now gaining wider support as a result of the growing ferment and search by Black people for extreme solutions. A goodly number exist for no better reason than that the white power structure needs them as channels of communication into the Black movement.

Whatever their origins and however varied and often conflicting their programs, all these organizations claim to be part of the "Black Revolution." The result is that the concept of Revolution itself is being deprived of any scientific meaning and the Black movement in the United States is losing all sense of direction precisely at the moment when the counter-revolution of the United States is gaining in strength and purposefulness, not only at home but abroad.

Especially since the murder of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., in April 1968, and with it the final shattering of the illusion that moral appeals could resolve the fate of Black people inside America, the Black movement has been floundering, uncertain and divided on its goals and methods. Meanwhile, the mass base of the militant counter-revolution, feeding itself on the fears and deep-seated racism of white Americans, is growing by leaps and bounds. In the wings fascist leaders wait, confident that , as the cries for laws and order become more strident, their turn will come as surely as did Hitler's in Germany.

Comunicado A Los Pueblos Del Mundo Rights

La ofensiva militarista que se desarrolla actualmente en Colombia y la suspension de relaciones diplomaticas con Cuba, declarada por el gobierno de Julio Cesar Turbay Ayala son hechos de innegable trascendencia en America Latina, en cuanto constituyen avances de la politica imperialista, antidemocratico y antipopular que impulsa el gobierno de Ronald Reagan para los paises de nuestro continente, y una seria amenaza a la lucha que libran nuestros pueblos por la vigencia de sus derechos basicos y la autodeterminacion.

Ante esta situacion las organizaciones abajo firmantes:

1) Repudiamos la campana inperialista tendiente a revitalizar el bloqueo politico y economico a Cuba y hace aparecer la problematica interna de los paises latinoamericanos como un conflicto entre bloque hegemoicos. Repudiamos igualmente la adhesion del gobierno colombiano a dicho proyecto lo cual muestra su incondicionalidad respecto al gobierno de Washington, manifestada tambien en los foros internacionales y a traves de su politica economica interna, que favorece el saqueo de los recursos naturales y permite el control monopolico de su economia.

2) Denunciamos la cresiente militarizacion del regimen colombiano, la cual se manifiesta en hechos como las detenciones masivas, el bombardeo a zonas campesinas, el enjuiciamiento de dirigentes populares en consejos verbales de guerra y la restriccion de los derechos mas basicos de los colombianos.

3) Exigimos el respeto de la vida e integridad fisica de los militantes de Movimiento 19 de Abril, M-19, retenidos recientemente por las autoridades colombianas, y exigimos sean otorgadas plenas garantias en el juzgamiento militar que pretende efectuar el ejercito.

4) Hacemos un llamado a la solidaridad internacional con las luchas del pueblo colcolombiano, cuyo avance esta llamado a jugar un papel transcendental en la pugna que libran las fuerzas democraticas y revolucionarias del continente contra la presion por la liberacion nacional.

5) Nos solidarizamos con la lucha por la autodereminacion de los pueblos latinoamericanos que en este momento tiene su mas elevada expresion, en el proceso revolucionario salvadoreno, la consolidacion de la Revolucion en Nicaragua y Granada, y la lucha del pueblo cubano para defender su soberania.

The military offensive presently developing in Colombia, the suspension of diplomatic relations with Cuba, declared by the government of Julio Cesar Turbay Ayala are undisputable actions transcending Latin America, which contitutes the advance of the antidemocratic and antipopular imperialist politics that the government of Ronald Reagan tries to propagate towards the nations of our continent, and a serious threat to the struggle that liberates our people for the implementation of laws safeguarding their basic rights and self determination.

Confronting this situation the following organizations declare:

1) We repudiate the Imperialist campaign to revitalize the characterization of the internal problems of the nations of Latin America as a conflict between two hegemonist blocks. We repudiate equally the adherence of the Colombian government to such a project which inturn exposes its unconditional nature towards Washington, which is also manifested at the international conferences and through its internal economic politics, that favors the plundering of the natural resources and permits a monopoly control of its economy.

2) We denounce the increasing militarization of the Colombian regime, which is reflected in actions like massive detentions, the borning of regions inhabited by peasants, the trying of popular leaders in military courts, and the restriction of the most basic human rights of the Colombian people.

3) We demand that the lives and physical integrity of the militants of the April 19 Movement,M-19, recently retained by the Colombian authorities be respected. we demand sufficient guarantee in the military jury which is pretended to be brought forth by the army.

4) We call for international solidarity with the struggle of the Colombian people whose advancement calls upon it to play a transcending role in the struggle to liberate the democratic and revolutionary forces of the continent against the threats and for national liberation.

5) We are in solidarity with the struggle for self determination of the people of Latin America which at this moment is at its highest expression, in the Salvadorean revolutionary process, the consolidation of the revolution in Nicaragua and Granada, and the struggle of the Cuban people defending their soverignty.

Civil Rights Violations In Brockton

On June 11, 1979, Patrick Paul, David Paul, Allison Sapier and Richard Francis was living at 232 Court Street in the city of Brockton.

On that day, at 11:00 a.m., there was a funeral being held for a Washington, D.C., police officer.

At that time David Paul, Patrick Paul, and their two roommates were in their apartment folding clothes and observing the funeral procession which consisted of hundreds of police officers.

Shortly thereafter Plaintiff David Paul stated, in reference to the defendant police officers, "Hey, they're looking up here."

At that time Defendant Lieutenant Sullivan was pointing at the window and screaming obscenities, and a number of other Defendant police officers turned their heads in the direction in which he was pointing.

A moment later, a number of Defendant police officers brokerank in the honor guard and proceeded to enter the apartment building at 232 Court Street.

Upon reaching the door, one of the defendant police officers knocked loudly on the door.

Plaintiff David Paul opened the door a crack and asked the police what they wanted.

At this point a number of Defendant police officers forced their way into the residence of the plaintiffs.

Plaintiffs Patrick Paul respectfully inquired as to whether or not the defendant police officers had a warrant.

In response, one of the defendant police officers declared, "Warrant... we don't need no damn warrant."

6 African Leaders Criticize Reagan Policies

The presidents of six black African nations strongly criticized the Reagan AdmThe department said the administrations effort to repeal legislation barring United States aid to anti-Communist rebels in Angola did not reflect a decision to aid the guerilla movement led by Jonas Savimbi.

The six african presidents, meeting in Angola, issued their statement on the eve of the arrival in Luanda, Angola's capital, of Chester a. Crocker, the Assistant Secretatry of State-designate for African Affairs, who is touring 11 african nations.

The declaration by the Presidents of Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe "denounced actions by the Reagan Administration to destabilize" the Soviet-backed Angolan government, such as the attempt to revoke legislation adopted by Congress in 1976 prohibiting United States aid to any internal faction in Angola.

The declaration said any United States aid to Mr. Savimbi's opposition movement would be "a flagrant interference" in Angola's internal affairs and a "clear affront and challenge to free Africa." The Savimbi movement, the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola, controls some areas of eastern Angola with South African support.

The declaratin of the six african nations also condemned "the U.S. intention to consolidate its relation with South Africa" at a time when South Africa has struck at guerrilla camps in Angola and Mozambique and is opposing the United Nations Security Council's plan for internationally supervised elections in South-West Africa, also known as Namibia, which is under South African control. The leaders stressed the "urgent need to implement this plan without delay, evasion, qualifications or modifications."

The African Presidents said they looked to the five western nations "to insure the implementation of the United Nations plan, of which they are the authors."

Botha Faults Reagan Aide Over Aborted U.S. Visit

Prime Minister P.W. Botha said in an interview that he had "certain reservations" about the Reagan Administrations top Africa specialist, blaming him for objections raised in Washington last month to visit by South African military officers.

The interview carried in the newspapers of the Argus chain, came as the American Chester A. Crocker, the Assistant Secretary of State for Africa- designate ended a day and half of consultations with Foreign Minister Roelor F. Botha and Defense Minister Magnus Malan

"Either we go to america with self-respect," Mr. Botha said, "and we are received there with respect and we receive them here with respect or there are not going to good relations."

He also objected to remarks by Mr. Crocker this week in which the American said that because the South-West Africa Peoples Organization receives Soviet arms does not necessarily mean that it is Soviet-controlled.

"I don t like the way he referred to Swapo, 'Prime Minister Botha said." I think its an attempt to create an atmosphere in which he can talk to Swapo's friends. Well it doesn't suit us. We know that Swapo is Communist-controlled and that they have one idea and one idea only, to subordinate South-West Africa by brutal force."
